Coolidge Turns on Pressure

White House Alarm at Jam in Senate Evidenced at Breakfast Party

Bloc Asking Interpretation Circulates Petition to Back Up Demands

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12. (AP)—President Coolidge threw his influence today against the Senate legislative jam in which the Kellogg antiwar treaty and the cruiser construction bill are caught and this added pressure resulted tonight in at least a renewal of conferences looking to a way to obtain action.

On Monday Chairman Borah, of the Foreign Relations Committee, in charge of the treaty, will renew his request for an agreement to limit debate on the pact and he believes it will be accepted. Conferences looking to that end were revived late today.

White House alarm over the Senate situation was reflected in a Senatorial breakfast party and a conference later between Coolidge and Senator Curtis of Kansas, the Republican leader; Senator Borah, and Secretary Kellogg, the father of the treaty.

START PETITION

While this conference was going on, the Republican-Democratic group seeking an interpretation of the pact, started a petition in the Senate asking for some sort of a "clarifying" declaration to the treaty. More than twenty-six signatures had been obtained by tonight. The petition, however, is conciliatory in tone, stating that the signers believe in the treaty but would like a clarifying declaration.

It is intended to have the petition sent to Secretary Kellogg, who so far has stood adamant to any manner of interpretation of the treaty other than that contained in his correspondence with other nations. There have been reports to the Senate that the Secretary scouted the strength of those who want an interpretation.

The petition, which Senators Bingham, Republican, Connecticut; Moses of New Hampshire, and Reed, Democrat, Missouri, are passing around proposes that a report be made by the Foreign Relations Committee setting forth the views expressed by Chairman Borah on

STEWART TO DEFEND SCALP

Standard Oil Feud Grows Warmer as Indiana Head Accepts Ouster Challenge of John D., Jr.

CHICAGO, Jan. 12. (AP)—Col. Robert W. Stewart intends to lock horns with John D. Rockefeller, Jr., in a fight to the finish to retain his position as chairman of the board of the Standard Oil Company of Indiana which will be decided at a stockholders' meeting March 7.

Col. Stewart made this plain today in a formal statement announcing his candidacy for re-election as chairman of the board and questioning Mr. Rockefeller's right to speak for 58,000 shareholders in reply to a recent communication from Mr. Rockefeller to stockholders asking the removal of Col. Stewart.

Col. Stewart said he had made no personal solicitation for proxies as Mr. Rockefeller has done but declared that solicitations by others have shown he will have the support "of a large number of the stockholders' voting a large amount of the stock of this company."

NAME SUBMITTED

The statement of the chairman was made at the Standard Oil offices upon Mr. Stewart's arrival from New York today. In an informal conversation with reporters he said some of the requests for proxies sent out by Mr. Rockefeller are being returned with Mr. Rockefeller's name scratched and his own written in.

His formal statement said he had the "spontaneous and practically unanimous support" of all employees of the company and added that the support "is purely and entirely voluntarily," denying a statement that coercion had been used.

"I have been the subject of numerous attacks by politicians and others—attempts in many cases actuated by political and personal ambitions," he said. "I refused to answer certain questions propounded by certain Senators which were wholly beyond their power. In this position I have been vindicated by the courts of the land. These attacks I have hitherto endeavored to ignore, feeling that my ultimate vindication of these charges would be a complete answer. This vindication I received at the hands of the regularly constituted judicial establishment of my country in the shape of the verdicts of two juries.

CHALLENGE ACCEPTED

"Mr. Rockefeller, Jr., now has brought the fight to me through our stockholders and the challenge must be accepted.

"The suggestion that my recent acquittal of charges of perjury in Washington was the result of a technicality is a lie. I have in my possession a statement signed by every member of the jury directly stating that no technicalities were considered, and that upon the first ballot—and even before a ballot was taken—they were unanimously of the opinion that the charge of perjury was false, and intended their verdict as a complete vindication."

Regarding Mr. Rockefeller's request several months ago that he resign, Col. Stewart said that he agreed to resign when requested to do so by the stockholders, but questioned Mr. Rockefeller's right to speak for them. Mr. Rockefeller he said, is a larger stockholder in other companies of the former Standard Oil group than in the Standard of Indiana and is not dependent upon the Indiana company "for his future well-being, although he has received a constant stream of dividends amounting to millions of dollars in the past ten years, and has not purchased a dollar's worth of the products of this company."

The year ending, he said, would prove the most prosperous in the company's history, adding "this record is fair evidence that my associates and fellow employees, and our customers in the field we serve, have the confidence in this company's management which, I regret to say, Mr. Rockefeller, Jr., claims to have lost."

ONLY SOUTH TO BE FREE FROM FROST

Temperatures in North Hover Near 30 Deg.; Lowest Here Was 58

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 12. (AP)—While residents of San Francisco and the surrounding territory continued today to shiver in subnormal temperatures, the weather man refused to take the situation here seriously, when compared with reports from other points.

"The outlook," said E. H. Bowie, district forecaster, "is for fair weather without material change in temperature Sunday and Monday over the far western States, but with ground fogs, except in Southern California. There will be frosts in Northern California and the eastern part of Southern California."

The prediction means that many Pacific Coast cities will see thermometers drop close to the 30-deg. mark within the next twenty-four hours, repeating the performance of the last day.

The coldest spot along the Pacific Coast today was Point Reyes, Cal., which reported a minimum temperature of 24 deg. San Francisco reported 36, Sacramento 32, San Jose 30, Red Bluff 28, Portland 30 and Spokane 22.

Los Angeles reported a minimum temperature of 58 and San Diego reported 50 deg.

BERMAN BALKS DEFENSE ATTACK AT KEYES TRIAL

"I Was Broke and Tired of Being Hounded," He Says in Telling Why He Aids Prosecution

Using all their ingenuity in an attempt to discredit the damaging testimony of the witness, eight defense attorneys in Superior Judge Butler's court yesterday morning began the cross-examination of Jacob Berman, star State's witness at the trial of former Dist.-Atty. Keyes, and five others charged with bribery conspiracy. And for every question that was shot at him, "the bright young man" of the Julian cases had a ready come back and proved as good a witness for the State on cross-examination as he was on direct.

"How did you happen to testify for the State in this case?" was one of the first interrogations asked Berman by Defense Attorney Jud Rush, who with Attorneys Beirne and Schenck, represents Keyes.

TIRED OF HOUNDING

"Because I was sick and tired of being persecuted and hounded and shaken down and I wanted to tell the truth," snapped back the witness, his voice rising as he leaned forward in the witness chair further to emphasize the answer.

There were more questions of the same character and considerable argument by counsel for both sides on the legality of the defense cross-examination, until finally Berman asked that he might explain just how he came to make his first statement to authorities.

Given permission by Judge Butler, Berman then declared that while he was on trial in Federal Court last October, he had retained Lucien Wheeler, now chief of Dist.-Atty. Fitts's investigator, but at that time operating a private bureau of investigation after having resigned as head of the Federal Department of Justice here. Wheeler gave him advice on the conduct of his case in the Federal court, the witness declared, and when the indictments in the present case were returned advised him to tell his story to the grand jury and Fitts.

MONEY ALL GONE

"I was broke and didn't have any more money for lawyers and Wheeler said he could arrange for the interview with Fitts and the others," testified Berman.

That was the first mention of his finances made by the supposedly astute financier and stock market manipulator of the Julian stock overissue cases, in which citizens lost millions of dollars.

On November 7, 1928, Berman continued, he met Fitts, the now Chief Deputy District-Attorney Stewart and Grand Jurors Cooke and Porter at the Biltmore and made a complete statement to them that was taken down by a shorthand reporter.

The mention of this original statement immediately inaugurated a determined attempt on the part of the defense to get possession of it. It was their contention that the court either should order Berman or the prosecution to produce the document for their perusal.

The attempt of the defense vigorously was resisted by Fitts, Stewart and Special Prosecutor Clark, who maintained that the statement is a privileged document under a statute that renders inviolate a communication to a public official in a criminal proceeding.

ANOTHER RULING

Judge Butler finally ruled in favor of the prosecution, but allowed the defense until tomorrow morning to produce authorities to show that he is wrong. He made the same ruling on a nearly similar situation that arose when Defense Attorney Thompson asked Berman if he did not authorize a New York attorney to make an offer in his behalf to turn State's evidence in the Julian conspiracy cases, and the prosecution objected to any answer being read into the records on the ground that it was irrelevant to the present case.

By agreement with the court the defense abandoned this line of questioning until it can produce authorities Monday, and began attacking Berman from a different angle.

"Now, Mr. Berman," said Attorney Rush, "you testified about the payment of certain money to Ben Getzoff and certain money that was given to Ed Rosenberg to pay to Getzoff, and that you went down with Rosenberg and he asked Getzoff in your presence if he had re-

PARKS CHIEF SELECTED

Albright Given Mather's Post

Resignation of Pioneer Builder of Service Due to Ill Health

Secretary Lauds Retiring Official for Public Spirited Labors

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12. (Exclusive)—Horace M. Albright today was appointed director of the National Park Service to succeed Stephen T. Mather, whose resignation, due to ill health, has been accepted. This was announced by Secretary of the Interior West.

HORACE M. ALBRIGHT

Mr. Albright was made acting director of the service a week ago. Prior to that he had been superintendent of Yellowstone National Park and field assistant director of the National Park Service. He came to Washington in 1913 and went to work in the Department of the Interior. He became assistant attorney in the Department, dealing mainly with national park matters. When Mr. Mather became assistant to the Secretary, in charge of national parks in January, 1915, he was assigned to him as assistant and legal adviser. With Mr. Albright and one stenographer Mr. Mather inaugurated the national park policies which are today in effect.

On the creation of the National Park Service in 1917, Mr. Mather was appointed director and Mr. Albright assistant director. After serving as assistant director of the National Park Service two years, Mr. Albright in July, 1919, was made superintendent of Yellowstone National Park and field assistant to the director. While holding the position his winters were devoted to the handling of general park problems, and with special reference to legislative matters had conferences with the operation of the public utilities in the various parks. He served as superintendent of Yellowstone for nine and one-half years.

STEPHEN T. MATHER

Mr. Albright was born in the little mining town of Bishop, Inyo county, Cal., January 6, 1890.

In accepting the resignation Secretary West expressed his deep regret over Mr. Mather's resignation, and referred to the intensely patriotic, unselfish work that he had rendered the nation since he came to the Department of the Interior in January, 1915.

MATHER'S LETTER

In resigning Mr. Mather stated: "My Dear Secretary: I regret that

ANTI-HOOVER PLOT TOLD

Trio Arrested in Miami

Asserted Threats Against President-Elect Laid to Suspects

Secret Service Operatives Charge Attack Planned on Florida Visit

MIAMI, (Fla.) July 12 (Exclusive) Three men were arrested here tonight by secret service operatives in an investigation of asserted threats of violence against President-elect Herbert Hoover, who is expected to arrive in a few days for an extended visit. Rumors of a plot against the President-elect's life were heard following the arrest but officers had refused to give out any statement peding further investigation.

No formal charges had been placed against the men, and no names had been entered on the jail records but those held for investigation according to an attorney who said he was retained by them but had been unable to talk with them, are Ted Hill, a Miami dancing teacher; Jack Sommers, an active political worker in the last national campaign locally, who was not affiliated with any of the party organization and another man known only as Callahan.

HOOVER WILL CALL CONGRESS IN APRIL

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12. (AP)—President-elect Hoover after conferences with a number of Republican leaders in Congress is of the opinion that a special session of the new Congress should be called about April 15, next.

While there has been no official announcement of the position of Mr. Hoover in this regard his views have been disclosed by those with whom he has discussed the question and they have been so positive in representing the attitude of the President-elect that a tentative legislative program for the proposed session already has been discussed.

Under this program, as outlined today by those who have been conferring with Mr. Hoover, the legislative activities to be undertaken will be limited to farm relief and tariff revision both of which were promised by the next President during the campaign. The tariff revision would be in the shape of an amendment to the Fordney-McCumber Act of 1922, and would cover both agricultural and industrial schedules.

DEMOCRATS MAY FIGHT

With tariff hearings already in progress before the House Ways and Means Committee, House leaders estimate that both pieces of legislation could be put through in time for an adjournment of the special session by the middle of July at the latest, but Senate Democrats might be able to upset that program by making a prolonged fight for a general downward revision of duties.

With the next Chief Executive ready to call a special session, Senator McNary of Oregon, chairman of the Senate Agricultural Committee, said today after a conference with Mr. Hoover that he would not press his farm relief measure before March 4.

Even should it be possible to put through farm aid before the present Congress expires, it is the present understanding to have an extra session of the new Congress so as to adjust those tariff schedules that need alteration in the light of changed conditions since the existing law became effective more than six years ago.

TWO COMMITTEES

Even partial revision of the customs duties such as now are contemplated always results in a certain amount of unrest in the business and industrial world and it is the wish of those who will be leaders in the next administration to end this unrest as speedily as possible.

While the President-elect already has set forth his views on farm relief, of which revision of tariff duties on farm products is an important part, he has said that he will call a conference of leaders of farm thought to seek the best way out of the condition in which the farming industry finds itself.

This conference probably will be assembled in Washington soon after inauguration so that the program can be worked out in detail by the time the President is called upon to submit his first message to Congress.

While it is expected that Mr. Hoover in any call for a special session will suggest the enactment of only farm and tariff measures, Congress would be free to legislate on any other subject. However, House leaders hope to forestall any general legislation by organizing only two House committees, those that will deal with two of the major problems confronting the Hoover administration.

DRY LAWS LOOM

While there is no present intention of any general prohibition legislation at the special session, there is a possibility of its coming up at the first regular meeting of the new Congress, which will begin the first Monday in next December.

The President-elect has had in mind since before his notification to have an impartial commission make a thorough-going investigation of not only the enforcement of the Volstead Act, but also as to whether the abuses in enforcement are inherent in the act itself.

Congressional authorization for the naming of such a commission

SANTA CLARA NOTES EARTHQUAKE RECORD

SAN JOSE, Jan. 12. (AP)—A well-defined earthquake record was inscribed on both components of the horizontal seismograph at the University of Santa Clara beginning this afternoon at 4:13:10 o'clock and lasting until 6:25 o'clock, it is reported by Father Jerome Ricard, director of the university observatory. Dr. Albert J. Newlin, assistant director, calculated the seat of the disturbance at approximately 1500 miles in a general southeasterly direction.

COLD WAVE SWEEPS SOUTH

Chicago Saved from New Subzero Weather But Intense Suffering from Cold Continues

CHICAGO, Jan. 12. (Exclusive)—Sub zero weather again is promised for the Middle West tomorrow, with snow flurries, overcast skies and moderate northwest winds accompanying the cold.

A southwest wind saved Chicago and adjacent territory from the predicted lowest temperatures of the year today. An unforeseen swerve southward for the intense area of high pressure side tracked the sub zero wave but not until one death had occurred from the cold.

This sudden shift brought severe cold to the Gulf Coast, with frost as far south as Corpus Christi, Tex.

Sweeping down from Canada an extremely cold wave struck Minneapolis tonight, sending temperatures to 15 deg. below zero.

An unidentified negro was found frozen to death in the snow on the outskirts of Rockford, Ill.

The frigid weather, accompanied by snow flurries, today brought much suffering to needy families in Chicago, while police stations and the municipal lodging-houses were filled to capacity with homeless men, who sought shelter from the cold. More than 500 were given protection.

Charitable organizations were busy giving relief to poor families without sufficient heat and clothing.

The general forecast for the district predicted fair weather for Sunday in the Mississippi Valley and lake regions. Colder temperatures are forecast in the Ohio Valley and extreme east portions, with rising temperatures in the north central section.

As a result of the cold weather today firemen were forced to stand helpless because of frozen hydrants, while the Casino Gardens, a roadhouse near Sacramento avenue and Vermont street, Blue Island, burned to the ground.

Reports from Hopkinton, Iowa, tonight say that the town faces a bread shortage, due to immense snowdrifts, which have cut off train or motor bus service. There was no bread in the stores today and small prospects of any arriving before Monday.

Berman Says Testimony for State Based on Wish to End Persecution and Expense

WITNESS UNDERGOES FIRE OF CROSS-EXAMINATION

Story Told in Direct Questioning Suffers Little in Bombardment Made by Defense Attorneys

Cross-examination of Jacob Berman, alias Jack Bennett, the prosecution's star witness in the Keyes bribery case trial was started yesterday morning by defense counsel. In the brief two-hour morning session the direct examination was completed and Berman faced the battery of defense attorneys for cross-examination which is expected to take several days.

During the first hour which saw the completion of the direct examination Berman finished his amazing story of bribery and corruption in which he declares he paid out more than $40,000 through Ben Getzoff to Keyes.

Little additional information was gained from Berman during the first of the cross-examination and his story in the main was not shaken in the slightest. Most of the time, however, was taken up in bickering between counsel as to just what line the cross-examination was to take.

Important portions of the direct and cross-examination of Berman, with argument between counsel and the court, with irrelevant portions of the witnesses testimony deleted, follows:

CONVERSATION RECALLED

Question: (by Mr. Stewart.) Mr. Berman, do you recall a conversation that you had with the defendant Ben Getzoff about the first week in June, 1928?

Answer: Yes, Sir.

Q.: Where was that conversation?

A.: In his tailor shop. He told me that he was very friendly with McNabb, who was then United States Attorney, that he could do some good for me there, although McNabb could not be reached with $1,000,000, that his personal friendship with McNabb would result in some very good things for me.

Q.: Anything else said at that time and place by him?

A.: He told me he would get in touch with Mr. McNabb and have him come down for lunch where he would discuss the situation with him. He also said he would have Asa Keyes there to talk to him also.

Q.: Was anything said in that conversation where this luncheon would be had?

LUNCHEON AT HOFFMAN

A.: He told me the luncheon would be held at the Hoffman Grill; if I didn't believe he would have Mr. McNabb there, I could walk in and see them there.

Q.: Do you recall any time subsequent to that conversation of going any place and seeing Defendant Getzoff, Ben Getzoff, and the defendant, Asa Keyes, and any other person?

A.: Yes, sir.

Q.: Where did you go?

A.: Hoffman Grill.

Q.: What did you do when you arrived at the Hoffman Grill?

A.: Walked in the lobby.

Q.: Who, if any one, of the defendants did you see?

A.: Ben Getzoff, Asa Keyes, and Mr. McNabb was there.

ARGUMENTS OF COUNSEL

A long argument between counsel here interrupted the examination of the witness for some time, defense attorneys asking to be informed by the prosecution as to the theory of bringing Mr. McNabb's name into the case when there is nothing to show that he had any connection of any kind with the bribery charges. The court held with the prosecution and ruled: "It seems to me that if shown that two of the defendants are present, the fact that there is a third party present does not make the testimony objectionable."

Q.: (By Mr. Stewart.) Mr. Berman, were any of the payments made by you, testified to by you, to the defendants or any of them, made in connection with any other matter than the dismissal of both or either of the pending cases to which you have referred?

A.: No other matter.

CROSS-EXAMINATION

Q.: (By Mr. Rush.) Mr. Berman, what induced or persuaded you to testify here in this case?

A.: Because I was sick and tired of being prosecuted and hounded and shaken down for money, and I wanted to come up here and tell the truth and have it over with once and for all.

Q.: Yes, but you did arrange that the case against you would be dismissed and you would be granted immunity if you did testify?

A.: I did not.

Q.: No such arrangement was made?

A.: No such arrangements was made.

Q.: And as far as you are concerned, the dismissal of the case against you was a surprise?

A.: It was not told to me until the Thursday before the trial was started.

FIRST STATEMENT

Q.: When did you first make your statement to the District Attorney—

A.: I made the statement—

Q.: —or to members of the grand jury?

A.: I made the statement to Mr. Stewart, Mr. Fitts, Mr. Cooke and Mr. Porter at the Biltmore Hotel.

Q.: When?

A.: Immediately after my conviction in the Federal courts.

Q.: And before this indictment was returned?

A.: After the indictment was returned.

Q.: This indictment?

A.: Yes, sir, this indictment.

Q.: You were indicted in another indictment prior to this one in this court, were you not?

A.: In this case?

Q.: Well, in reference to the same matter. This is not an amended indictment. It is a new indictment. You were indicted before in this court with reference to this same matter, were you not?

A.: Yes, sir.

Q.: In October, I think it was?

A.: Yes, sir.

Q.: Did that interview take place at the suggestion of anyone as far as you know?

A.: Yes, sir.

Q.: And at whose suggestion?

WHEELER ENTERS TESTIMONY

A.: Lucien Wheeler.

Q.: And who is Lucien Wheeler?

A.: At the time I talked to him he was running a private detective agency.

Q.: And he is now what, chief of the investigators in the District Attorney's office?

A.: Yes, sir. Pardon me, Your Honor, I wish to—the answer that I made in answer to the questic "at anybody's suggestion?" is a little far fetched there. That is my own conclusion but if I could explain it—

The court: If you desire to explain it, you may do so.

EXPLANATION DETAILED

A.: Yes, sir. A week or two after the Federal case started in which I was convicted, I went to Lucien Wheeler whom I have known for a considerable time and retained him to give me some advice as to what could be done on the Federal case and what to do at different times in other matters. He told me that nothing could be done in the Federal case, but I retained him until the Federal case was over to do work for me. After this indictment was returned, I went to him and said, "What will I do?" He says, "There is only one thing I would advise you to do from your own standpoint now that you stand convicted and cannot afford to hire any lawyers or anything else; I would advise yo uto make a clean breast of everything and tell the truth." I says, "Will you arrange for the proper authorities to hear my story?" He says, "I will be glad to, because it is for your own good." And I asked him to make arrangements for me which he did.

Q. (by Mr. Rush:) And it was pursuant to these arrangements that you had the interview in—what hotel was it?

A.: In the Biltmore Hotel.

Q.: In the Biltmore Hotel with the gentlemen you have named?

A.: Yes, sir.

SECOND ARGUMENT ENSUED

A second argument between counsel arose when defense attorneys attempted to force the prosecuting lawyers to turn over to them a statement taken by the District Attorney from Berman when he first told his story to the authorities. Following long discussion the court ruled with the prosecution again but later notified the defense that he would allow it to present authorities to support the defense claims. The matter will probably be settled Monday.

Q. (by Mr. Rush:) Now, Mr. Berman, you testified about the payment of certain money to Ben Getzoff and certain money that was given to Ed Rosenberg to pay to Getzoff, and that you went down with Rosenberg and he asked Getzoff in your presence if he had received the money and Getzoff said that he had?

A.: Yes, sir.

Q.: You did not trust Mr. Rosenberg, did you?

A.: I don't trust anybody any more.

Q.: You didn't trust anybody at that time?

A.: No, sir.

Q.: And so you didn't trust either Mr. Rosenberg or Mr. Ben Getzoff or Dave Getzoff or any of them?

A.: I want to know that what was being said was corroborated by them.

NO TRUST IN ANY OF THEM

Q.: I am asking you the question: Did you trust any of them?

A.: No, sir.

Q.: Now, you did go after—well, I will say, you did inquire very earnestly of Mr. Getzoff several times as to what was being done?

A.: Yes, sir.

Q.: And also Mr. Rosenberg?

A.: Yes, sir.

Q.: And you did tell them that you could not see that anything was being done for you?

A.: Yes, sir.

Q.: You meant by that that you could not see that Keyes was doing anything for you?

A.: I did not mean that at all.

Q.: Well, who did you mean that was not doing anything for you?

A.: I meant that on account of Ed Rosenberg not being dismissed they could not get to me.

Q.: I understand that, but you did say to them that nothing was being done?

A.: Yes, sir.

NOTHING BEING DONE

Q.: Did you mean by that that nothing was being done for you?

A.: No, sir, I meant for the situation generally.

Q.: Which would result to your advantage?

A.: Yes, sir.

Q.: So far as you know, nothing was done for you until the final argument of the case of the Julian Petroleum Corporation?

A.: I didn't know that, no.

Q.: I say up to that time you could not see that Keyes had done anything for you?

A.: I had only Ben Getzoff's word for it.

Q.: I understand that, but you did not trust Ben Getzoff and you told him that nothing was being done?

A.: Yes, sir.

Q.: And you asked what you were getting for this money?

A.: Yes, and he told me something was being done.

Q.: I understand, but you didn't see it?

A.: No, sir.

Q.: The Rosenberg case was not dismissed?

A.: No, sir.

Q.: And no motion was made to dismiss your case?

A.: Exactly.

BENEFIT GIVEN GETZOFF

Q.: And when you were finally acquitted by the jury, you say you told Getzoff that you would give him the benefit of the doubt?

A.: Yes, sir.

Q.: That is, that Keyes had laid down on the final argument to the jury?

A.: Not as to that, no.

Q.: Well, you did say that Keyes did not press you on the final argument to the jury?

A.: I said I would give him the benefit of the doubt as to what he told me he was doing with Keyes.

Q.: I see. Now, then, after the case was dismissed, or after you were acquitted, you did meet Keyes in Ben Getzoff's office?

A.: Yes, sir.

Q.: And you were introduced to Keyes by whom, Ben Getzoff or Rosenberg?

A.: Ben Getzoff.

Q.: And at that time you did thank Mr. Keyes for being so easy with you in the argument?

A.: Yes, sir.

Q.: Now, was Mr. Keyes easy with you in that argument?

A.: Well, I thought if he wanted to, he could have crucified me.

Q.: And he did not crucify you?

A.: Not to my way of thinking, no.

Q.: Mr. Keyes was not a vituperative or abusive speaker at any time that you have ever heard him?

A.: The first time I ever heard him was that time.

DISCUSSION DIGNIFIED

Q.: And at that time his discussion was in a calm, dignified manner?

A.: Very.

Q.: And he did not apply epithets or abusive expressions to anybody?

A.: No, sir.

Q.: But simply made a cool and calm talk to the jury?

A.: Yes, sir.

Q.: And was apparently earnest?

A.: Yes, sir.

Q.: And in discussing the various persons whom he was prosecuting at that time, did he appear, as far as you observed, to present to the jury fairly their relations to the matter?

A.: To my way of thinking—

Q.: Without abuse and without vituperation?

A.: Yes, sir.

Q.: Then do you recall that when he got down to the close of the argument, practically the close, after having discussed the various defendants, and mentioning Mr. Lewis oftener than anyone else, and you next, that he made the statement, "I am satisfied that there was a concert of action on the part of Mr. Lewis and Mr. Bennett and possibly Mr. Conroy and Mr. Ketterman." Do you remember his making that statement to the jury?

A.: Yes, sir.

Q.: So that when he came to the jury in the final wind-up he advised the jury as far as you and Mr. Lewis were concerned that he was satisfied that the evidence beyond a doubt that you were guilty, in substance that, and as to the others, it was a matter which the jury must determine among themselves?

A.: If it was in his argument, I heard it.

Q.: And that is what you call laying down on the argument?

A.: To me, yes.

Q.: All right. Now, then, the next thing that you wanted done was that forgery case dismissed, and Mr. Keyes did not do it?

A.: No, sir.

Q.: And he never did do it?

A.: No, sir.

Q.: And it is still pending?

A.: Yes, sir.

FORGERY INDICTMENT

Q.: Now, as a matter of fact, that forgery indictment was returned while you were in New York, was it?

A.: Yes, sir.

Q.: After the first Julian indictment had been returned?

A.: That I don't know.

Q. (By Mr. Phillips:) Mr. Berman you stated that you left the city of Los Angeles for New York on June 20, 1928?

A.: Yes, sir.

Q.: And you boarded the train at Pasadena, California, for that purpose?

A.: Yes, sir.

Q.: And who accompanied you to that train at Pasadena?

A.: I think it was Charles Reimer and my brother.

Q.: Your brother Lewis Berman that you spoke of yesterday?

A.: Yes, sir.

Q.: And where did you and Mr. Reimer and your brother meet prior to going to Pasadena?

A.: I don't remember where we met.

Q.: Do you recall Mr. Reimer being at your home on the night of June the 19th, the night prior to the day you left for New York?

A.: I don't recall it; he might have been.

MESSAGE TO REIMER

Q.: Do you recall telephoning and leaving a message for Mr. Reimer to get in communication with you with reference to protecting you against any assault by a Mr. Krause?

A.: I remember that.

Q.: Wasn't that communication delivered to Mr. Reimer by you the day previous to your departure for New York?

A.: Yes.

Q.: And didn't he come out to your house by reason of your—at your request, for the purpose of protecting you against the assault of Mr. Krause?

A.: I believe so.

Q.: And didn't he telephone the Hollywood Police Department for some police officers to watch your premises so that you and your brother would not be molested or harmed by Mr. Krause?

A.: I believe so.

Q.: And didn't he remain with you all of that night and accompany you to Pasadena as somewhat of a body guard?

A.: You mean stay as guard on the night of the 19th?

Q.: Yes.

A.: No, sir.

Q.: Do you recall whether you were living with your brother at that time?

A.: Yes, sir.

Q.: Didn't Mr. Reimer and his partner, Harry Groman, working out of the District Attorney's office, stay there that night?

A.: I think they did; that is right; I think they did.

Q.: And that was done for the purpose of protecting you against this man Krause, was it not?

A.: Yes, sir.

Q.: Mr. Krause had threatened to kill you?

A.: Yes, sir.

Q.: Had made repeated threats to you and your brother?

A.: Yes, sir.

Q.: And that was the reason that Mr. Reimer accompanied you to Pasadena?

A.: Yes, sir.

Q.: And that was the reason you boarded the train at Pasadena instead of boarding it at the Southern Pacific Station at Los Angeles?

A.: Yes, sir.

Q.: Rather the Santa Fe station at Los Angeles?

A.: Yes, sir, that is right.

CONFERENCE AT STATION

Q.: And just prior to your boarding the train, didn't you suggest to Mr. Reimer that he should watch the house of your brother or have the officers watch that so he could not hound your brother during your absence?

A.: Yes, sir.

Q.: Wasn't that what you referred to in your direct examination yesterday wherein you stated that you asked him, meaning Mr. Reimer, to see that everything was all right?

A.: That was part of it.

Q.: That was the main part of it, was it not?

A.: I would say 75 per cent.

Q.: And he told you that he would?

A.: Yes, sir.

Q.: Now, you had no conversation with Mr. Reimer with reference to dismissal of any indictments pending against you?

A.: Not with Mr. Reimer.

Q.: What conversation you had with him at the time that you left for New York, did not refer to the dismissal of any cases pending against you?

A.: No, sir; it was just generally speaking.

Q.: And any money you claim to have given him at that time was not done for any purpose of dismissing the cases pending against you?

A.: No, sir; he could not dismiss a case if he wanted to.

Q.: And you were expecting no advantages of any kind from him, were you?

A.: Nothing, only generally speaking. Anything he could do for me in any way I expected, but never discussed the matter with him.

Q.: Generally. Particularly, though, with reference to this man Krause, who was annoying you considerably?

A.: That was the biggest part.

Q.: And he did call in officers to protect your home and property?

A.: Yes, sir.

SCENE AT TRAIN

Q.: Are you positive, Mr. Berman, that just as you were boarding that train that you—didn't you say to Mr. Reimer, "If you will look out for Louie and see that this fellow Krause does not hurt him, I certainly will make it all right with you?" Didn't you place your hand in your pocket and didn't Mr. Reimer say, "No, I don't want anything?" Does that not refresh your recollection?

A.: He may have said that, but I still gave him the $200 to buy some clothes.

Q.: Are you positive that you handed him the $200 and didn't he refuse to accept it?

A.: No, sir.

Q.: Are you sure about that?

A.: Positive.

Q.: Do you recall in what manner or form that $200 was?

A.: Two $100 bills.

Q.: Who was present at the time you gave that to him?

A.: Mr. Reimer and myself.

Q.: Where was your brother?

A.: He was probably taking care of the baggage.

Q.: You have no independent recollection of it at this time?

A.: No, I have not, but I know he was not with us. He was somewhere in the station.

Q.: That had absolutely nothing whatever to do with any cases pending against you, either in the State or Federal courts, had it?

A.: It had nothing to do with the cases particularly.

Q.: And particularly you did not intend to convey any impression whatever that that money, if you did give it to him, was to be used for the purpose of obtaining any benefits from him or from Mr. Keyes?

A.: No; that money had nothing to do with Mr. Keyes.

[A typographical error, due to dropping out a line of type, in an editorial note in yesterday's Times, caused the paragraph to read: "Pike was in error in one statement as to his negotiations with The Times, which was to the effect that payment for the story was contingent only upon publication," etc. It should have read: "Pike was in error in one statement as to his negotiations with The Times, which was to the effect that payment for the story was contingent upon the return of indictments. As a matter of fact, it was contingent only upon publication, as is customary in such cases. The return of indictments was but one of a number of ways in which his information would have become available for publication."—Ed. Times.]

Close Watch Kept Over Witness

After Sticking to Story About Keyes

Jacob Berman, alias Jack Bennett, after two-hour cross-examination by Keyes case defense, and his personal guard.

ceived the money and Getzoff said that he had?

"Yes, sir," replied the witness.

"You did not trust Mr. Rosenberg, did you," was the defense counsel's next comment.

"I don't trust anybody anymore," said Berman with considerable fervor.

Berman admitted, under Rush's questioning, that he did not notice "anything was being done" for him in the Julian cases until Keyes made his argument to the jury.

"So far as you know, nothing was done for you until the final argument of the case of the Julian Petroleum Corporation," asked the defense counsel.

"I had only Ben Getzoff's word for it," said Berman.

"And when you were finally acquitted by the jury, you say you told Getzoff that you would give him the benefit of the doubt," queried Attorney Rush again. "That is, that Keyes had laid down on the final argument to the jury?"

"Yes, sir."

"Now, was Mr. Keyes easy with you in that argument?" continued the defense attorney, a little later.

"Well, I thought if he wanted to, he could have crucified me," was the witness's retort.

"And he did not crucify you?"

"Not to my way of thinking, no."

"CUT AND DRIED"

Berman further testified that he did not pay much attention to Keyes's argument before the Julian case jury, anyway, because Ben Getzoff had told him previously that "it was all cut and dried."

The witness admitted that a case of forgery and embezzlement that he had hoped Keyes would dismiss against him still is pending, and that Charles Reimer, former investigator for Keyes to whom Berman said he gave $200, had done some work as a personal guard for Berman and his brother, Louis.

Berman completed his direct examination early in the morning after being on the stand approximately half a day altogether. His final testimony for the State had to do largely with the connection of U. S. Dist.-Atty. McNabb with the case.

LUNCH MEETING

Ben Getzoff told him, Berman declared, that McNabb couldn't "be reached with $1,000,000," but that he (Getzoff) was friendly with McNabb and believed that that friendship might prove beneficial to Berman and to that end he would invite McNabb to lunch with himself and Keyes and Berman could drop into the restaurant and see them. This luncheon was carried off according to schedule and Berman said he saw the three seated together in a downtown restaurant.

Further cross-examination of Berman is expected to take about another half-day and then the prosecution has announced it will place Louis Berman on the stand as its next witness. Court was adjourned at noon yesterday until 10 a.m. tomorrow.

HUGE PLANE ORDER PLACED AT PHOENIX

PHOENIX, Jan. 12. (AP)—Placing of an order for sixty-four airplanes, involving a total cost of $500,000, was announced here today by Lawrence W. This is said to be the largest single order ever placed for airplanes in the history of commercial aviation.

Germany Seeks Damages From France, Britain

COLOGNE, Jan. 12. (AP)—A claim for damages inflicted on the public roadways by the Franco-English occupation forces during the recent fall maneuvers, estimated at $75,000, has been filed with the German government by the provincial board of the Rhineland.

Apart from this claim, writes the Cologne Gazette, the province further suffered through the maneuvers to the extent of $96,500 from damages to the requisitioned quarters for the soldiers and officers and to the farm crops.

SURVEY PLANNED TO DEFINE MAN'S PLACE

Democrats Pick Steering Group

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12. (AP)—A national Democratic Congressional committee has been named to take charge of that party's fight in the next election.

The committee includes Representative Byrns of Tennessee, chairman; Representatives Lea of California, Linthicum of Maryland, Pou of North Carolina and Mrs. Mary T. Norton of New Jersey. Later one representative from each State will be named on the committee.

PRISON RIOT SOON ENDED BY TEAR GAS

Bedlam Subsides When Police Reserves Shoot Fumes Into Prison

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 12. (AP)—After guards had called for aid, city policemen, using tear gas, today quelled an uprising among nearly 600 prisoners in the county prison at Holmesburg. The gas was discharged into three of the eight corridors forming a wheel within the institution.

During the disorder, which began yesterday and continued intermittently until this afternoon, prisoners tore mattresses, broke cell furniture and shattered some of the wooden doors on the inside of their iron-barred cells.

None was seriously injured during the disturbances since most of the prisoners never got an opportunity to leave their cells. No firearms were found among the prisoners.

Trouble at the prison has been brewing for several days. Prisoners asserted that their food was insufficient and poor in quality, which is denied by prison officials.

The authorities declared the disturbances due to unrest among the prisoners of whom 1750 are crowded into cells planned for only 1500. There are no long-term men in the institution.

The disturbances were minimized until noon today when a call was sent to the City Hall for reinforcements. Lemuel B. Schofield, director of public safety, ordered a detachment of policemen to the place with tear gas and later increased the force to more than 100 men.

"We want food," was the cry sent up when the city police arrived. The cry was taken up by prisoners in other corridors.

The disorder was in progress about four hours before the police ended it.

Senators Have Breakfast at White House

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12. (AP)—Twenty members of the Senate, including Republicans, Democrats and the one Farmer-Labor member, were guests of President Coolidge at breakfast today at the White House.

The Republicans were Fess of Ohio, McMaster of South Dakota, Watson of Indiana, Moses of New Hampshire, Reed of Pennsylvania, Bingham of Connecticut, Brookhart of Iowa, Capper of Kansas, Nye of North Dakota, Vandenberg of Michigan, Pine of Oklahoma, and Smoot of Utah.

The Democrats were Ashurst of Arizona, Barkley of Kentucky, Fletcher of Florida, McKellar of Tennessee, George of Georgia, Ransdell of Louisiana, and Gerry of Rhode Island, and the Farmer-Labor member, Shipstead of Minnesota.

Piles Now Cured Without Surgery

The old theory that surgery was the only method by which hemorrhoids (piles) could be successfully cured has been wholly disproved. This treacherous affliction which slowly but surely undermines the health of its victims, if taken in time, can be successfully treated without recourse to surgical aid. All this is fully explained in a new book, fully illustrated and copyrighted, just published by the noted rectal specialist, Dr. McCleary, 522 Elms Blvd., Excelsior Springs, Mo. It describes in detail the mild McCleary treatment by which more than 15,000 persons living in all parts of the United States have been cured. If you or any of your relatives or friends suffer from piles or rectal trouble in any form, write today for this free book and their list of cured patients in your community. They will be sent in plain wrapper, postpaid.—[Advertisement.

LAND GRANT QUIZ FUNDS APPROVED

Senate Audits Committee Acts in Proposed Inquiry on Area Ceded by Mexico

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12. (AP)—Expenses to be incurred in the proposed Senate investigation of charges that a vast tract of land included in an area ceded by Mexico to the United States was delivered fraudulently in private interests, were approved today by the Senate Audit Committee.

The resolution for the investigation, proposed by Senator [illegible] Democrat, Georgia, now goes to the Senate Lands Committee for report to the Senate. The land in question lies in Southern California and includes a tract known as the Lomas De Santiago Grant, which became public domain of the United States on May 30, 1848, by virtue of the Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo.

The committee also would be empowered to investigate charges that citizens seeking to enforce their rights in connection with the land "have been maliciously threatened, intimidated, slandered, libeled, arrested, and have been unjustly indicted and held under excessive bonds for long periods," before being released without trial. Further, that private interests controlling the unlawful possession of the public lands by reason of their [illegible] exerted influence over those charged with the duty it is to enforce the law.

REDISTRICTING ACT DISCUSSED

Legislators Consider New Congressional Map

Fenn Bill Would Add Six Representatives

Southland Population Gains Chief Factor

BY C. A. JONES
"Times" Staff Representative

SACRAMENTO, Jan. 12. (Exclusive)—With the Fenn reapportionment bill adopted by a large vote in the House of Representatives and apparently well on its way to become a law, attention of the Legislature here is directed toward redistricting of Congressional representation in California. The Fenn bill, which keeps the number of representatives at 435 and reapportions on the basis of the Federal census of 1930, is expected to give California a minimum of six additional Congressmen, increasing the State's representation in the lower house to seventeen. Due to the rapid growth of Los Angeles and other southern counties, most of these new Congressmen should go south of the Tehachapi, unless the Legislature, which has the authority to do the apportioning, changes the present theory of districting on a strictly population basis.

In this way, the new Federal plan of legislative reapportionment comes to the fore, inasmuch as the northern rural counties will have a decided advantage in the Senate, controlling that body. Plans are already under way to bring in a resolution appointing a legislative committee to bring in a report next session reapportioning the State's Congressional districts.

SOUTHLAND LEAD

At the close of registration last October, Los Angeles county had 935,000 voters, or approximately 40 per cent of the voting strength of California. On this basis, Los Angeles county should receive four or five Congressional districts in addition to its present two, while the remainder of Southern California should receive a number sufficient to bring the majority of Congressmen to the thirteen southern counties.

However, the northern rural representatives may use their weight in the Legislature to discard the theory of a strictly population basis for the lower house in Washington, by keeping the present Congressional districts intact and making the additional Congressmen representatives-at-large as has been done in some States.

In this relation, Senator West of Alameda proposes Monday to bring in a constitutional amendment calling for a constitutional convention to devise a new instrument to replace the badly patched affair now serving as the fundamental law of the State. Should this convention be called, the question of legislative reapportionment will be of extreme importance.

FEDERAL PLAN

The voters of California have on two occasions approved the Federal plan of legislative reapportionment, dividing the Assembly by population, but limiting each county to one Senator. At the next session of the Legislature this new plan will take effect, so far as the Assembly is concerned, while in the Senate the large counties will begin to lose their Senatorial representation. As an alternative the smaller counties may recall the Senators nominally representing them. If these recall elections are held, the Senate next session will have thirty-seven out of forty members from counties considering themselves as part of the rural bloc.

In his message Gov. Young hinted at constitutional revision. Senator West immediately began drawing his amendment, which proposes that the convention should be placed on the ballot at the 1930 general election and if approved, the convention meet within six months. Six months after the delegates complete their labors, the new constitution, according to West's plan will be submitted to the people. The convention is to be formed of eighty delegates, one from each Assembly District, thus giving the cities control of that body.

RURALS MAY FIGHT

Thus the rural counties see the possibility of the city-controlled convention going back to the old form of legislative reapportionment on a strictly population basis and probably will battle the West amendment, offering one of their own as a counter-measure.

It is possible that a measure calling for another reapportionment election, to be called late this spring instead of waiting for the general election in November of 1930, will emanate from the San Francisco delegation next week, although officially, San Francisco, which is bitterly opposed to the Federal plan of reapportionment, says the issue is closed.

Last session Assemblyman Baum of Los Angeles introduced a bill consolidating Congress Districts One and Two and giving the district thus formed to Los Angeles to form a third. The rural members gave this measure lip service, in order to uphold their contentions concerning the so-called Federal plan but when it came to a vote they defeated Baum's bill. Assemblyman Baum may reintroduce the measure so that Los Angeles can have this addition to its representation in Congress without waiting for the session of 1933 when the Fenn bill becomes effective. Congress Districts One and Two, situated in the sparsely settled mountain counties in the north have fewer voters than many of the Los Angeles State Senatorial districts.

Senator Weller of Glendale next week will introduce the permanent registration bill. This has the approval of Registrar of Voters Kerr of Los Angeles, Registrar Zemansky of San Francisco, County Clerk Hall of Sacramento, the Los Angeles Board of Supervisors and many clubs and organizations. Under its provisions a voter need only register once so long as he does not change his residence and votes once in two years.

Senator Rochester of Los Angeles and Senator Merriam of Long Beach have introduced a constitutional amendment calling for compulsory registration and voting.

MICHIGAN TO LEAD FIGHT IN SENATE

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12. (Exclusive)—Senator Vandenberg of Michigan expects to have the Senate pass the Fenn reapportionment bill within a few days and as Michigan is the second State to California to gain in new Congressmen, will lead the fight. There is little opposition in the Senate and with only two appropriation bills remaining to be passed there is ample time to get the bill to President Coolidge for signature before March 4, next.

While primarily the matter affects the House and the Senate must act if the matter is to be disposed of at this session, the general disposition of most of the Senate leaders is a desire to limit the House to its present size of 435 members.

Unless action is taken by both houses and the measure becomes law by executive approval there will be great difficulty in getting reapportionment in the next Congress. California will gain six votes and Michigan four by the Fenn measure and there is no desire on the part of any large number of Senators to change or amend the bill in any way. The tremendous majority that was given in the House yesterday insures its early passage and President Coolidge is expected to sign it as soon as it reaches him.

Even the possible delay over the Kellogg treaty ratification and the passage of the cruiser bill is not expected to prevent the passage by the Senate of the reapportionment measure between now and March 4.

DEATH WAITS ON FLIP OF COIN

Pilot of Ill-Fated Fokker Sent on Fatal Trip by Chance

MIDDLETOWN (Pa.) Jan. 12. (AP)—A flip of a coin decided who would fly the ill-fated Fokker which crashed yesterday with a loss of eight lives on its return flight from the Army air depot here to Bolling Field.

Capt. H. A. Dinger, who piloted the ship to this airport, and Lieut. Henry R. Angell tossed the coin. Capt. Dinger won the toss and took the controls of an amphibian that had been reconditioned in the Middletown shops and was ready to be returned to Washington.

HOOVER PRAISES TUNNEL MAKERS

Speaks on Opening of Long Cascade Tube

Address Broadcast Over National Hook-up

Great Northern Dedicates $14,000,000 Project

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12. (AP)—The voice of Herbert Hoover, for the first time since his election to the Presidency, was heard over the radio tonight in connection with the opening of the Cascade Tunnel in the Pacific Northwest.

Speaking into a microphone placed in the study of his home on S street, the voice of the President-elect was carried over a coast-to-coast hook-up of thirty-seven stations of the National Broadcasting Company. He described the tunnel, which has been constructed through the Cascade Mountains by the Great Northern Railway, as again demonstrating the "progressive character of American industry." The text of his address follows:

HOOVER ADDRESS

"To President Budd, friends in the Cascade Mountains, and of the radio audience.

"I am glad to participate in a small way in recognition of a great engineering accomplishment — the completion of the greatest tunnel upon our continent. Perhaps only engineers can appreciate the technical skill, the labor, the courage required for such an undertaking. But the opening of a great transportation tunnel is more than an engineering accomplishment. It is a contribution for all time to quickened and cheapened transportation. Through these savings it adds something to the productivity and prosperity of far-flung communities which it serves. In the end it means a mite of contribution to better living of many hundreds of thousands of people.

"Never have we witnessed a more perfect co-ordination of the forces of American industry than in this great job. The miners who have operated the drills, who cleared the rock and built the new tracks during these three years have established a record in construction for their skill, every one of them needs no recommendation in the future other than that they were on the staff of the Cascade Tunnel.

ENDURING MONUMENT

"President Budd and his fellow engineers who have designed this tunnel and carried it to successful completion have left an enduring monument to their skill and abilities. The great transportation organization which has made it possible by its courage and foresight has demonstrated again the progressive character of American industry.

"This accomplishment is of more moment than the improvement of the Great Northern Railway. It gives every American the satisfaction of confidence in the vitality of our civilization.

"I congratulate you, Mr. Budd, your associates, and our country."

LONGEST AMERICAN TUNNEL OPEN TO TRAINS

SEATTLE, Jan. 12. (AP)—With the ceremony broadcast throughout the nation by a radio hook-up, the Great Northern Railway's new eight-mile tunnel through the Cascade Mountains was opened to traffic tonight. The bore, the longest in America and the fifth longest in the world, burrowing under the mountain from Scenic, Wash., to Berne, Wash., cuts two hours from east and west railroad schedules.

Tonight's ceremony began at Berne, the east portal, where special trains bearing delegations from both sides of the State met. There Ralph Budd, president of the Great Northern, was introduced by Graham McNamee, radio announcer. After a brief program at Berne, which included the opening of a gate and addresses, the trains consolidated and passed through the tunnel to Scenic, the west portal.

At Scenic the special train crashed through a cloth over the exit to the tunnel, marking the official passage of a locomotive through the concrete-lined bore. At the banquet at Scenic, Judge L. C. Gilman, vice-president of the Great Northern, was toastmaster.

The tunnel, built in the record time of three years, cost $14,000,000 and is part of a $25,000,000 development project of the Great Northern Railway in the Cascade Mountains.

BROADCASTERS' CAUSE ARGUED

Association Official Testifies at White Bill Hearing

Limiting of Stations' Power by Congress Opposed

Such Regulation Declared Duty of Radio Board

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12. (AP)—The limiting of power of radio stations by Congress would be unwise, the House Merchant Marine Committee was told by Henry A. Bellows of Minneapolis, a director of the National Association of Broadcasters and a former member of the Federal Radio Commission.

In testifying at the hearing on the White bill to continue the life of the Federal Radio Commission another year, he said that he believes the fixing of the power of radio stations is an administrative duty of the Radio Commission. Urging that either the Federal Radio Commission or some other governmental bureau to supervise radio be made a permanent organization, Bellows said that if Congress does not see fit to enact such legislation at this session, his organization desires the adoption of the White measure.

Preceding Bellows, Joseph Goustin of Jersey City, president of the New Jersey State Broadcasters' Association, demanded that a Congressional investigation be made of the administration of the radio act by the commission. Goustin, who had been on the stand for the past two days, made the demand on the basis of his testimony, in which he charged that the commission has tended to create a monopoly for the larger radio stations through allocations made in November.

Bellows recommended that all broadcast licenses be granted for one year instead of ninety days, as at present, and urged the elimination of the requirement for equal distribution of radio facilities among the five zones. He would divide the facilities among the States in proportion to population.

America Honored By German City

FRANKFORT-ON-MAIN, Jan. 12. (Exclusive)—As a prelude to the observance of the centennial of the erection of the first American consulate in Frankfort in 1829, the University of Farnkfort has included in the curriculum for its winter semester of 1928-29 a series of eleven lectures by prominent personages on "Contemporary America." The lectures, which have already begun and will be continued until February 26, deal with America's cultural, economic and political problems. Among the lecturers are Dr. Von Schulze-Goevernitz, the last German Governor of Samoa; Dr. Dovifat, director of the German Institute for Journalism in Berlin, who will speak about the American press; former Minister Reinhold, whose subject is American economic life, and Former Secretary of State Bergmann, who will deal with the importance of the United States for the solution of the reparations problem.

Telephone Suit Transfer Made

PORTLAND (Or.) Jan. 12. (AP)—The suit brought by the city of Portland against the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company to determine the rights of both on the question of a new franchise was ordered removed to Federal District Court by Presiding Judge Morrow today.

This action was taken on petition of telephone company attorneys, although the Federal court may refuse to assume jurisdiction and remand the case back to the State court for trial.

Epidemic Toll Set at 26,000

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12. (AP)—Public health officials today estimated approximately 26,000 persons died from influenza and pneumonia in the United States during the seven weeks preceding the 5th inst.

The estimate was determined after analysis of reports reaching the Census Bureau from cities in various parts of the country.

the STEINWAY

In the light of the advantages enjoyed by the owners of a Steinway piano, its extraordinary prestige is at once explicable. . . . For he experiences a unique pride of possession in the enjoyment of this beautiful instrument. He feels a deep and intimate pleasure in the music drawn from it by his family or by himself. And he knows that his tastes, and those of his children, are constantly the better for its refining influence.

The exceptional qualities of tone and durability which distinguish Steinway pianos have been generally recognized for 70 years. They have been built into them with scrupulous care by three generations of the Steinway family. They have won the admiration and praise of the greatest musicians, from Wagner to Igor Stravinsky. Six Steinway models are designed to meet a special condition of income or acoustics. Each is a true Steinway, incomparably rich in tone, magnificently responsive. It will serve you, as only the best things can serve you, all your days. And there lies the real index of economy. You need never buy another piano.

Steinway Uprights, $950 up;
Grands, $1475 up.

HOOVER FIXES SESSION DATE

Democrats May Attack Plan of Revamping Tariff

Dry Law Study to be Placed Before Commission

Rumors of Cabinet Making Abound in Capital

is proposed in a joint resolution sponsored by Senator Edge of New Jersey, a leader of the Senate wets and a strong supporter of Mr. Hoover in both the preconvention and the Presidential campaigns.

Senator Jones of Washington, foremost among the Senate drys, and also an early Hoover fan, previously had proposed a Congressional investigation, but he and Senator Edge are reported to be close to an agreement under which the President would be authorized to name the commission which would be directed to report to Congress as well as to the Chief Executive.

MANY CALLERS

Today besides conferring with Senator McNary, President-elect Hoover had a large number of other callers. It was the sixth of the ten days he has set aside for conferences here with party leaders before leaving for Miami Beach, Fla. He probably will be unable to get away from Washington before Wednesday.

Because of the pressure of other engagements, Mr. Hoover decided to have Senator Cousens of Michigan, as a dinner guest tomorrow evening instead of at a headquarters conference today. The Michigan Senator is fighting reappointment of Andrew Mellon as Treasury Secretary.

Mrs. Alvin T. Hert of Kentucky, a vice-chairman of the Republican National Committee, whose appointment as Interior Secretary is being urged upon Mr. Hoover, also will be a dinner guest tomorrow night at the Hoover home on S street.

PLAN RUMORED

Ogden Mills, Undersecretary of the Treasury, visited Mr. Hoover during the day for half an hour's talk, but he said Cabinet selections were not discussed as his call was largely a "courtesy" one.

In the political gossip around Washington the suggestion frequently is heard that with Mr. Mellon remaining as head of the Treasury for two years more, which would give him the longest term of any Treasury Secretary, Mr. Mills would be given an important diplomatic post overseas and subsequently named to succeed the veteran Pennsylvania Cabinet officer, however, if Mr. Hoover has such a plan in mind he has not permitted it to become public property.

William J. Donovan, assistant to the Attorney-General, was closeted with the President-elect for upward of half an hour later in the day, and later, Donovan, who has been prominently mentioned for the Attorney-Generalship, would not disclose what was discussed. He said, however, that he expected to call on Mr. Hoover during the latter's stay in Florida and after his own return from Santa Fe, N. M., whither he is going next Monday.

J. C. Penny, who will be Mr. Hoover's host at Belle Isle, near Miami Beach, was a luncheon guest of the President-elect at his headquarters here.

Among the late callers on Mr. Hoover today were Senator Pine of Oklahoma, and Representative Eaton of New Jersey, and Dyer of Missouri.

Two Held for Asserted Rum Sales to Pupils

PHOENIX, Jan. 12. (AP) — John Pappas, a cafe employee, and Margarita Ferguson, 45-year-old Mexican woman, were arrested today after Federal prohibition agents said they found evidence that the pair have been trafficking in the sale of liquor to high-school students of Phoenix.

Their asserted bootlegging operations were located a block from the high school.

Denver Bishop in War on Bill

DENVER, Jan. 12. (AP)—Bishop Frank H. Rice of the Liberal Church of Denver, at the head of about fifty of his followers, today paraded through the State Capitol in protest of the criminal syndicalism bill introduced a few days ago in the Twenty-seventh General Assembly.

Large banners carried by the paraders carried the protest of the Bishop and his followers. "Criminal Syndicalism—a Weapon Against the Workers" and "The Workers' Communist Party Protests Criminal Syndicalism Law" were among the legends on the banners.

Hopkins and His Wife in Custody

NEW YORK, Jan. 12. (Exclusive) Dorothy Hicks Hopkins and her husband, Robert T. Hopkins, who gained wide attention in a $500,000 suit for asserted alienation of Mrs. Hopkins's affections filed against Joseph Fleishman, elderly and wealthy New York florist, were held here by Federal authorities today charged with possession of counterfeit money. Mr. and Mrs. Hopkins and Mrs. Louise Clothier were arrested by secret service agents last night.

The agents found $6000 in fake Federal reserve notes in the apartment and in luggage left by Mr. and Mrs. Hopkins and Mrs. Clothier at Pennsylvania station.

PROPELLER KILLS AVIATOR

EAST ST. LOUIS (Ill.) Jan. 12. (AP)—T. T. Marcney, 49 years of age, an aviator of Wichita, Kan., was killed at Parks Airport near here today when he was struck on the head by the propeller of an airplane he was cranking.

HELPERS NAMED FOR KEMMERER

Financial Group on Chinese Mission Enumerated

Many Experts Included for Rehabilitation Work

Party Will Sail from Bay City on the 18th Inst.

NEW YORK, Jan. 12. (Exclusive) Announcement was made today of the personnel of the financial commission which will accompany Dr. Edwin W. Kemmerer, expert in government finances, to China, to assist in that country's financial reform as one of the first major steps in the country's economic rehabilitation.

The first contingent of the Kemmerer party of more than thirty will sail the 18th inst. from San Francisco on the President Madison and a second group will follow on the 26th inst., sailing from Seattle on the President Pierce.

PERSONNEL OF PARTY

The mission will be composed of the following:

Dr. Arthur Nicholas Young, expert in public credit, who has resigned as economic adviser to the Department of State to accept a position with the commission; Dr. Oliver C. Lockhard, expert in taxation, head of the department of economics and finance of the University of Buffalo; Benjamin Bruce Wallace, expert in tariff and tariff policies who for some years has been special expert to the United States Tariff Commission; Dr. Frederick A. Cleveland, expert in budgets and budgetary problems, professor of United States Citizenship, Maxwell Foundation Boston University; William D. Poland, expert in railway finance who recently resigned his position as director-general of railways for the Persian government; Dr. John Parks Young, assistant expert in currency and banking, head of the department of economics and sociology, Occidental College; William Watson, assistant expert in accounting and fiscal control, associated with the National Institute of Public Research; Richard W. Bonneville, assistant expert in accounting and fiscal control, formerly associated with the financial adviser to the Persian government; Fenimore B. Lynch, assistant expert in banking, formerly of the International Banking Corporation; Edward F. Feely, general secretary of the commission, who previously served as general secretary and technical adviser of the Kemmerer commission; Frank W. Petter, undersecretary of the commission, assistant professor of economics at Princeton University, and a number of specialists.

An extensive study of the finances of China is being undertaken by Dr. Kemmerer at invitation of the Chinese Ministry of Finance. Headquarters will be maintained in Shanghai, with the members visiting from time to time the principal cities of the country for study and discussion. The task will begin to take form with a comprehensive study of the experts of data which the Chinese government already has assembled.

FIRE DESTROYS NORRIS CHURCH

Blaze Believed to Have Been of Incendiary Origin

Sunday-school, Gymnasium Also Burn Down

Fundamentalist Declares He Will Rebuild

FORT WORTH (Tex.) Jan. 12. (AP)—Fire believed to have been of incendiary origin today destroyed the First Baptist Church here, of which Rev. J. Frank Norris, fundamentalist leader and reform crusader, is pastor. A four-story brick Sunday-school building and gymnasium adjoining the church also burned. Loss to the buildings, which church officials said were insured, was estimated between $300,000 and $400,000.

Investigators searching the ruins for clews as to the origin of the fire reported uncovering evidences of incendiarism.

GAS CONTAINERS FOUND

Dist.-Atty. Stewart said a tub containing gasoline and water and a five-gallon jug of gasoline were found in the Sunday-school building. The jug was in the basement and the tub was on the third floor.

Two charred tubs were found under debris of the church building where the fire started.

A thorough investigation of all circumstances surrounding the blaze will be conducted, the District Attorney said.

Dr. Norris, who has had a stormy career here, was in Austin when informed of the fire and returned here this afternoon.

The original First Baptist Church, of which Dr. Norris also was the pastor, burned in 1912. He was charged with arson and perjury at the time, but was acquitted after sensational trials.

ACQUITTED IN SHOOTING

He came into the limelight again more than two years ago when he shot and killed D. E. Chipps, wealthy lumberman, in the study of the church during an argument over Norris's pulpit attacks on the city administration. Dr. Norris pleaded self-defense and won acquittal.

Recently the minister has been conducting a campaign against asserted vice conditions here and on numerous occasions he has reported the receipt of threats against his life and the church property.

After inspecting the ruins, Dr. Norris announced that the church will be rebuilt.

"The worst loss is the demoralizing of our forces," he said, "but we will start building back now."

He announced that services will be held temporarily in the tabernacle used during the summer months

EXTENSION DECIDED IN POSTAL INQUIRY

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12. (AP)—Extension of the inquiry into postmastership patronage to the states of Florida, Texas and Arkansas was decided upon today by the Senate Investigating Committee.

POLITICO-CRIME RING SEEN

CHICAGO, Jan. 12. (AP)—A 76-year-old crusader, who fears not, put the blame for Chicago's wholesale bombings and gang slayings today on illegal political protection.

Frank J. Loesch, head of the Chicago Crime Commission and special prosecutor in charge of a series of "clean-up" grand juries, declared the direct cause of frequent and regular acts of violence is the shielding of gangsters, racketeers and bootleggers by political leaders.

"The immense illegitimate profits resulting from this protection keep the intergang warfare alive and the city in an uproar," said the white-haired, vigorous attorney, drafted by the Chicago Bar Association in an effort to restore a respect for law and order.

LOUISIANA SLAYERS' NEW REPRIEVE SIGNED

NEW ORLEANS, Jan. 12. (AP)—Gov. Long today signed a reprieve staying the execution of Mrs. Ada Bonner Lebouef and Dr. Thomas E. Dreher until February 1, next. They were under sentence to hang this afternoon at Franklin for murdering James J. Lebouef, the woman's husband.

NAVY WOULD CATCH ASSERTED SWINDLER

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12. (AP)—Naval recruiting stations throughout the country were asked today by the Navy Department to apprehend, if possible, H. M. Weaver, about 45 years of age, charged with impersonating a naval officer and defrauding persons of more than $3400.

Quota Bill Scope May be Limited

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12. (AP)—The possibility that the Box bill to restrict Western Hemisphere immigration might be changed in the House to apply the quota regulations only to Mexico was discussed today by a number of those supporting the measure. If this were done the bill would be somewhat similar to one now pending in the Senate by Senator Harris of Georgia.

Nevertheless there has been no definite move in the House thus far to make the change. The bill was discussed by the Immigration Committee Friday when that body undertook to map out its legislative program for the session, but no decision was reached regarding it, and the matter went over until next Thursday.

Announcing the Most Extraordinary

AUCTION SALE of ORIENTAL RUGS

Mr. Salisian has returned to the city after an absence of 6 months to positively and conclusively wind up his business here and return to his business in New York.

Regarding the auction method as one sure of quicker results, the entire Oriental Rug stock we have on hand will be offered for sale at auction without limit or reserve to be positively sold to the highest bidder.

This is positively the last effort to dispose of this immense stock and anyone interested in the purchase of any Oriental Rug, whether Persian, Turkish, Chinese or Indian, will surely find one to fill any requirement at the buyer's own price.

We greatly prefer of course to sell every rug we have on hand even at a loss, but failing to do so we will ship back to New York every rug remaining unsold and your opportunity to acquire one of these Salisian gems will be lost forever.

We have sold nothing but Oriental Rugs of the highest quality for the past 14 years in Los Angeles. So do not lose this opportunity of opportunities. Come and take advantage of values which surely will be available to everyone willing to take them.

Sale Starts Monday, January 14th

Continuing daily for the entire week at 2 p.m. and 8 p.m. of each day.

Everybody welcome including dealers

UTAH DAM FIGHT DUE TOMORROW

Opposition in Legislature Sure on Six-State Pact

Dern's Message May Clarify Agreement Battle

Group Resents Responsibility of Project's Fate

SALT LAKE CITY, Jan. 12. (Exclusive)—Evidence rapidly is taking shape promising an early entrance of the Boulder dam fight in the Utah Legislature, which convenes Monday. In well informed circles it is known that there will be immediate and organized opposition to Utah again entering the six-State compact. Those undertaking this stand will base their opposition on the contrary actions of Arizona in refusing to enter the seven-State pact.

This same group resents the increasing effort among river groups in trying to fix the fate of the dam on Utah, making it appear Utah is the pivotal State. They do not deny if it finally comes to six States giving the necessary authority for the operation of the Swing-Johnson bill as passed by Congress, then Utah is the pivotal State. But these persons do not agree that Arizona has shifted her responsibility upon Utah.

DERN PROPONENT

The pending fight may be clarified somewhat when Gov. Dern's message goes before the Legislature. The Governor is being lined up in stories published as one of the formidable proponents of Utah immediately joining the six-State pact, but this is not in harmony with a recent statement issued from his office to the effect that the whole matter rests more forcibly upon Arizona than ever or with the Governor's oft-repeated State's rights stand, that each of the States has inalienable rights on the river that even the Federal government cannot ignore.

To advocate a six-State pact, regardless of any action Arizona might take, would be to abrogate that doctrine. Similarly, William R. Wallace, president of the Utah Water Storage Commission, is credited in dispatches going out of Salt Lake as an advocate of the six-State pact. He, too, insists that Arizona join the others at once, although he declares the Swing-Johnson bill as passed amply protects the rights of Utah.

SMOOT OPPONENT

Much of the crystallization of the sentiments toward Utah's keep hands off right now emanates from Washington, led by Senator Reed Smoot. Pressure is being brought on legislators here to oppose the six-State pact. With the possible exception of Representative Colton the entire Utah delegation in Congress is following the Smoot lead.

A strong factor in the forthcoming controversy in the Legislature is seen in Senator Irvine, who will be floor leader and who was President of the 1927 Senate, who has announced that if the Swing-Johnson bill does amply protect Utah's rights he will work for and vote for the six-State pact. He was a member of the Legislature that rescinded the six-State pact.

There is little evidence of the element of "holding a club over Arizona" in the present line-up against the six-State pact. It is more on the belief that action under the Swing-Johnson law with six States joined would tend to delay rather than forward actual construction of the dam from the fact that court action is almost certain to develop on a six-State basis. The antisix-State pact group wants to see the whole business move along on a complete agreement among the seven States and a tri-State pact among the lower States.

That the fight will start right off the bump Monday seems certain now.

South Dakota Oil Discovery Booms Region

SIOUX CITY (Iowa) Jan. 12. (Exclusive)—Dispatches received today from Edgemont, S. D., where an oil "strike" was made Thursday, say that the flow of oil continues, though greatly reduced in quantity. Owners of the property and oil experts who have visited the place yesterday and today are confident this means the opening of a new field that will extend from South Dakota into Eastern Wyoming, fifteen miles west, and into Nebraska, twenty-five miles.

Owners of the oil leases surrounding the well busied themselves yesterday and today making sure that the leases are "air tight" while others are busy procuring leases on land more distant. At the same time landowners are holding back for more favorable offers.

Don't fear flu— fight it, say nurses

With countless cities menaced by a serious flu epidemic, nurses are everywhere urging us to keep safe by fighting the disease, not fearing it. Take every precaution, they warn, and guard particularly against germ-laden hands that may carry disease into your home. Wash the hands often, always before meals, using Lifebuoy, the toilet soap with an antiseptic, germ-removing, lather.

"Tommy Nichols, you're fighting!" "No, I'm not either, Mother."

Mr. and Mrs. Frank V. Nickels and their son

Illness? None for years in the Nickels family

"... and Lifebuoy's antiseptic lather was a big help," says Mrs. Frank V. Nickels

"YES, it does seem marvelous that we haven't had a sick day in our home in so many years," exclaimed Mrs. Nickels when we visited her.

"But you see," she added, "we've used Lifebuoy all that time—and Lifebuoy always is a big help in keeping away illness.

"Both my husband and I are loyal Lifebuoy fans. I find it excellent as a complexion soap and my husband says that a Lifebuoy shower is just like a tonic.

"As for the children, I've naturally made Lifebuoy the rule for them, too. Frank is now five and Tom three—and I've never seen two boys pack more fun and mischief into one day than they. But no matter where they play, or how dirty they get themselves, I always feel they're safe after they've had a sudsy washup in Lifebuoy's antiseptic lather."
—Mrs. Frank V. Nickels, 40 W. Albemarle Road, Lansdowne, Philadelphia, Pa.

Use this health-guarding toilet soap

Mrs. Nickel's experience is typical of the way countless mothers all over the country use Lifebuoy to help them keep sickness out of their homes.

Are you denying your family so vital a means of health protection? Hands can't escape germs. Just think of the many things you and your children must touch daily on which other hands may have left germs—such as money, doorknobs, telephones. The Life Extension Institute lists 27 germ diseases that hands may spread. Why take chances, when Lifebuoy's mild antiseptic lather removes germs? Keeps the skin healthier, too—prevents chapping.

Your family has to wash with some toilet soap anyway, so why not use Lifebuoy which gives added health protection—at no extra cost? You'll quickly learn to love Lifebuoy's pleasant extra-clean scent which tells you it purifies. It vanishes as you rinse. Adopt Lifebuoy as your regular toilet soap today.

LEVER BROS. CO., Cambridge, Mass.

Bright-eyed and sturdy—full of fun and always on the go—that's the kind of a boy Frank Nickels is. A typical Lifebuoy child—healthy and happy.

Resignation of Chief Due to Illness Accepted

I am forced by illness to hand this, my resignation, as director of the National Parks Service, to you, effective today. I am happy in the belief, however, that I can feel that the accomplishments of the service in recent years, and in particular in that it has seen the development of the national park system into one of real service to the public of our country, as was the purpose when the National Park Service was created.

During my connection with the Department of the Interior I extend my tribute to the splendid spirit of my associates in the Washington office and in the field [illegible] of my bureau, who have been so loyal, efficient and untiring in their helpfulness and without whom this result could not have been attained. No bureau chief has ever been more competent and faithful to duty than it has been my good fortune to have had associated with me in this national park work. May I at this time express my gratitude for the inspirational leadership and unfailing support of yourself and your predecessors, the Secretaries of the Interior under whom I have served.

I wish, too, there was some way in which I could thank my friends in Congress for the assistance, legislation and appropriations which have so generously been extended to me without which our efforts could have been largely futile.

Faithfully yours,

STEPHEN T. MATHER,
"Director."

WEST'S LETTER

The Secretary's acceptance read as follows:

"My Dear Mr. Mather: It is with the deepest regret that I have noted your resignation as director of the National Park Service, tendered the 6th inst. Since you ask it on the grounds of personal health considerations I feel that I must in justice to you decline to accept this resignation.

"The Federal government and the American people as a whole owe you a deep debt of gratitude for the many years of intensely patriotic self-sacrificing and constructive service you have rendered in fostering the cause of national parks and making these reservations readily available to all classes of our people.

"Going back over your years of service I find that when you entered the Department of the Interior in January, 1915, there was a National Park Service and no coordinated administration of the areas then. Those areas being administered as part of the miscellaneous work in the office of the Secretary. Largely through your personal efforts the establishment of the service was brought about and the work co-ordinated and put on a practical business-like basis. Since that time seven new parks have been created, including the only eastern park so far established and the only ones in our territories of Alaska and Hawaii. During the same time several existing parks have been enlarged to include important areas and their boundaries changed to make them capable of better administration.

"Two more (two other eastern park projects, the great Smoky Mountains and Shenandoah, are pending, approved by Congress and the President, and it is only a matter of time before their actual establishment will be consummated. This achievement also should be listed as part of the work of your administration.

"Especially noteworthy has been the manner in which you have brought about the installation of adequate public-utility facilities in the national parks through inducing private capital, without hope of immediate financial return upon their investments and in the face of grave hazards to undertake this work. It was solely through your personal achievement and the confidence your integrity inspired that this result was made possible. Absolute confidence in your administration has been shown also by the Congress of the United States in appropriating larger sums each year for park work.

"Under your splendid leadership the people of the nation have been awakened to the beauties and possibilities of the national parks and the necessity of conserving these areas for all time. So firmly have you built the foundations of the National Park Service that it is now bound to move firmly onward along the lines of greatest service to the people. Not the least of your achievements was the ability of attracting to the service an unusually high type of men whose loyalty to their parks and to their chief who formulated its policies will insure its continued success.

"Taken all in all you have achieved results that I believe no other man could have accomplished in the early days of organization and administration during the trying periods of World War and its aftermath.

"As Secretary of the Interior I am taking this opportunity on behalf of the millions of Americans who enjoy the national parks each year of assuring you of their grateful appreciation of the services you have rendered in developing and preserving these great national scenic areas.

"With sentiments of highest esteem and heartiest good wishes for your speedy return to health, believe me,

"Most sincerely, yours
"ROY O. WEST,
"Secretary of the Interior."

SENATE HARD HIT BY "FLU" WAVE

Alameda High School Head Injured When Ball Hits Spectacles

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12. (AP) Half a dozen Senators are ill recovering from influenza, grip, colds and other ailments.

Senator Watson of Indiana remained at home today with a severe cold which it is feared might develop into influenza, and Senator Howell of Nebraska, has been in Walter Reed Hospital suffering with an artery ailment ever since Congress convened before the holidays.

Senator Hale of Maine, chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee, has been obliged to stay at home with grip, but is expected to return to the Senate Monday. Senator Walsh of Montana, has been absent for several days with influenza, but is recovering.

Senator Larrazolo of New Mexico, another influenza victim, returned today.

Shaft to Honor ABC's Planned by Turk Ruler

CONSTANTINOPLE, Jan. 12. (AP) Turkey is to have a monument unmatched in the world—a monument erected to an alphabet. A marble shaft, bearing the twenty-eight letters of the newly adopted Latin ABC's engraved in gold, is to be erected on famed Seraglio Point at the entrance of the Golden Horn, on the spot where the Ghazi delivered his dramatic midnight speech on August 10, 1928.

There he gave his first public proclamation of the coming doom of the Arabic alphabet and the inauguration of occidental letters.

This date is to be a national holiday observed throughout Turkey as "Alphabet Day."

MRS. WOOD BACK IN DETROIT JAIL

Bondsmen Surrender Death Plot Suspect

DETROIT, Jan. 12. (AP)—Mrs. Grace W. Wood, charged with assault with intent to murder in connection with an asserted plot to slay her estranged husband, Ralph A. Wood, was returned to jail here tonight following her release this afternoon after she had furnished the equivalent of $100,000 bond.

Mrs. Wood was taken into custody after officials of the Southern Surety Company, which had posted a $50,000 bond for her, decided that deeds to property owned by Mrs. Wood, and said to represent $50,000, are inadequate.

Officials of the company thought the property worth less than $50,000 and Mrs. Wood surrendered to officers and was returned to jail.

Announcing
OLDSMOBILE FOR 1929

Now-finer than ever, but at a new Lower Price

Oldsmobile now offers new engineering advancements that increase performance and dependability—new style refinements that result in even more vivid beauty and even more complete luxury . . . all at a substantial reduction in price!

Twelve months ago, when the new Oldsmobile Six was introduced, engineers and critics pronounced it "two years ahead." And their predictions have been confirmed. No other car in Oldsmobile's field has even approached it in appearance, performance, or luxury of appointment. Yet Oldsmobile has made definite advances in all these qualities.

Last year, Oldsmobile's unprecedented value brought unprecedented acceptance from motor car buyers. Oldsmobile has used the savings effected by this tremendous volume to give buyers even more for their money—by building a finer car at a lower price.

It has long been Oldsmobile's aim to build a car for the American family that, at moderate cost, gratifies their finer tastes, as well as satisfies their every need. This purpose has been accomplished, more fully than ever before, in the car Oldsmobile now presents to the public at new, lower prices.

The fundamentals of Oldsmobile design have not been radically changed. It is the fine car that has already proved itself by millions of miles of dependable service in the hands of thousands of owners . . . but with added refinements.

Oldsmobile's big high-compression engine now delivers 62 horsepower. The piston-pins are now pressure lubricated—an engineering feature heretofore characteristic of high-priced cars. And this is typical of the fine-car standards which have been maintained throughout the design and manufacture of this finer Oldsmobile for 1929.

Interiors have been made more luxurious. Upholsteries are richer and more costly. Seat-cushions are now deeper and softer. Further, Oldsmobile has the wonderful new Fisher adjustable front seat, which may be moved instantly forward or backward to the exact position desired, simply by turning the seat-regulator. This feature, together with Oldsmobile's adjustable steering wheel, provides a new order of comfort for the driver.

Style touches include headlamps of new design mounted on chromium-plated standards, a new cadet-type visor, and an unusual selection of voguish new exterior color combinations.

COOLIDGE ACTS TO HELP TREATY

End of Senate Jam Urged at White House Meeting

President Wants Tangle With Cruiser Bill Ended

Friends of Reservations Keep Up Fight

the floor regarding the treaty as a sufficient guarantee of America's interpretation of the pact.

NOT FOR CRUISERS

The White House conference resulted in some frank discussion and it ended about where it started, with promises of hope only. Senator Borah informed Mr. Coolidge that he is not interested in whether the bill authorizing fifteen new cruisers is passed or not, and reminded the President that those who are talking against the treaty happen to be among those most interested in passage of the cruiser measure.

The Moses-Reed group are ready to compromise on their resolution of interpretation in favor of only a committee report stating that it is not considered that the treaty will infringe on or embarrass America's Monroe Doctrine. Senator Borah has expressed this view on the floor, but Secretary Kellogg and the Senator are unwilling to have a formal interpretative declaration made regarding the pact. Secretary Kellogg reiterated his views in this regard at the White House parley.

There appear to be good prospects that the petition will get more than thirty-three votes—the one-third necessary to defeat ratification of the pact—but the sponsors of the petition disclaim any intention of seeking to defeat the treaty. Their objective is to get an interpretative declaration of some form. The petition pledges the signers not to ask for a vote on adoption of a committee report should one be brought out. That is what is worrying Secretary Kellogg and Senator Borah but no assurance would be given tonight by the treaty sponsors that they will agree to a committee report even in the face of such a pledge.

SHORTRIDGE TALKS

Senator Borah held the treaty before the Senate again during the afternoon, with Senator Shortridge, Republican, California, taking up the cudgels in its behalf. Shortridge spoke at considerable length and was interrupted only by Senator Blaine, Republican, Wisconsin, who wants a resolution adopted declaring that Great Britain's note reserving freedom of action in the protection of her territories shall not be regarded as a reservation to the treaty.

Assailing the contention that an interpretation is necessary to protect America's right of self-defense under the pact, Shortridge insisted that the right of self-defense is inherent and cannot be abridged by any treaty.

DOCTRINE SECURE

In his address Senator Shortridge declared that "by entering into this treaty we surrender, we abandon no American right, no American policy."

"All the nations of the earth," he said, "have been authoritatively notified that we consider the Monroe Doctrine as embraced within and forming an integral part of our inherent right of self-defense. That doctrine rests secure on the solid rock where it was placed by James Monroe a century and six years ago.

"Let us hope, let us believe that, freely entered into, this world-embracing treaty will be sacredly observed by nations great and small, so that future generations enjoying the manifold benefits of peace will rise up and call us blessed. And shall we not be blessed? Hath not divine lips said 'Blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall be called the children of God?'

'And, if as we fondly hope, this nobly conceived treaty, this condemnation of war for the solution of international controversies—this renunciation of war as an instrument of national policy—shall be sacredly observed, then for a second time the morning stars shall sing together and all the sons of God shout for joy."

The petition, which was being circulated up to the hour of adjournment over Sunday, embodies a sentence that unless the Foreign Relations Committee makes some form of interpretative report, the petitioners will feel required to vote for an interpretative resolution. However, some of the signers have exempted themselves from the provision of this last stipulation.

WADSWORTH REGARDS CRUISERS MORE IMPORTANT

The bill for construction of fifteen new cruisers and an aircraft carrier, now pending in the Senate, is of much more importance to the peace and security of the United States than the Kellogg treaty, in the opinion of former Senator James W. Wadsworth of New York, who sailed yesterday aboard the Lasco liner City of Honolulu for a six weeks' sojourn in Hawaii.

"History has proven in every instance that the best guaranty of peace is an adequate defense against aggression," said Mr. Wadsworth. "These cruisers and the aircraft carrier would balance our fleet and bring it measurably nearer the 5-5-3 standard. Congress last year did a fine thing in passing the new Merchant Marine Act, thus making possible restoration of our merchant fleet. The Navy and the merchant marine go together; both of them maintained efficiently would insure our national safety and economic future.

"The Kellogg treaty will pass the Senate, I feel certain. The principle of renouncing war by mutual agreement of contracting powers is laudable, but frankly, I doubt its efficacy. The treaty involves us in European affairs and in no way insures us against war."

Mr. Wadsworth said he is taking an extended vacation from politics and is devoting his time to management of his farm, near Geneseo, N. Y.

The City of Honolulu yesterday flew for the first time at her masthead the pennant of the United State Naval Reserve, awarded her last Friday as the first Los Angeles-owned passenger liner to qualify as a unit of the new Merchant Marine Naval Reserve. She took out to Honolulu 255 passengers, representing practically every State in the Union.

PEER TO KEEP ON RANCHING

New Earl of Edmont at Alberta Farmhouse Says He Can't be Lured Back to England

CALGARY (Alta.) Jan. 12. (AP)—Frederick Joseph Trevelyan Perceval, Tenth Earl of Edmont, and Alberta rancher, does not propose to claim his seat in the House of Lords. A resident of Alberta for the past twenty-eight years, the new earl declared he intends to make his home permanently in this province.

When a call was made at the Perceval homestead, the nobleman with his 14-year-old son and heir, Frederick Joseph Moore Perceval, was discovered carrying out the task of clearing brush from part of his land. He was asked what his intentions are now that he has succeeded to the family honors.

"I've lived in Alberta for twenty-eight years," he declared. "I love my cattle and my horses and I intend to say here until I die."

The Earl said it may be necessary for him to return to Great Britain to attend to matters connected with the estate. This will not be for another year, he said, and once business has been completed he will return and continue his former mode of life in Alberta.

From the exterior the Alberta residence of the tenth Earl presents the usual appearance of a log-built ranch house. The interior, however, is far more comfortably furnished than is the averaged rancher's home. Well-filled book cases, pictures of eminent relatives and scenes of the old country lend to the place an air of gentility and old world charm.

The Earl and his son operate two ranches and posses fifty head of well-bred cattle and about thirty horses. He succeeded to the title by the death in London of Charles John Perceval, a distant relative.

REGAL VISIT TO AMERICA IN RUMORS

Reports Say King George May Meet President on Cruise to Gain Health

NEW YORK, Jan. 12. (Exclusive) Reports from a source said to be worthy of credence have reached New York of an extraordinary possibility in connection with the period of convalescence it is hoped King George of England is soon to enjoy. They are to the effect that a plan is under consideration for him to come to the United States and visit the President, as a sign of appreciation for the widespread and markedly sympathetic interest the American people have taken in the monarch's illness.

If he does come it will the first visit in history of a British reigning sovereign to the United States.

According to the reports a long cruise on a battleship is planned for King George to hasten his complete recovery. As a part of that cruise it is suggested that he cross the Atlantic and ascend the Potomac River to a point where a meeting with the President readily could take place.

Because of the state of the King's health such a journey could not be undertaken until some time after the inauguration of Herbert Hoover.

The British Embassy at Washington is credited in the reports with having suggested the visit. Those members of the royal family, including Queen Mary, in favor of the plan are understood to be urging the trip not only because of the good it might be expected to do King George's health, but also because of the beneficial effect it might be counted upon to produce in Anglo-American relations.

KING GAINING BUT QUEEN HAS COLD

LONDON, Jan. 12. (AP)—King George today enjoyed another restful day but his subjects were grieved to learn that his Queen, who has borne with quiet courage the countless burdens imposed by the long illness of her husband, is suffering from a cold. Her indisposition, however, is described as of a minor character and not sufficiently serious to justify issuance of a medical bulletin.

Her Majesty did not leave Buckingham Palace yesterday or today. Because of the cold weather it was deemed inadvisable for her to leave her rooms and risk exposure.

It is an extremely rare occurrence for Queen Mary to become even slightly indisposed. The news of her cold therefore aroused widespread sympathy and called attention to the long strain to which she has been subjected, since her royal consort was stricken two months ago.

On no one, perhaps, have the burdens resulting from the King's sickness fallen heavier than on the Queen. Her Majesty played a great part in nursing the King during the critical days. She has been at his side early and late, seeing to every detail for his comfort and helping the other nurses.

"Best soap for our hard water" says Mrs. E. C. Bell of Los Angeles

"No wonder everybody around here is talking about Rinso. It's the best soap ever for our hard water! I'll never forget the first time I tried it. Talk about surprises. The wash was white as white can be—yet all I did was soak and rinse!

"I'll never go back to old-fashioned soaps again—because I can see how the scrubless Rinso way saves the clothes. And how good it is to my hands, too!

"I use Rinso for dishes, and for all household cleaning. I like the suds—they're so thick and creamy. And it saves me the cost of a water softener."

MRS. E. C. BELL, 2703 S. St. Andrews Place, Los Angeles, Calif.

Endorsed by makers of 36 washers

Thousands of washing machine demonstrators use this famous hard-water soap to show their machines at their best.

And the makers of 36 leading washers say, "Use Rinso for safety, and for whiter washes!"

Great for tub washing; soaks out the dirt and saves the hands.

So economical, too... because it's granulated. One cupful of Rinso gives more suds—does more washing—than two cupfuls of lightweight, puffed-up soaps. Even in the hardest water!

Remember, only Rinso can give Rinso whiteness. Get the BIG package!

KELLY PAROLE TO BE FOUGHT

Mother of Raymond Writes Appeal to Fitts

She Urges Convicted Slayer be Held in Prison

Every Day of Term Should be Served, She Says

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 12. (AP)—A dramatic plea that Paul Kelly, film actor, be denied parole from San Quentin prison, where he is serving a five-year sentence for manslaughter in connection with the death of Ray Raymond, stage actor, was made today by Mrs. Charlotte Cedarbloom of Oakland, mother of the dead actor.

Kelly was charged with the slaying of Raymond in a fist fight in Los Angeles over the latter's wife, Dorothy Mackaye, former actress, who recently was paroled from San Quentin after serving ten months for concealing facts of the killing.

SILENCE BROKEN

Kelly will be eligible for parole this year. Mrs. Cedarbloom today revealed that she has broken silence for the first time since the death of her son in a letter to Buron Fitts, District Attorney of Los Angeles county. In the letter she asks that Fitts oppose a parole for Kelly. Her action, she declared, is the result of a statement made by Dorothy Mackaye on her release from San Quentin New Year's Day in which the former stage actress declared that both she and Kelly are innocent of Raymond's death.

"Please oppose any attempt to free Paul Kelly one hour earlier than the term he has been given for the death of my son," Mrs. Cedarbloom wrote.

"PETTY" SENTENCE

"Kelly," she stated, "had been given the sentence meted out to petty thieves when his crime 'in murdering a good man and faithful son' was much more heinous."

Her son's death left her penniless, she says. "I was forced to sell my home and all my belongings when my son was slain. His murderer should not be given clemency," wrote Mrs. Cedarbloom.

Raymond, his mother revealed, had changed his name from Cedarbloom for stage purposes. Mrs. Cedarbloom resides in Oakland with a sister.

ZEPPELIN GOING TO ARCTIC

Giant German Craft Will Make Four Trips Into Far North on Exploratory Ventures

[Copyright, 1929, by North American Newspaper Alliance.]

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11. (Exclusive)—The giant German dirigible, Graf Zeppelin, will make four trips into the Far North this spring in co-operation with a scientific expedition to be headed by Dr. Fridtjof Nansen, explorer, according to a report received here by the Department of Commerce from H. R. Buckley, United States Trade Commissioner at Paris.

The expedition will set out in April and the German airship will take up the work of exploration abandoned by Gen. Umberto Nobile when the Italian airship Italia was wrecked on an ice floe last summer. Three long-range trips into the Arctic will be made by the Graf Zeppelin, Commissioner Buckley stated.

On its fourth trip the Graf Zeppelin will be used in an attempt to blaze a trail through Siberia to Alaska to ascertain the feasibility of using that route for regular flights between Europe and America.

It is expected that the Graf Zeppelin will make two trans-Atlantic flights this summer, despite the statement of her commander, Dr. Hugo Eckener, that her motors are not sufficiently powerful to make her of value as a regular transoceanic carrier.

The Graf Zeppelin was limited in size by the hangar of the Zeppelin works at Friedrichshafen, in which she was constructed, Dr. Eckener said. The Department of Commerce has been informed that a much larger hangar is being erected at Friedrichshafen and it is expected here that construction of a larger and more powerful successor to the Graf Zeppelin will begin before the year is over.

UTILITIES QUIZ WILL CONTINUE WEDNESDAY

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12. (AP)—The Federal Trade Commission will resume its investigation into public power utilities Wednesday when additional testimony will be taken on its publicity phases. W. H. Onken, Jr., of New York, editor of the Electrical World; Henry C. Spurr of Rochester, N. Y., editor of public utility reports, and A. Stedman Hills of Washington, D. C., business manager of the same publication, have been summoned to testify.

MELINE INVESTMENT GROUP FILES PAPERS

SACRAMENTO, Jan. 12. (AP)—The Meline Realty Investments, Ltd., organized to carry on a general real estate, insurance, building, brokerage and loan business in Los Angeles with an authorized capital of $15,000,000, filed articles of incorporation with Secretary of State Jordan today. Directors named are Frank L. Meline, Donald M. Welch, A. O. Hill, L. M. White and Walter H. Hewicker.

YOUTH FOUND GUILTY IN MURDER OF DOCTOR

YORK (Pa.) Jan. 12. (AP)—A verdict of second-degree murder was the finding of the jury tonight in the case of Wilbert G. Hess, 18 years of age, for his part in the killing of Nelson D. Rehmeyer, asserted "powwow" doctor.

TARIFF HEARING LABORS PUSHED

House Committee Finishes With Two Schedules

More Than Score Testify on Rates for Glass

Leading Metal Items Listed for Tomorrow

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12. (AP)—By working overtime the House Ways and Means Committee, considering tariff revision, today concluded hearings on the earthenware and glassware schedules and Monday will begin taking testimony on the important metal items, on which more than 100 witnesses have asked to be heard.

More than a score of witnesses paraded before the committee today seeking readjustments, increases and decreases in rates on all kinds of plate and window glass. As in the hearings on the first schedule, importers and manufacturers were found in disagreement.

A proposal by J. W. Price of the Benjamin Schottland and Vitris Company, Inc., New York, importers of Belgian and Jugo-Slavian glass, for a reduction of approximately 50 per cent in existing duties on various sizes of window glass, was followed by a concerted effort on the part of the manufacturers to have the tariff increased.

Mr. Price contended that present duties on window glass are so high as to limit his companies' market to the eastern seaboard area and that manufacturers have raised their prices 7 per cent in the last three years in the face of an unchanged import market. Solomon argued that improved methods have curtailed labor costs in this country approximately 33 1-3 per cent and that the foreign glass is urgently needed.

William L. Monro, Pittsburgh, representing the Window-Glass Manufacturers' Association, sought increases in the window-glass rates on the ground that raw material and labor costs are much higher in the United States and because of freight rates limiting the market.

Representative Garner of Texas, ranking Democrat on the committee, who cross-examines nearly every witness seeking increases, developed from his witness that his company paid more than $22,000,000 in stock dividends in the last ten years.

BROTHERS IN BAD ON FAKE BILLS

Raised Money Causes Two to Get Prison Term While Two Ask Probation

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 12. (Exclusive)—The get-rich-quick dream of four brothers from an Oregon farm ended today in the courtroom of Federal Judge St. Sure when the two older brothers, Douglas and Evan Pritchard, 29 and 24 years of age, were sentenced to five years in a Federal penitentiary for raising 315 $1 bills to $10 bills, and the two younger brothers, Lyle, 18, and Paul, 16, were ordered held another week while an application for probation is investigated.

The youths, it is said, raised the bills at their Mlatchly (Or.) farm and then came to San Francisco to spend the money.

APACHE MASSACRE FEARED

Member of Fimbres Expedition Returns Half Mad; Mexican Executive Orders Official Action

DOUGLAS (Ariz.) Jan. 12. (AP)—A lone horseman, Policeman Jesus Valdez, commissioned by the presidente of Agua Prieta, Mex., today rode through the snow-covered Sierra Madre Mountains, back-tracking a returned member of the Fimbres expedition of eleven men which officials fear has been massacred by a wild band of Apache Indians.

First news of the punitive expedition led by Francisco Fimbres, Mexican rancher, which set out from Agua Prieta eight days ago to wipe out the band of marauding Indians, was received last night when Ramon Quejada, one of the expedition, was brought back to the town half delirious by a Chinese vegetable grower. From the disjointed story of Quejada it was learned that he left the expedition last Wednesday morning forty miles east of Rusbayo.

The expedition, which set out on horseback, led by Fimbres, to avenge the death of his wife, killed by the Apache band, and in the hope of finding his son, kidnaped by the Indians in an ambush two years ago, should have returned several days ago, according to its plans. Quejada said the expedition had entered the Sierras through the Batepito Gap before he left it. Fear was expressed along the border that the party may have been surprised by the Apaches as they forced their way through the deep snow.

Presidente Rogerio Loreta expressed grave fears for the safety of the expedition with the return of Quejada. He ordered Valdez to "start immediately and back-trail Quejada into the Sierras and report to me in Agua Prieta the 14th inst. This is authority for you to commandeer transportation." The message reached Valdez at dusk and he left to overtake the Fimbres expedition at once.

Cowboys and soldiers were amassed at strategic points early today and President Loreto said that he might lead additional forces south before Valdez reports.

Dry Leader Says State Wets Had Better be Good

SAN JOSE, Jan. 12. (AP)—Should the wet forces succeed in introducing into the Legislature a bill, now being whispered, which makes it more difficult for an officer to search a building for liquor, they "may wish they hadn't," T. M. Wright, author of the State dry act, predicted today.

In the event of the bill passing, Wright asserted, the drys have prepared a counter move. He warned that the drys are prepared to make the penalty for possession of liquor heavier. At present only one offender out of ten is adequately punished, Wright said.

"The drys are not looking for a fight," the father of the Wright Act stated. "We have the votes, however, and are awaiting the move of the opposition."

PRIZE CONTEST

$100.00 CASH each for Best Letter and for Best Slogan

Many Extra Prizes

We are willing to pay liberally for slogans and letters to be used in advertising a very unusual product. Even if you don't capture one of the capital prizes, you still have an opportunity to win one of the minor awards, of which there will be several.

Details regarding the nature and purpose of our product cannot be given in the limited space available here. Be assured, however, that it is something of extreme importance to every human being—something which has the endorsement of prominent scientific authorities—something that will repay you well for the small amount of time needed to find out about it.

All we ask is for you to come to our office. Here—without cost, without obligation, without inconvenience, you can easily get full particulars concerning our contest and our product. And your visit should furnish you with many valuable ideas for use in preparing a prize-winning letter or slogan.

Are You Sick or in Pain?

If so, a visit to our office may mean a great deal more to you than if you won a first prize of $100 cash. If you are being tortured by the pangs of arthritis, rheumatism, neuritis, anemia or other disease, and could find some way to obtain relief at very small cost—that would mean a great deal more to you than a gift of $100—wouldn't it?

How about your blood pressure? Have you had it tested lately? Do you know that insurance records show that thousands of men and women—seemingly strong and healthy—have high blood pressure and don't even know it? Do you know that in mortality tables persons with high blood pressure (who may be otherwise sound and free from disease) have a rate of mortality from 69% to 145% higher than persons with normal blood pressure? We can tell you of a method of reducing high blood pressure which extensive tests have shown to be marvelously efficient.

Have you, or any member of your family, had the "flu" lately? Isn't it worth spending a little time to learn about something which, in a great many cases, has quickly relieved the condition of weakness after influenza and other diseases?

By coming to our office you will be given the opportunity—if you so desire—to confer with a graduate physician on these and other matters pertaining to health—without costing you a single penny. Following this conference, you will be invited to listen to an interesting, inspiring talk on health and long life.

2 FREE LECTURES DAILY
(Except Saturdays and Sundays)
2 P. M. and 8 P. M.
SUBJECT:
"Lost Youth—How to Regain it"

Talks will be given only by a well-informed, well-qualified dynamic speaker, who has a new and powerful message. Rules of the contest, a list of prizes and other details about the cash awards will also be given to all who attend. Admission is absolutely free. No collection, no obligations, no "stringa." We suggest that you plan to be at our office either at 1:30 or 7:30, or even earlier, as this will allow time for a talk with our medical staff—for which there is no charge.

Come tomorrow. It may mean adding many years to your life,

LEE'S FERRY BRIDGE TO OPEN SCENIC BEAUTIES OF ARIZONA

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12. (Exclusive)—The Department of the Interior has received reports to the effect that Lee's Ferry bridge in Arizona will be completed and inspected about February 1, next.

Recent reports from the field are to the effect that the structure of the bridge has been completed and that all that remains to the completion of the bridge proper is the stripping of the forms of the concrete floor of the bridge and the painting of the steel work. This will be finished by February 1. The approaches to the bridge, however, are not yet completed. Work is being pushed actively on these approaches so they will be finished and ready for a formal opening of the bridge in the early spring.

The new highway, which will be to an extensive area of the United States what the Panama Canal was to a continent, will be in operation by the time tourist automobile travel gets under way in the spring and summer activity of the region develops. A route of communication between areas that have heretofore been shut off from one another will then be in operation over one of the highest and most picturesque bridge sin the world.

STATE SEES DOUBLE OF FIERY CROSS

Klan Chartering Greek Letter Fraternity Held Ruse by Prosecutor

NEW YORK, Jan. 12. (Exclusive) Signs burst forth tonight indicating that the Ku Klux Klan has stalemated the State of New York with a flaming double cross.

The State, by the Walker law, attempted to make New York uncomfortable for the knights of the old-fashioned nightgown and pillow slip but it appears now there has been another sort of slip and the Klansmen have managed to incorporate themselves under the laws of the State, without revealing their membership lists.

Dist.-Atty. Banton is beginning an investigation to determine what can be done about it—if anything.

Banton declared today he was instituting an inquiry at the request of former Secretary of State Moses, into the changing of the name of a Greek-letter society, chartered by the State, from Alpha Phi Sigma, Inc., to "the Knights and Ladies of the Ku Klux Klan, Inc."

FRATERS IN URBE

The Greet letter society was not required to file its membership lists under a provision which exempted the Masons, Knights of Columbus, labor and college organizations. The law was aimed at the Klan originally providing that all other organizations which require an oath must file such lists.

Now it appears the Klan incorporated as a college organization and then switched back to its own name.

"I was then under impression," declared Clarence S. Nettles, former counsel of the organization, "that the Ku Klux Klan thereby was chartered by the State of New York."

GREEK MEETS SHEET

Under the Greek fraternity name, the organization was approved, according to law, by Supreme Court Justice Guy. The charter was issued September 12, 1923. At the time the name was changed, on October 30, 1925, no Supreme Court action was required. Nettles acted as counsel when the change was made.

But Banton intends to rip the sheets from the exponents of the collegiate incognito if possible. He has assigned Asst. Dist.-Atty. McDermott of the appeal bureau to take charge of the investigation.

All subpoenas have been issued for L. Smith Clark, president of the "fraternity" at the time the name was changed, and five directors. Nettles also is to be questioned.

REPARATION BONDS MAKE FOR ANXIETY

Delay in Nomination of American Experts Causes Worry in Paris

PARIS, Jan. 12. (AP)—Delay in the nomination of the American experts to serve on the new reparations revision committee and reports from the United States that the American financial markets may not be open to German reparation bonds are causing some apprehension as to the outcome of the new effort to wind up the war problems. Floating of railroad and industrial bonds on the world's markets is regarded in reparation circles here as one of the essential features of the compromise in view.

It is commented in official quarters that France has made all the concessions thus far to put into effect the policy of Locarno and it is said that France can make no more without receiving an equivalent.

Work of the experts' committee, however, is expected to proceed without modification, whatever may be the American attitude, because the question of placing the bonds can arise only when they have been commercialized. Then the situation in the financial markets as well as the attitude of the Washington government may change.

BRITISH FINANCIERS ACCEPT APPOINTMENT

LONDON, Jan. 12. (AP)—Sir Charles Addis and Sir Basil Blackett, financial experts, were officially stated today to have agreed to act as the British deputy members of the committee of experts which will frame proposals for final settlement of the reparations question.

Sir Josiah Stamp and Lord Revelstoke are the two British members of the committee.

SURVEY HITS SNAG NICARAGUAN CANAL

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12. (AP)—The Senate spent some time today considering the Edge resolution for a survey to determine the feasibility and cost of a canal through Nicaragua, but objections from Senator McMaster, Republican, South Dakota, caused the measure to go over until next week for a final vote.

YOUNG PILOT KILLED

FLYERS PLAN TO "RIDE AND TIE"

Jensen and Burgin to Vie in Endurance Solo

CURTISS FIELD (N. Y.) Jan. 12. (AP)—Martin Jensen and Emil Burgin are to make a "try-try-again" attempt to establish a new solo endurance flight record and bring back the world nonrefueling endurance crown to America next week.

First Jensen, Dole race Hawaiian flyer, will go up until he or the plane gives out. Then, as soon as mechanics have overhauled the ship, Burgin will go up to see if he can do better. When he is through, if a world's record has not been achieved, both men will go aloft together in a final attempt.

MISS McFARLAND DIES

RAILWAYS FIGHT FOR NEW ROUTE

Santa Fe and Espee Seeking Western Pacific Plan

FRESNO, Jan. 12. (AP)—Attempts of the Southern Pacific and Santa Fe attorneys to force Col. J. W. Williams, chief engineer of the Western Pacific line, to furnish the proposed route of the line into Fresno, and a compilation of train service over the proposed route featured a hearing today upon the Western Pacific's application for a writ of public convenience and necessity for the line.

Opposing attorneys today introduced a map, prepared by Southern Pacific engineers, showing what was purported to be the entrance channel. Williams, asked whether the map was approximately correct, said: "yes, approximately."

Col. E. W. Mason, vice-president and general manager of the Western Pacific, testified that during the peak season there will be a total of four freight and one passenger trains operated between Fresno and Stockton with one train between Fresno and Kings River.

NUDITY IN ART GETS SETBACK

Dressed Males to Replace Veiled Women on Statues for Westinghouse

PITTSBURGH (Pa.) Jan. 12. (AP)—The Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph in a copyrighted story today, said two fully dressed male figures will be substituted for statues of two women garbed only in waving veils on a monument to George Westinghouse, late Pittsburgh industrialist, to be erected in Schenly Park this summer.

The change in plans, the newspaper said, is made because of differences of opinion as to the various values of art and nudity.

The monument will cost $300,000.

'ARMY' EXPECTS LEGAL BATTLE

Gen. Booth's Declination on Retirement Expected

Struggle Then Probable on Status of Council

Evangeline Appears Tired as Result of Parley

LONDON, Jan. 12. (AP)—Salvation Army circles in London are inclined to believe that Gen. Bramwell Booth's reply Monday to the high council's proposal that he retire voluntarily will be a declination and so precipitate a legal fight for retention of the army's leadership.

The possibility of legal complications has been foreshadowed by the recent appearance of William A. Jowitt, former Member of Parliament and a widely known lawyer, on the scene in behalf of the general.

Army Solicitor Forst has been in attendance at Sunbury since the council convened, but has not been allowed to enter the council chamber. Advice has been taken, however, from time to time on questions of procedure and on each step that the council has taken in order to avoid any technical slip-up which might form the basis of litigation.

Any legal struggle on the question would revolve on the issue of the legality of the summoning of the council. Those who have been supporting Gen. Booth insist that the council was summoned under the wrong clause of the army's supplemental deed.

The evidence of grief which Evangeline Booth, American commander and leader of the reform group, showed yesterday at her brother's cottage in Southwold, is said by a member of her party to have arisen from news of her brother's wasted appearance and other evidence that he appeared a very sick man.

She also is stated to have felt grieved that she was unable to see him in an effort to stave off the expected legal fight which Mrs. Booth and Catherine Booth gave her to understand might be forthcoming.

When Evangeline Booth entered the council meeting at Sunbury today she looked tired and appeared to be feeling the strain of the prolonged negotiations.

COMMITTEE OFFERS REPORT TO COUNCIL

SUNBURY-ON-THAMES, Jan. 12. (AP)—The high council of the Salvation Army today listened to the report of the committee which yesterday asked Gen. Bramwell Booth to retire as commander-in-chief. It then adjourned until Monday or Tuesday morning, when the general's answer is expected.

An attempt by Dr. Herbert Hart, a staff captain and one of the oldest members of the army, to lay before the council an alternative plan for solution of the difficulty, was rebuffed today. He was halted at the entrance to the grounds at Sunbury Court. The captain said that he had come unofficially, as a friend of Gen. Booth, to protest against the movement to force retirement.

"My plan," he explained to inquirers, "is that the general, instead of being dismissed, should be promoted to the rank of field marshal. Under him I would have two councils, one with administrative and executive and the other with advisory powers."

The captain asserted that in opposing retirement of the general he represented the sentiment of the rank and file of the army.

DEATH LAID ON ANTISEPTIC

Detroit Correction House Fatality Attributed to Disinfectant Used on Clothing

DETROIT, Jan. 12. (Exclusive)—A disease preventative, nitro-benzol, it was discovered today, was the poison that killed one newly released prisoner from the House of Correction here and laid low four others. The preparation, a disinfectant, sprayed on clothes of departing inmates, caused the men to turn black and one to die for want of air.

As the discovery was made, the fifth victim, Henry Raski, was carried to a hospital gasping for breath. Oxygen was administered immediately and a blood transfusion to supply new blood in place of the poisoned, was made. His condition is critical.

Analysis of blood of one of the men showed nitro-benzol, the basic ingredient in the disinfectant, to be the cause.

The disinfectant has been used for years at the institution and never before has caused any ill effects.

It is believed the clothing absorbed part of the poison in the prescription and this in turn was taken in by the skin. The poison acted on the blood corpuscles in a way that rendered them unable to take up oxygen. The victim then found difficulty in breathing and the now black blood coursing through his system soon tinged his skin.

NEWSPAPER QUITS RADIO BROADCAST

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 12. (AP)—Declaring that newspaper publishing and radio broadcasting are two different forms of public service and that the St. Louis Globe Democrat does not care to mix the two, E. Lansing Ray, president, today announced the newspaper's withdrawal from radio station KMOX, the "Voice of St. Louis."

GIRD-WORLD OFFER MADE TO GOEBEL

Wichita Paper Will Give $10,000 to Start Fund, Announcement States

WICHITA (Kan.) Jan. 12. (AP)—Max M. Levand, publisher of the Wichita Beacon, tonight told the Associated Press he will guarantee $10,000 to form the basis of a fund for a nonstop flight around the world by Col. Arthur Goebel, noted Pacific and transcontinental flyer.

The flight must be made in a Wichita-built airplane, Mr. Levand stipulated.

Col. Goebel announced Wednesday he will begin to prepare for such a flight as soon as he recovers from a recent operation.

An offer of $50,000 from William P. Jahn of Milwaukee, Wis., has not yet been accepted by Goebel, the flyer said.

MEXICO INCREASES DUTY ON GASOLINE

MEXICO CITY, Jan. 12. (AP)—The director general of customs today notified all customs offices that the duty on imported gasoline has been increased 4 cents (Mexican) per liter. The proceeds will be used for road construction.

SHERIFFS BACK PENSION BILL

Measure to be Introduced in Legislature

Fixed Rate of Pay Provided Under Plan

Senator Lyons Will Handle Proposed Law

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 12. (Exclusive)—Legislation providing for the retirement of sheriffs, undersheriffs and all deputies of the criminal and civil departments will be introduced before the completion of the second half of the present bifurcated legislative session as the result of action taken today at a gathering of the Sheriffs' Undersheriffs' and Civil Deputies' Association of California at the Whitcomb Hotel.

The bill will be introduced by Senator Lyons of Los Angeles county and will differ from the average run of pension measures in that it will provide for a monthly pension of not less than $100 per month and not more than $150 per month. The usual pension measure provides one-half of salary at retirement.

COMPULSORY PLAN

The measure will make retirement compulsory at 65 years of age, but will not allow retirement until the age of 55.

The gathering resolved without dissent to further measures which will standardize procedure in the various sheriff's offices of the State, promote co-operation between the various counties and work toward mutual solution of common problems and increased efficiency.

Although no definite action was taken, the association expressed the thought that co-operation between the municipal and county authorities will continue to grow in application, particularly in relation to the proposed State-wide teletype system broached for police departments.

MEETING DATES SET

It was voted to hold the next State-wide meeting at Sacramento March 14, 15 and 16, at which time contact will be available with members of the Legislature then in session, and at which time the measures which the association hopes to see enacted into law "for the good of the people of California."

Members of the executive committee attending today's meeting were Donald Cox, president, Undersheriff of Sacramento county; H. R. Youngblood, secretary and treasurer, San Joaquin county; J. C. Spaulding, San Francisco county; Eugene Biscailuz, Los Angeles county; George J. Overholt, Fresno county; William Veale, Contra Costa county.

As honorary guests were Sheriff Fitzgerald of San Francisco and Capt. Jewell of the Los Angeles office.

DRY AGENTS GET ODD NOTEBOOK

Cryptic Name and Money Entries Scheduled for Federal Inquiry

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 12. (Exclusive)—Louis (Dutch) Baker's notebook intrigued the curiosity of Federal officials today. Following Baker's arrest yesterday in the Sunset district, together with liquor valued at $90,000, raiders found a notebook which had these cryptic entries:

"Sheriff, $300.

"Deputy game warden, $250.

"Beach crew, $450."

There were others. The aggregate ran to $35,000.

"Now what could those possibly mean?" pondered Prohibition Administrator Bohner. "We will investigate."

TEN HURT IN TANGLE OF FIVE AUTOS

Four Seriously Injured as Machines Come Together at Palo Alto Intersection

PALO ALTO, Jan. 12. (AP)—Five automobiles piled up here today at the intersection of Oak Grove and Middlefield Road, Menlo Park, injuring ten persons, four of them seriously.

The seriously injured are Milton Tenney, 20 years of age, of Seattle, who suffered a fractured skull, broken ribs and internal injuries.

Myron Tenney, 18, brother of Milton, both jaws broken, lips torn away, cut and bruised.

Jack Greenwall, 19, Honolulu, fractured left knee and chin, cut and bruised.

Walter Ackerman, 15, Honolulu, broken right thigh, cuts and bruises.

All are students at the Menlo School for Boys.

A car driven by Greenwall in which the Tenney brothers and Ackerman were riding, struck a machine driven by T. J. Bass of San Francisco, who was cut and bruised, the police report said.

The injured were taken to the Palo Alto Hospital, where Milton Tenney's condition is said to be critical.

CHICAGO, Jan. 12. (AP)—A surgical suite in the proposed $5,000,000 international medical center at Tokio, Japan, is to be a memorial to the late Edgar A. Bancroft, Chicago, one-time Ambassador to Japan. A Chicago committee will raise a $25,000 fund for the memorial.

GRIM MEN HUNT MAIL ROBBERS

Trio Gets $20,000 Pay-Roll Cash in Colorado

Youthful Driver of Truck Supplies Only Clew

Search Leads Posse Into Mountainous Area

TRINIDAD (Colo.) Jan. 12. (AP)—Posses of grim-faced, heavily armed men tonight searched the rugged mountainous country near the Huerfano county and Las Animas county coal fields for three pay-roll robbers, whose loot in a mail robbery today was $20,000.

The peace officers have little to guide them in their difficult search and the rough trails and roads over which they ranged added to their difficulties. Their only information about the robbery came from Charles Festi, 18-year-old driver of the mail truck from which the robbers took the pay roll intended for the Victor-American Fuel Company mine at Delagua, Colo.

Festi was taking his father's place today, he related, and got the mail for Delagua at the Colorado and Southern Railroad station at Ludlow. Midway between Hastings and Delagua three masked men on foot covered him with revolvers and motioned for him to drive his truck to the side of the highway. They blindfolded, bound and gagged him and placed him in while they drove the machine to a desolate spot in the hills.

Festi said he heard the men ripping open the mail pouches.

After ordering him to continue on his way to Delagua, "when he was able," the youth told Sheriff's officers, the three robbers left him.

JAPANESE GRIP LOOSENED

Union of Chinese Nation Seen as Climax of American Diplomacy's Success in East

BY EUGENE J. YOUNG

TOKIO, Jan. 12. (Exclusive)—Ten years ago Japanese troops occupied strategic points of Eastern Siberia and threatened to absorb everything from Lake Baikal eastward. Manchuria and Shantung were their dominion and Peking was ruled by the Anfu Club, a Japanese organization which picked the government of China.

The Yangtse Valley Great Britain was taking advantage of the weakness of China to establish "spheres" of influence. What was true in the north and the south, where Japan and Britain claimed primacy, the Anglo-Japanese Alliance was there and was the decisive factor in the whole situation, because we were working with it. China is united under the National government of modern China, led by a popular man-Sun Yat-sen. All the powers except Japan admitted that the country could be freed from outside control. Civil strife in the north has practically ceased.

Japan has been completely repudiated by China. The Anglo-Japanese alliance has gone into the discard.

One of the most remarkable chapters in the world's history probably such a chapter has ever been written before except during a great war.

The chapter has been written in American diplomacy. Except for our decisive intervention, by diplomatic coups but by display of readiness to meet military power by equal military power, these things would not have happened.

Woodrow Wilson started it. First he began the construction of the fleet which would have been the equal of any which could have been sent against it. Then he challenged the aggressions of Japan in a successful challenged the European occupation of Eastern Siberia.

The Russian bolting broke up the Japanese alliance, as the price of Britain's abandonment of naval supremacy to bind the other powers to the doctrine of a free China.

Hughes completed the work in China by backing the Nationalists at critical moments and by breaking down the "unofficial" which had given Japan such a grip on China that she could not let it free while they were at war.

To the credit are Secretary of State Lansing, Hughes and Root, who conducted the negotiations and helped to shape the policies that, of course, further back than Hay, who as Secretary of State enunciated the doctrine of the open door in China, and President Roosevelt, who backed him up.

WRONG OUT POLICIES

Since the first activities of the Japanese government have been more than most people realized. First, was one of the country in the Far East would not do to have any power in that region or any combination of powers which might try to shut us out. It is our policy to have three independent powers which would act as a check upon each and be free from outside domination. A strong Japan, a strong China and a strong Russia would prevent any one from dominating the Pacific. It has been realized for some time that the new great powers of the world will be found in the hundreds of millions of China and that in Siberia there is a vast amount of natural resources which we want to tap as our own Japan's plans in China by taking issue with the worst of the notorious twenty-one demands of 1915, but in the Paris peace conference we and the other nations were confronted with a Japan which held Manchuria, Shantung and Eastern Siberia.

At Paris we were compelled to advise the Chinese to agree to hand over Shantung to Japan (which they refused to do) because that was part of the deal which kept Japan in the war on the side of the Allies. But at the same time we put forward what was known as "the bankers' consortium," which provided that all financing and concessions in China should be shared by America, Britain, France and Japan—thus putting an end to Japan's claim to priority. It was more than a year before Japan ratified this agreement but she finally found she could not stand out against pressure.

Later on, this particular policy of Washington brought about the abrogation of the Lansing-Ishii agreement under which we had recognized Japan's special position on the mainland of East Asia (her so-called Monroe Doctrine) and, after that, the abrogation of the Japanese-British alliance.

TRIED TO REMAIN

Next came the clash over Siberia which resulted in a long series of diplomatic exchanges of a stern nature so far as this country was concerned. We held that there was no warrant for infringing on the sovereign rights of Russia simply because it had been felt necessary to send an international expedition to prevent the spread eastward of the Red menace. But Japan occupied the region of Lake Baikal, in the center of Siberia, Harbin, the great railroad junction, the mouth of the Amur River and Vladivostok. The situation became so tense that there were dangerous clashes between American and Japanese troops.

Tokio's imperialists counted upon support from Britain and France in carrying out their aggressions. But there were several factors which America was able to use with the utmost advantage.

(1.) Our naval program which if carried out, would have made us the greatest sea power. Not only Japan, but Britain, wanted to halt this program. (2.) Our financial power, which could not be ignored by Britain or France. (3.) The insistence of the British dominions that the Anglo-Japanese Alliance should cease and that Japan's ambitions should be curbed.

To these factors was chiefly due the success of the Washington Conference of 1921-22. It was a triumph for the American policy in East Asia and a defeat for Japan and the other imperial powers.

The Anglo-Japanese alliance was first thrown into the discard. All the powers solemnly subscribed to the Hay Doctrine of the territorial integrity and administrative liberty of China; and it was set down that Shantung and Manchuria were part of China and not to be alienated by Japan. It was also decided that Japan must completely quit Siberia and leave it to the Russians.

These pledges, however, were far from a settlement of the problem of a free China. The imperial powers, instead of putting forth their claims directly to their "spheres of influence," undertook to accomplish their objects by supporting Chinese "tuchuns" who would look out for their interests. Japan had her Chang-tso Lin in Manchuria and her Chang Tsung-chang in Shantung and her Anfu Club in Peking and dominated the north. Britain had her various "tuchuns" in the Yangtse Valley and made her own deals with the northern coalition. France had her own arrangements in the south.

Meanwhile, China's power to assert herself was curbed by old treaties limiting her customs revenues to 5 per cent, tying up other revenues, and giving foreigners a special status in their financial, trade and other relations.

AID NATIONALISTS

It was this situation which President Coolidge had to face. China had been thrown into chaos by the intrigues of the powers and the wars of the tuchuns and there was pressure on us to join in an intervention which would have kept the country under foreign rule for an indefinite time.

We have had our difficulties. Britain and others have pressed for intervention. Britain and Japan have put forward plans to divide the nation, with capitals at Nanking and Peking; the Japanese have blocked efforts to give China more customs revenue, the British have used their financial power to check the Nationalists and us. But in the end our backing of the Nationalists has been decisive in their favor.

Here are some of the plans we have defeated: The British one, following the Nanking incident, to blockade the Yangtse River and so keep the southerners from moving north; the Japanese, for full occupation of Shantung; that of the imperial powers to halt the recognition of the Chinese Nationalist, and the Japanese to declare Manchuria free from the rest of China.

Our final recognition of the Nationalist government has forced all the others to come into line, except Japan. We are supporting the Chinese plan to put new customs duties into effect February 1, which will give sufficient revenue for a strong government. Our campaign is practically won.

Protect Health...Increase Comfort ...with Celotex Insulation

SAFEGUARD your family's health and increase their living comfort all year 'round by insulating your house with Celotex.

In old homes and new this remarkable insulating cane board shuts out excessive sun heat...reduces sickness by guarding your rooms against dampness, chill and unusual changes in weather.

As a heat-stopper, Celotex is three times as effective as wood, eight times plasterboard, twelve times brick and twenty-five times concrete.

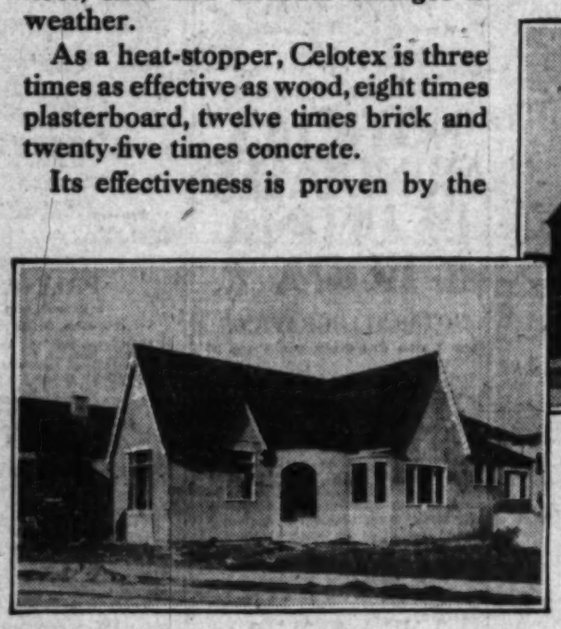
Its effectiveness is proven by the fact that it is used in thousands of refrigerator cars and household refrigerators, as well as in more than 250,000 homes.

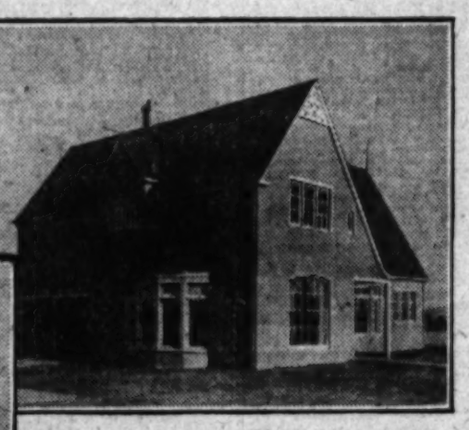
Celotex is the only insulation made from the long tough fibres of cane. It comes in big, strong boards, 4 feet wide, 7 to 12 feet long and 7/16 inch thick. These boards add structural strength to buildings. They withstand all kinds of weather—make houses more permanent.

Celotex is used for sheathing; for lining basements, attics, roofs and garages. And for plasterbase there is Celotex Lath, 18 x 48 inches. It is especially designed to reinforce against plaster cracks and eliminate lath marks . . . to give finer, smoother plastered walls.

As interior finish Celotex adds new beauty to homes through its natural tan color and delicate fibre texture.

Ask your contractor, builder or architect for further information on Celotex—and send in the coupon below for our free booklet.





Noble F. Justice, Contractor and Builder, Alameda, California, used Celotex throughout these two beautiful Alameda homes. "I have been thoroughly convinced", says Mr. Justice, "that Celotex adds to the livability of a home and proves a wonderful investment in the saving of fuel. I gladly recommend Celotex for insulation and sound deadening and intend using it intensively in the future."

LEGISLATION AS FARM AID DEPRECATED

Nation-wide Market System Advocated at Meeting of Citizen's Council

SACRAMENTO, Jan. 12. (AP)—A large number of Senators and Assemblymen who remained in the capital over the week-end recess attended a meeting of the Sacramento Region Citizens' Council held today. There they discussed with members of the council problems facing farmers of the State and learned of the contents of that body's State trade-mark bill, expected to be introduced in the Legislature next week.

William O. Marvin, attorney of San Francisco, was the principal speaker. He told the legislators that no amount of legislation could bring prosperity to the growers—in fact, he declared, it would only stimulate a period of false prosperity.

The speaker declared that the only way farmers of the State and of the country could better their status would be by a nation-wide marketing system, embracing a market exchange and a telegraphic marketing control system through which they could be advised daily of conditions throughout the country. In this way, he said, shipments of products could be directed to proper markets.

Marvin lauded the council's policies relative to building up of foreign as well as domestic markets and of advertising California products through use of the proposed State trade-mark.

Young Consults Harbor Head on Cooling Plant

SACRAMENTO, Jan. 12. (AP)—As means of determining along what lines the State may proceed in its plans to establish a fruit and vegetable precooling plant and dock on the San Francisco water front, Gov. Young conferred in the Bay City today with Maj. Charles L. Tilden, president of the State Harbor Board.

Opposition to the proposed establishment and operation by the State of the plant comes from interests headed by H. F. Kearney, president of the San Francisco Produce and Provision Terminal.

Kearney has informed the Governor that, in his opinion, the State is without authority to engage in the terminal business.

OHIBITION IS WINNING OUT'—MRS. WILLEBRANDT

...g Summary of Situation by ...man Chief of Government's Legal Arm in Booze War

BY KYLE D. PALMER

...Wednesday next, nine years will have elapsed ...hundreds of thousands of American citizens have ...beverages containing more than a negligible per- ...of alcohol. The war-time prohibition law became effective ..., but the Eighteenth Amendment and its enabling ...law, were not in force until 12:01 a.m. on the ...of January 17, 1920—amid much hilarity, revelry, scoffing ...to the point of view, hope, foreboding, prayers and ...

...the ninth year draws ...the debate on prohibi- ...to modification or ...

...to its pledges and to the Republican platform.

Hence, neither the friends nor the foes of the dry law need be in doubt as to the definite character of the dry-enforcement policy Mr. Hoover will undertake. And while the country waits to learn what tactics and methods the new national administration will pursue in this matter, it is possible to know in advance some of the essential facts the new President will have before him when he begins to study the problem.

Probably no individual in the nation has more general or specific information on the dry law, its enforcement and nonenforcement, than Mabel Walker Willebrandt of Los Angeles, assistant United States Attorney-General in charge of investigation and prosecution of liquor-law violations.

MABEL WALKER WILLEBRANDT

Mrs. Willebrandt and her assistants have made a careful and an exhaustive study of the prohibition question, leaving no aspect untouched. They know where most of the liquor comes from and they have, so they believe, a fairly comprehensive idea of where it goes—and what it contains.

She possesses much earnestness on the subject, but in no manner might be said to see it from a fanatical viewpoint. A great many complacent drinkers who think they know about all there is to know about the origin and contents of the bootleg bottles they buy would be astonished to discover what a ten minutes' talk with the woman assistant Attorney-General would reveal.

Mrs. Willebrandt will agree that most drinkers believe they know why they drink, but she takes issue with all and sundry who contend they know what they drink.

LESS "SMART" NOW

On the whole, based on the information at her disposal, she finds that drinking has become less fashionable, less "smart," less the expected thing either from host or guest, than it was, say, two years ago.

And she entertains this impression despite evidence on all sides seeming to refute and confound such a conviction. Information on this aspect of prohibition comes from numerous sources—bootleggers, big and little alcoho. distillers,

Other resolutions passed by the executive committee protested against the advertising of cigarettes by radio broadcast "which seems to be an effort to transform growing youth into confirmed cigarette users" and commended the Los Angeles county grand jury in its efforts to clean up vice conditions.

Praise also was given the County Board of Education for its action in requiring teachers to sign contracts to abstain from the use of tobacco and liquor.

Mrs. Wheeler stated that the organization will file a membership list of its organization at legislative headquarters in Washington on September 1, by which time it is expected the membership will be at least 20,000.

DISSENTERS OUTNUMBER CEMENTERS

Antis Overrun Meeting of Canyon Plant Pros, But Each Side Has Say

The cement mill controversy in the Santa Ynez Canyon district took on the aspect of rival political conventions trying to hold meetings in the same hall last night. The original meeting had been called at the Pacific Palisades Public Library by a group of citizens favoring the proposed cement plant.

Among those taking an active part in the arrangements were associates of Alphonso Bell, owner of the land and principal backer of the cement project. Chairs for twenty people had been placed in the assembly hall by proponents of the scheme.

Opponents of the cement plant idea, however, had heard of the contemplated meeting and sent out word to property owners inviting them to the meeting. Almost 300 responded and when they began crowding into the hall the astonished proponents became suspicious.

"Now folks," exclaimed W. H. Day, chairman of the meeting," we have called this gathering only for those who are friendly to Mr. Bell and we intend to pass a resolution, so the rest of you will please leave the hall."

"But," interposed W. S. Rothbery, president of the Pacific Palisades Improvement Association," this is a public meeting house and we are just as much interested in this thing as anyone else."

"Well this is our meeting and we got here first," was the reply, "so we are going to pass a resolution praising Mr. Bell for his efforts to better our community."

"Very well, we'll listen to it and then we'll pass a resolution condemning it," was the reply.

The group of opponents adjourned to another hall and passed their resolution, while Mr. Bell's small group of friends took the same action on their resolution.

Warning was sent out to neighborhood improvement associations yesterday by the Pacific Palisades Protective Committee counseling them against being inveigled into adopting resolutions favoring the cement plant until they have had heard both sides of the question.

The notice says there has been apparently a concerted effort on the part of the cement mill promoters to stampede the districts into supporting the scheme before the real facts can come to the surface. Neighborhood improvement associations have a particular interest in the rock crusher, pipe-line plan because it involves the principle of protecting residential districts from encroachment by industrial project.

It was also pointed out that should the Bell scheme win either through disregard of rights of residential property owners or through ignorance on the part of associations led into supporting the project, a dangerous precedent would be established, inimical to the future welfare of all residential districts.

The cement plant proposal will be the subject of a debate before the open forum of the City Club tomorrow night. Alphonzo Bell will speak in support of his scheme and Edward H. Brown.

EASTMAN'S SERVICE WINS AWARD OF REALTY MEN

Dam Disaster Work Given Honor; Mason Case in Office; Speaker Visions Southland Growth

Principally for his unselfish civic spirit in aiding to solve the problems presented by the St. Francis Dam disaster, George L. Eastman, outgoing president of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, last night was announced as recipient of the annual Los Angeles Realty Board service watch, when more than 600 brokers gathered in the tenth annual banquet of the board, at the Biltmore.

In the absence of Mr. Eastman, the award was delivered to George Coffin, who lauded the civic activities of tthe executive who received the ninth annual watch.

Others who have been awarded the honor are Harry Haldeman, Harry Chandler, G. W. Pridham, I. Hays Rice, William May Garland, W. A. Clark, Arthur S. Bent and James R. Martin. Presentation last night was made by Frank Ryan. Judges consisted of representatives of the Realty Board, Chamber of Commerce, Merchants' and Manufacturers' Association and the Los Angeles Clearinghouse Association.

BACON OPTIMIST

Declaring that when the projected Boulder Dam gives the Southwest its maximum of power within the next ten years the population of Southern California will have doubled and benefits will be far more than the most optimistic predictions, John L. Bacon, chairman of the California Colorado River Commission, delivered the principal address of the occasion.

Ayres du Bois, past chairman of the Hollywood branch, Los Angeles Realty Board, was declared the winner among four contestants for the Gilbert Wright cup, a prize for the best five-minute talk on Los Angeles. Other contestants were Fred Kitt, Harold A. Beeman and H. R. Bergh. The winning talk will be presented in the weekly Realty Board broadcast over KMTR tomorrow evening.

Developing his subject, "Benefits of Boulder Dam to the Southwest," Mr. Bacon stressed the admonition that Colorado River development is a governmental project to benefit seven States and ultimately the entire country and is not for California alone. He urged consideration of the opportunity to be offered sister States, whose share in the project will be limited only by the zeal of those men who represent the particular States.

"If California profits more by Boulder Dam than the other States it will not be because California is

RAILROAD SHOP VESTIBULE TO PRESIDENT'S OFFICE

Paul Shoup, Southern Pacific Chief, Rises From Mechanic's Helper by His Own Abilities

BY FLOYD J. HEALEY

How often have we not heard the comment that So-and-so would have been a great surgeon if he had not become a meat cutter? Or a noted educator if truck driving had not assured the grocery bill?

As a boy Paul Shoup could and did write. He liked to write and others liked what he wrote. He might have made an excellent newspaper reporter. In fact, what he did in that line in his early days found a ready market, but he had scarcely emerged from the San Bernardino High School when he decided that railroading offered a wider and more remunerative field. So, borrowing his own metaphor, he started opening doors. After doing it for thirty-eight years he was—and is—the president of one of the world's five greatest railroads.

Throughout all those years he has never surrendered his urge to write but it has been a secondary impulse to that of climbing—and making better—the iron trail.

The story of Paul Shoup really begins when the world first impressed upon him that as far as silver spoons went his was only nickel plated. That was in 1891. He was 17 years of age and had a healthy appetite. He had been eating thrice daily for seventeen years and had no intention of quitting the habit. Ergo, he got a job in the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe shops at San Bernardino, thereby solving the problem of provender, and spent his spare time being correspondent and agent for the Los Angeles Evening Express.

ALL 'ROUND HANDY MAN

He wrote stories for the paper, sold the paper and then delivered it. In the shops he was kind of a handy man. Sometimes he swung a hammer, sometimes he added figures in a book. Sometimes his hands were clean and sometimes they were dirty. Most of the time he had to wash his neck whether he wanted to or not, but he was learning about railroads where the wheels go 'round. He also was learning the fundamentals of economics, which were to stand in good stead almost immediately.

It happened the district freight and passenger agent of the Southern Pacific needed an assistant. He mulled over the prospective timber in sight and thought of Paul Shoup. Among other things, young Shoup was foreman of the hose company. Strange as it may sound now, the capital of the Orange Belt in those days did not have fancy horseless carriage resplendent with red paint, shiny silver gadgets nor motors that propelled the vehicle, rolled the hose and supplied water pressure all at the same time.

ARMSTRONG PATENT

San Bernardino had a hose cart which the strong of back and the calloused of hand volunteered to hustle through the dust-choked streets when a fire broke out. As the "boss" of that, young Shoup was somewhat of a figure. In addition to which he had evinced a desire for railroading. The Southern Pacific agent went to him and offered him $5 more salary than he was getting, with a promise of another $5 in the near future.

That's how the Southern Pacific got Paul Shoup. In the years that have followed there has been no indication that the acquisition was considered a poor bargain. Nor has there been any reason for Mr. Shoup to revise the truism which flowered then and underlies his past, present and future, namely:

"It matters not so much which door one goes through to accomplishment. It matters that one finds the door and goes through. There must be the will and the qualifications to go, the knowledge and stability of character to stay."

It is extremely doubtful if Paul Shoup at 18 years of age could have compressed his motivation into those brief words and equally doubtful if he himself appreciated prosaically the formula by which he had elected to open doors. But he did see a door, tried his homemade sesame on it and it opened.

At 55 years of age—his birthday anniversary was last Tuesday, the 8th inst.—he can put into a few words of succinct perspective and incentive what at 18 he could fathom merely as a hankering for a better job. At 55 he looks out from the sunlit ninth floor corner suite of the Southern Pacific Building at San Francisco over the roof of the Ferry Building almost under his window ledge and sees ferries pushing out from their slips for the communities that comprise the bay's homing and trade area.

WORLD HIS TERRITORY

If the day is clear he can see the red glint of his company's electric trains speeding away from the Oakland mole to distribute cargoes of human freight into homes; he can see the smoke of engines departing north, east and south with passengers and commodities bound to every point the compass embraces on the North American continent and to every nation around the globe to which the compass points.

At 55 Paul Shoup can look down from the heights and watch the wheels go 'round. His mind makes them go 'round. But he does not spend his time 'ooking down. Like all true winners of the purple toga in mundane endeavor he looks back with modesty, even with hesitancy. He seems to be speculating that youth will insist on learning its own lessons anyway, so why recount? But the ability to be of value to those who think wins its inning and then he looks ahead again. It is well for the Southern Pacific and those whose life-circles it contacts. Although one of the world's greatest industries, the Espee is entering a period admittedly capable of taxing its utmost executive acumen.

HIS VARIED EXPERIENCE

It enters that period with a man as president who has worked at almost all of its positions in thirty-eight years; who is a director and past president of the Associated Oil Company; who was the president of the Pacific Oil Company from its organization in 1920 to its merging with Standard interests in 1926; who is vice-president of the western division of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States; director of the Anglo and London-Paris Bank; director of the California Development Association; a number of other organizations and associations and internationally recognized as an authority on western transportation, business industry, electricity and oil, as well as the correlation thereof with the national and foreign patterns.

At 55 Paul Shoup seems and must be young in sustained energy. He is not large in stature, but his shoulders have demonstrated their ability to carry the load above them. His black hair is only getting a decent start toward its day of gray. His eyebrows are fully black and so bushy they must give momentary recoil to the timid. Yet they wrinkle upward at the edges when he smiles and he smiles often.

He is reputed a man of many friends yet a ruler of men—a com-

HERE is a warning that should be spread far and wide.

Writers should stay away from Hollywood. There are already a hundred for every job. There are enough writers here to saturate a city six times the size.

STARVATION

In every mail I get two types of letters.

Hopeful letters from newspaper writers hither and yon who want to come to Hollywood.

Desperate letters from writers already here who can't find work and who, in some cases, are literally starving.

The situation is growing serious.

NEWSPAPER OPENINGS

There are, as a matter of fact, very few openings for writers in Los Angeles at any time.

The newspapers here do not have frequent changes in their staffs. Most of the men on The Times, for instance, have been on the paper for many years. There are few opportunities because there are few changes.

PIPE DREAMS

Most of the writers who come here have rosy dreams of fortunes to be earned in the movies. They are just dreams.

The old adventurous days of the movies are over. The old days when bright young script girls blossomed into highly-paid scenario writers.

At present the movies choose their writing staffs from two classes of professionals: Those with long technical experience in the actual building of scenarios or authors with a name and fame. There are very few studios which can be persuaded to take the trouble to teach picture writing to amateurs.

DRINKING DECREASING; NOT SO "SMART" NOW

Deadly Perils of Bootleg Also Cutting Down Consumption, Says Mrs. Willebrandt

drinkers and nondrinkers, income tax reports, and a vast mass of individual assertions and opinions.

It is a phenomenon of prohibition, as discovered by Mrs. Willebrandt and her associates, that those who drink are disposed to believe that the great majority of the people follow the same custom; whereas nondrinkers are apt to be equally positive in a conviction that violation of the dry law is less than ordinarily represented, or is rapidly declining.

Mrs. Willebrandt does not assert that the decrease is exceptionally high, but she feels that it is of such proportions as to promise added momentum henceforward.

Wet sentiment finds its greatest emphasis, naturally, in the metropolitan areas of the nation, the backbone of the dry majority (and she insists there is a dry majority,) being found in the rural sections and smaller communities.

Prohibition, with her, is, first, a matter of law, and, second a matter of common sense regard for social well-being and physical health. She affirms a belief that those who do not observe the Eighteenth Amendment as a matter of obedience to law, whatever their reason or excuse for such attitude, should accept its dictates on the basis of ordinary intelligence.

MORE RESPECT FOR LAW

Although realizing, she said, that many persons may deride her opinion, she is convinced that the diminution in drinking is based on an increasing tendency throughout the country to respect the law itself, and that this purely ethical impulse is being powerfully aided by a growing knowledge of the dangerous nature of bootleg beverages.

The election of Hoover was not precisely a referendum on the wet and dry issue, but Hoover's success and Smith's decisive defeat plainly showed, Mrs. Willebrandt believes, that the country as a whole wants strict enforcement and may be depended upon to support the incoming administration in the measures it undertakes to dam the alcoholic flood.

Leaving out of consideration such questions as obedience to the Federal Constitution, and the moral, religious, ethical and political issues involved, Mrs. Willebrandt said the willingness of so many otherwise intelligent citizens to imbibe beverages of unknown origin and ingredients might be considered amusing if the consequences were not so generally tragic.

Her list of known ingredients contained in the alcoholic beverages sold today covers literally thousands of chemical analyses and is an astounding document. Mere perusal thereof, without regard to the legal, moral or civic issues involved, should be a persuasive thirst-exterminator. Mrs. Willebrandt has catalogued both drinks and drinkers; for, it seems, there are almost as many different types of drinkers as there are brands of drinks.

WHAT'S IN IT

Despite the almost pathetic confidence the average drinking American has in his own judgment of liquors, and in the good faith and veracity of his favored bootlegger, the amount of "real stuff" reaching the American palate, Mrs. Willebrandt asserts, constitutes, so to speak, little more than a drop in the bucket as compared with the Niagara of synthetic alcoholic beverages distributed in this country.

Government investigation over a period of several years and covering all sections of the nation, shows that most of the whisky, gin, liqueurs and kindred liquids sold in America today comes from denatured industrial alcohol withdrawn from government control for such purported uses as the manufacture of perfumes, hair tonics, paints, varnishes, mouth washes, rubbing alcohol and the like.

In each case a formula making such alcohol unfit for drinking purposes is submitted to the government. In some cases the formula contains actual poisons, and in others the denaturant is extremely unpalatable or designed to create nausea if taken internally.

Enterprises having legitimate need for alcohol are among the chief sufferers from the situation created by the wholesale illicit withdrawals, as their bona-fide requests are subjected to the same scrutiny as those of the less respectable petitioners. According to Mrs. Willebrandt, the denaturing formulas submitted to the government by the pseudo perfume, hair tonic and associated illicit alcohol users have a sufficiently respectable appearance on their face, but contain ingredients more or less easily removed for the purposes of the bootlegging industry.

It is inevitable, government chemists have found, that a greater or less amount of injurious or poisonous denaturents remain in the reclaimed alcohol, their presence being unnoted because of flavoring extracts and coloring matter.

Despite the enormous quantity of alcohol diverted from legitimate uses to the bootleg trade, however, Mrs. Willebrandt classifies this evil as the second greatest problem faced by prohibition enforcement officials.

The foremost difficulty in enforcement, as she views it, is not a matter of enforcement at all, but is, paradoxically, that of voluntary obedience to law. Once the American people can be made to realize that general violation of this law is an invitation and an example to the nation's criminal element to indulge in every other form of crime, Mrs. Willebrandt believes the problem of enforcement will solve itself.

She paints a somewhat ugly picture of the bootleg trade, her point of view being determined by the actual experiences and the definite information possessed by the government.

DARK TRAILS

The history of an average case of bootleg whisky or gin reposing safely in some self-respecting and generally law-abiding citizen's home, she asserts, varies little from the story of prohibition law violations as a whole. It reaches the consumer over a trail of bribery, corruption, cheating, bloodshed, dishonor and utter disregard for the rights, health or even the lives of any involved in the entire transaction.

A comparatively small amount of genuine liquor comes into the country from Canada, either through the customs along the border (principally at Detroit,) or through the landing of cargoes from ships along the Atlantic and Pacific coasts. The alcoholic stimulants passing through customs, Mrs. Willebrandt said, are sent to the United States border without violation of the Canadian laws, and are shipped across the border under a system of bribery affecting both Canadian and United States officials.

It is a matter of some absurdity that liquor legally manufactured and legally transported in legally wet Canada is regularly smuggled across the international border into legally dry United States with the full knowledge of the Canadian government and its officials. It also is a fact that several wealthy American citizens are heavy investors in Canadian distilleries and breweries, and that without their consent or connivance much of the commodities legally possessed by them in Canada eventually reaches their own country in the form of proscribed and illicit beverages.

The absence of a treaty on the subject between Canada and the United States makes this ridiculous condition possible and permits huge cargoes of liquor to be brought through Canada to the United States border where, according to the knowledge of the Canadian officials performing their own duties thus far in a legal manner, the assignments are destined to reach the hands of individuals engaged in deliberate violation of this nation's laws.

As it would be impossible to transport any considerable amount of liquor across the border, however, without certain "lenient" acts by Canadian officers, their co-operation is obtained by the same system employed to gain the acquiesence of United States officials—bribery.

When representations have been made, either officially, or unofficially, to the Canadian authorities, that this situation should be corrected, the more or less logical response has been that Canada should not be expected to enforce the domestic laws of the United States.

Hence the efforts heretofore made to obtain a treaty with Canada designed to make unlawful the transportation in Canada of liquor obviously destined for this country doubtless will be actively renewed as a part of the Hoover administration's drive on dry-law violations.

HOW IT GETS ABOUT

Distribution from this side of the international line is made almost exclusively by motor trucks, she said. The motor truck also is used throughout the country for transporting the synthetic liquors manufactured here, the alert attitude of the railroads and the elaborate checking system they employ proving a serious obstacle to general use of railroads for the bootleggers' operations.

Incidentally, the hazards surrounding rail shipment of intoxicants has resulted in the establishment of regional or local bootleg activities, each organization being sufficient unto itself and maintaining little if any contact with others in the same occupation elsewhere.

However, the manufacturer of illicit beverages has several important subsidiary enterprises, such as the maker of labels, corks, seals and bottles. Imitating labels and rare bottles has become a genuine art, as shown by government investigation, and the up-to-date bootlegger, upon short notice, can produce a bottle or an entire case of "the genuine" which only the skill of the scientist and chemist can detect.

Not only do the labels, the government seals, the bottles and the odor of the contents appear authentic, but the diabolically clever bootlegger has even gone so far in his duplicity as to invent an oil known to his trade as "bead oil," which, when introduced into synthetic whisky and shaken vigorously by the suspicious prospective purchaser, instantly forms a ring of beads at the top of the bottle—thus indubitably proving to the "wise" one that he has the real thing.

Perhaps this "bead oil" is a gesture in respect to the knowledge and experience of the older generation of drinkers, but for those who are ignorant of the supposititious infallibility of "beads" as the indicator of good whisky, it should be explained that the small ring of bubbles remaining at the top of authentic whisky has been regarded by generations of hard-liquor drinkers as proof positive of the age and genuine character of the stimulants they imbibed.

The last recourse of the so-called expert in such matters having been removed, it would seem that the skill of the chemist alone remains to expose the fraud.

NO ONE CAN TELL

The American palate as a reliable detector of the false from the real in alcoholic beverages, Mrs. Willebrandt asserted, no longer exists. She believes there is not one United States citizen in a thousand who can accurately determine the genuine from the synthetic.

The American bootlegger, in other words, as described by Mrs. Willebrandt, is something of a psychologist, and presents his wares in such an insinuating manner as to dupe the most cynical and wary.

Logically, in view of her extensive information on this subject and her long experience in the actual work of seeking ways and means to enforce prohibition, the question as to whether the law is a success or failure, or whether it can be made to succeed, presents itself to Mrs. Willebrandt.

She asserts that she is not inspired by any other feeling than confidence based on experience in believing that the law is making reasonable progress toward success and that it will eventually become as generally observed as other statutes.

STEPS TO DRY GOAL

The first great step, she said, should come in the form of a strong and sustained appeal to the people as a whole to obey the law—to obey it from a sense of public duty and of personal regard for individual welfare.

Next she believes the process of enforcing the law should be strengthened in several ways, including a more aggressive and independent personnel in Federal, State and local officialdom charged with making the law effective; through a more rigid inspection of industrial alcohol withdrawal permits with consequent shrinking in the amount of alcohol available, and through a more definite fixing of official responsibility for operation of the enforcement machinery.

The third measure for discouraging wholesale disregard of the law advocated by Mrs. Willebrandt concerns punishment for its violation—and such punishment should, in her opinion, be increased not only with respect to the bootlegger himself, but should be visited in greater force upon the eventual object of the whole affair, the consumer.

She does not advocate wholesale raids of private homes, or clubs or hotels; nor does she believe in the effectiveness of highly publicized and dramatic official gestures designed to temporarily curtail liquor consumption. She does not condone the extra-legal methods employed by some over-zealous enforcement officers, and is not inclined to sermonize on the moral evils of the bootleggers' ethics.

Summarized, her plan for making the prohibition law more effective contemplates an appeal to the sense of fair play of the American people; it would diminish the amount of alcohol available to those disposed to violate the law, and would more rigorously punish those who, from any reason whatsoever, are willing to disregard it and are able to obtain the wherewithal for its defiance.

Retiring Chamber Executive Lauded by Realty Men

San Diegan Pictures Benefits of Colorado Project

Mason Case Inducted Chief of Local Board

California," the speaker asserted. "The project is not far California alone. But if your profits are proportionately greater, it will be because you have vision and zeal commensurate with the opportunity. I have seen no graph curve yet developed by utilities concerns in any California city predicting growth in advance that has equalled or surpassed the growth that actually came. We are headed for development little dreamed of by California or other States.

"Crops grown in the Southwest are non-competitive crops. They will not compete with the crops produced elsewhere in the nation, which answers one of the largest objections to Boulder Dam raised by protesting farmers elsewhere. It probably will be at least a year and a half before actual construction of the dam begins.

TEN YEARS AHEAD

It will be ten years before the benefits of Boulder Dam are at their maximum. For 10,000,000 people, you of Southern California will use only one-ninth or one-tenth of the water to be stored behind Boulder Dam. The lake of storage water will extend a distance equal to two-thirds of that between here and San Diego."

History of the effort for Colorado River development from the origin of Imperial Valley and the rich delta land was traced by the speaker. He urged his audience to get ready for a tremendous era of development in order that it may be handled sanely.

As a token of their appreciation of the outgoing president's services during 1928 members of the board presented Frank Brooks with a handsome watch.

The annual banquet marked the formal induction into office of Mason Case as president of the Realty Board, succeeding Frank Brooks. Other officials installed were Harold G. Ferguson, first vice-president, G. D. Robertson, second vice-president, and N. J. Cordary, treasurer.

YEAR'S ACHIEVEMENTS

In summarizing the accomplishments of the last year, Past President Brooks pointed out that the Realty Board had completed its own building at 1131 South Grand avenue, celebrated its twenty-fifth anniversary and witnessed several of its members attain national positions. Those who occupy places in the National Association of Real Estate Boards include Harry H. Culver, president-elect of the association; Frank Ryan, A. P. Schuler, W. H. Daum and George LeBaron. William May Garland is a past-president of the organization. Other important activities were mentioned as follows:

Presentation of the service watch: close co-operation with Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce; development of the subdividers' division into a united force; support of the Boulder dam legislation; support of the home exposition; two real-estate surveys for the national association; representation at Washington in connection with Federal income-tax matters, particularly affecting subdivision trusts; opposition to single-tax legislation; co-operation in clean-up week; inauguration of the successful educational classes which meet in the new building every Tuesday night; radio broadcast programs over KMTR through the courtesy of Title Insurance and Trust Company; committees' study and report on amendments on the ballot at the last election; indorsement of the proposed amendment to the Real Estate Act requiring examination for salesman's license; appearance before the Tax Commission on legislative tax program; originating of several bills which will be presented to the present Legislature, relating to taxation, amendments to the real-estate law, amendments to the Master Plan Act, the Map Act and the Mattoon Act and the notification of special assessments.

Relative to the Realty Board's plans for the future, Mason Case said, in part:

"The Los Angeles Realty Board already has many public services to its credit. The high standard of its business ethics is recognized and the word realtor stands for honesty, uprightness and fair dealing. We have taken an honorable part in the development of the city we all love. Let us pledge ourselves to an increased activity and devotion both individually and as an organization to the end that this City of the Angels may serve as a model for all American communities."

Special guests of the board last night included Mr. Culver, J. Bradley Clayton, president of the California Real Estate Association; Stephen Barnson, State Real Estate Commissioner, and Shannon Crandall, president of the Chamber of Commerce.

The banquet was one of the most successful and largely attended in the history of the Realty Board.

LEGION TO LAY PLANS FOR PENSION SUPPORT

Members of Star Post, No. 309, the American Legion, are to meet Wednesday night in the officers' dining-room of the County Jail. Commander Nuremburg announced yesterday that the important business is the formulating of a vigorous campaign to put over the proposed pension bill to be introduced in the Legislature. A campaign of education is advocated by Mr. Nuremburg, to overcome any resistance to the bill.

TEA PLANNED TODAY

Prof. and Mrs. Osgood Hardy today will give a tea from 3 to 6 p.m. in honor of Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Preston. Mr. Preston is the new president of the Eagle Rock Kiwanis Club. Mrs. Hardy will be assisted in serving by Mmes. H. B. Crawford, Charles P. Lindsley, H. S. Sumner, E. F. Swanson, Winston E. Squire and G. H. Bollinger.

PORT LINE ROW GROWS INVOLVED

Unification Agreement, Changes, Exceptions and Replies Piling Up

When the agreement for unification of the rail lines in the harbor district comes before the Interstate Commerce Commission for approval on the 24th inst. that body will have before it for consideration not only the agreement in the form originally agreed upon, but also changes proposed by its special examiner, Shelby S. Roberts; a bill of exceptions to these changes filed jointly by the city of Los Angeles and the four railroads concerned and a brief in reply to these exceptions filed in behalf of the San Pedro Chamber of Commerce, the Wilmington Chamber of Commerce, the Citizens' Committee of Wilmington, the harbor district chambers of commerce and the Federation of State Societies.

The resolution introduced in the City Council recently by Councilman Colden seeking to put the Council on record as opposed to the unification agreement in its present form embodies the main points embraced in the brief of the above organizations. That resolution is now before the Council's Harbor Committee for report and action on it is expected early this week.

AIR LINES' OFFICIALS TO DINE TOMORROW

Officials of air lines emanating from Los Angeles will discuss air transportation at a dinner to be held tomorrow night by the local chapter of the National Aeronautic Association in the banquet hall of the Chamber of Commerce Building, according to Lyman H. Johnson, secretary of the association. The dinner will be the first of a series of meetings to be held during 1929. Speakers will include Jack Frye of the Aero Corporation, Ralph Diggins of Maddux Air Lines, Thomas O'Brien of the Pacific Air Transport, and Hal Shields of Western Air Express. President Harry Wetzel of the association; D. E. McDaneld, former president, and E. N. Kelsey, also will be heard. President Wetzel is to introduce a number of prominent flyers.

Mrs. Charles Frederick Hoffman, who was born in New Orleans, La., and who lived for a time in New York City, has become a British subject and recently announced her candidacy for Parliament. She resides in ancient Blickling Hall, Aylsham, Norfolk.

CHARM SCHOOL COURSE

"Personal Charm" and "Care of Children," wo new courses planned for adults, are to start at the Metropolitan High School, 234 West Venice Boulevard, the 29th inst., at 2:30 p.m. Classes are to be held once a week, the personal charm division meeting each [illegible] afternoon and the care of children class on Wednesday afternoons.

The "charm" class will be under the direction of Gwen A. [illegible] Mrs. Ethel Gage Lyons will instruct in the care of children.

Coroner's Jury to Sift Crash

A Coroner's inquest into the death of Harvey Newland, 29 years of age, a stock broker, who was fatally hurt when a train struck his automobile November 9, last, at a crossing in Glendale, will be conducted tomorrow. Mr. Newland died at his home in Glendale yesterday, after he had lain unconscious for two months with a fractured skull.

The accident occurred while Mr. Newland was on his way to his offices. According to witnesses the signal lights at the crossing were not working.

Mr. Newland was married and had four children. Besides his immediate family he leaves his father, E. H. Newland; his mother and a brother, Alva Newland.

NEW COAST AIR LINE PLANE ON TEST TRIP

Following the completion of a speedy test flight yesterday Pickwick Airways, Inc., announced it soon will inaugurate a regular air service between Los Angeles, San Francisco and San Diego. On the test flight, the trimotored Bach Air Transport carried nine passengers and two pilots to San Francisco in less than scheduled time. The return trip was made in unusually fast time, 2h. 50m., at an average speed of 125 miles an hour. Capt. William Frye, who supervised the test flight, is in charge of all flying operations of Pickwick Airways, which is the newest air travel organization on the Pacific Coast. It operates in conjunction with the Pickwick Corporation and the United Parcel Service.

ACTRESS RECOVERING FOLLOWING OPERATION

Mary Duncan, film actress who was stricken with appendicitis Friday and operated on at the Pasadena Hospital, was reported yesterday to be reacting favorably to treatment. An early recovery and short convalescent period was predicted for her at the hospital and she is expected to be at the Fox studio again for work within a short time.

SPORTSMANSHIP MARKS ORATORICAL CONTEST

Thousands of Students Preparing Treatises Although They Will Not Enter Competition

BY JOHN S. DAGGETT
("Uncle John")

As an example of American sportsmanship the Sixth National and Fourth International Oratorical Contest is setting a standard equaling any eliminative competition ever established in world history. Born in Los Angeles six years ago, sponsored by The Times, the contest has blanketed this nation and reached to practically all world centers of civilization, carrying the spirit of liberty within the law, co-operative relationships and universal harmony. Its superstructure is being builded by the youth of the coming generation and gives gratifying promise of the future strengthening of international amity and understanding into an indestructible pyramid of world peace.

The sportsmanship of patriotism is on test. While The Times is offering $3600 in cash prizes in The Times zone, which includes California, Arizona and Nevada, and while the winner of The Times grand finals may go on through to the national finals at Washington, D. C., winning a six weeks' trip to South America with all expenses paid, patriotism is the motive which impels the young student to enter the contest.

APPRECIATE OPPORTUNITY

More than 400 pupils of the Roosevelt High School of Los Angeles are preparing orations. In talking with them it soon is learned that they appreciate the opportunity that America is giving them for an education; they understand the duty they owe to their country and feel the zest of the competition. Perhaps most of them feel that they cannot advance very far in the rounds of the contest, but like a first entry in a tennis tournament or the first boot of the pigskin as freshmen on a college gridiron, they have the sportsmanship to make the effort.

DISTRICTS ASSIGNED

The districting of the zone sponsored by The Times finally has been decided upon after careful survey of the field. "Every effort has been made to establish school assignments to districts, which will provide an equitable allotment and develop the keenest competition," explained Prof. Alan Nichols, contest director for the Pacific Southwest. "We have followed as far as possible the assignments made by the schools in the athletic league, believing that the same spirit which enter into field sports and events of the athletic leagues will apply in the elimination methods of the Oratorical Contest. The factor of the number of entrants in proportion to the size of the school enrollment has been taken into consideration. It is our aim this year, more than ever before, to have as many entrants as possible even though all may not become contestants. It is gratifying to note that hundreds of students are preparing the ten-minute orations although they do not intend to actually deliver them in their respective school elimination contests. The student who reads at least five references on the Constitution and writes an oration has at least done his bit toward the success of the movement. Principals and teachers in charge of the school eliminations are being urged to invite as large a proportion of the student body to participate as possible."

AS TO REARRANGEMENT

"Whatever rearrangement has been made from last year has been the result primarily of a suggestion by George A. Homrighausen of George Washington High School, that the districts conform to the various athletic leagues of the California Interscholastic Federation," continued Prof. Nichols. "While it seemed inadvisable to transform each athletic league into an oratorical district because, in many cases such as the Los Angeles City League, this would mean 10,000 to 20,000 pupils in a single district, nevertheless the athletic leagues have been made the basis of selecting competitors so that as a general rule the schools competing in any particular district are members of the same athletic league."

STATE OF CALIFORNIA

There are fifty-three districts this year assigned as follows:

CURB ASKED ON CINEMA ACTOR SCHOOLS

The multitude of schools for training motion-picture actors in this city, many of which have been the subjects of complaints as to their business methods, would be placed under the control of the Board of Police Commissioners under an ordinance proposed to the City Council by the Association of Motion Picture Producers, Inc.

The association's proposal is that such schools be required to get a permit from the Police Commissioners. The proposed resolution was referred to the Council's Welfare Committee.

against the use of any part of Griffith Park for airport purposes. The protests have been referred to the Finance Committee.

LIFE STUDY URGED FOR ALL PUPILS

School Standardization Held by Prof. Pugsley to be Greatest Curse

Advocating a scientific study of the fundamental activities of life, on the result of which a progressive educational system might be established, Prof. C. A. Pugsley, president of the California Elementary School Principals' Association, in an address at the City Club yesterday declared that standardization, especially in the public school system, is the curse of modern life.

"We can no more hope to establish a vital, growing, practical educational program on a foundation of accumulated facts than we could logically expect to erect an earthquake-proof skyscraper on the fossils of extinct animals," said Dr. Pugsley. "If democracy is to survive we must prepare our young people to meet the unknown tomorrow and that can be accomplished only by teaching them to continue their study of life after leaving school and also by insisting on creative thinking.

"The problems of life today and tomorrow are not the problems of yesterday," said the speaker. "While we should appreciate all the knowledge and wisdom that may be garnered from the past, we should inaugurate a new educational system in which youth may learn to deal practically with the practical problems of the present and future."

Term's Classes Open Tomorrow

Instruction will start with the first meeting of classes in the January term of the University of California extension division which opens tomorrow, in the Hillstreet Building.

More than 250 classes are on the term for the southern district. Of these more than 150 are in Los Angeles. New instructors have been added to handle the increasing classes.

Courses scheduled include accounting, advertising, agriculture, art, economics, real estate, law, salesmanship, the stock market, social problems, modern languages, history, household art, interior decoration, costume design, music, psychology, writing and speaking, news and publicity writing.

Today's Bible Text

Give unto the Lord, O ye kindreds of the people, give unto the Lord glory and strength. Psalm xcvi:7.

PRO AND CON

For a pro Walter Hagen is also quite a con man. At least he has much confidence when he most needs it.

PAYING IT OFF

Uncle Sam reduced his indebtedness nearly $800,000,000 last year, which is better than most of us were able to do.. There must be some thrift in his veins after all.

BIG-LEAGUE STUFF

The League of Nations has again drafted Elihu Root. This time the distinguished American is asked to lead in modeling the code for the World Court. We do not care to undertake the responsibilities of membership in the big league—if any, but we are at least willing to help when seasoned and competent service is necessary.

MOLAR OF A MASTODON

A fossil tooth said to be nearly eleven feet long has been placed in a Boston museum. It belonged to a mastodon who died in Alaska more than 50,000 years ago. That must have been some beast. It is a good thing he didn't have to wait until Noah's Ark came along. He and his partner could never have found kennel room in that craft.

MORE MONKEY BUSINESS

College professors collectively disapprove of legislative action in any State which would forbid the consideration of evolution in the schools. Evolution is going on in some form or to some degree in every form of life. This is familiar to all scientists and is accepted by theologians as well. One may absorb evolution without in any way becoming committed to the thought that the human race is of simian background. Evolution does not mean that men sprang from monkeys, although lots of politicians appear to have had only that thought in mind when they took up law-making. Some of the most intellectual of evolutionists are also among the foremost exponents of Christianity.

MODERN MEXICO

Emilio Portes Gil is making Mexico safe for everybody. Executions and courts-martial are not tolerated. There must be judicial process and regular courts. The bandits are also being disarmed by a very simple process. The government will pay any armed man $10 for his rifle and $15 for his saddle. Inasmuch as most of the bandits and revolutionists never bought their own arms or saddles they are willing to turn them in at a price that seems like a lot of money to them. A good number of them never saw $25 at one time in their lives. Furthermore, they will get free transportation and a little farm if they are ready to go to work and till the soil. On the side there are new schools and a good education for any kids they may have accumulated. All this should help greatly in the future of Mexico. It is a land of wonderful resources and possibilities. With assurances of civil peace these may be quickly realised upon.

NO PICTURES

There's a limit to all things. During the last six years no man in the world has been photographed, painted or sculptured like Mussolini. He has had more illuminated publicity than any giant of his day. During the same strenuous period he has been patiently and uncomplainingly passing out his autographed pictures to all who were able to reach or have communication with him. But no more. Now that he himself holds seven of the thirteen portfolios in the Italian Cabinet he cannot find time for this courtesy. Furthermore, he doesn't need the publicity. A correspondent explains that hereafter there will be no photos or autographs. The stranger who happens to be in Rome for the day will not be able to ring up Benito and get his signed picture for the asking. He will have to go and buy it from the old stock—if he can. The boss is through with the cameraman. He may still do some posing, but it will be on his own account. He is giving sittings to nobody. Folks may snapshot him unawares, but he will devote no further time to the foolish business of picture making. So that's that.

EMBARRASSING THE PRESIDENT

Whether or not the recent offer of W. R. Hearst for the best plan to throttle prohibition was deliberately intended to embarrass the incoming administration of President-elect Hoover, it is most conveniently timed to accomplish that result. That Hoover favors prohibition, wishes the enforcement of the Eighteenth Amendment to succeed, and proposes to do everything in his power to enforce it, is well known to everybody, including Hearst. To have going on, while Hoover is organizing his plans for enforcing prohibition in accordance with the expressed will of the people, a contest based on Hearst's untrue and cynical assertion that prohibition never can be enforced, a contest which enables the wet minority to gain wide publicity for its subversive views, means doing all Hearst can to hamper and interfere with the incoming President in one of his greatest tasks.

It is the duty of every patriotic citizen to support the man whom the majority has chosen, in all work intended for the general welfare, at least to the extent of giving him a free hand to demonstrate whether or not his ideas are workable. This is especially true when there has been a real expression of the voters on the question at issue. That there was such an expression in the last election is not debatable. The election of Hoover, plus the returning to the Senate and House of Representatives of an overwhelmingly dry majority, proved beyond dispute the sentiment of the nation as a whole.

Just how there can be a "contest" over the best "plan" to repeal the Eighteenth Amendment is far from plain. On the face of it it would seem that every "contestant" must submit the same "plan," and that everyone who quotes verbatim Article V of the Constitution, which provides the sole means by which it may be changed, will be entitled to receive $25,000 from Hearst! The only alternative is revolution, followed by the setting up of some different form of government. Even Hearst would hesitate to admit that this is desirable.

A plan for the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment and for "modified prohibition"—exactly what Hearst offers his prize for—was submitted in detail by Gov. Smith during his campaign for the Presidency. It is safe to assume that Gov. Smith was not the sole author of the scheme he put forward; that he had assistance in its preparation of the best minds on the wet side, including the directorate of the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment, which consists of men of prominence and ability. As a wet plan, it is unlikely this could be improved on; it received spectacular exploitation under the most favorable auspices that Smith and his fellow-campaigners could give it; in due course it came before the whole American people as judges and the verdict was overwhelmingly against it in every State with the possible exceptions of Massachusetts and Rhode Island.

Under these circumstances it is hard to see how a man can be in good faith in offering a prize for a plan to repeal the Eighteenth Amendment. Anyone can obtain the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment who can persuade two-thirds of both houses of Congress, plus the legislatures of three-fourths of the States, of the justice and necessity of so doing; or who can induce the Legislatures of two-thirds of the States to ask for the calling of a constitutional convention, and then obtain the ratification of the convention's work. It is not necessary to expend 25 cents to obtain such a plan; Hearst can find a copy of the Constitution in any public library if he has none of his own.

The trouble with Hearst is that he views prohibition from the standpoint of a narrow strip of urban territory on the eastern seaboard. He does not appreciate that the viewpoint of New York is not the viewpoint of many millions of Americans. Raskob and the other New Yorkers who ran the Smith campaign made the same mistake, with the result that they have a deficit of $1,500,000 in their campaign fund, which the Democratic party, which as a whole had no part in its spending, is now demanding that they efface. Most other Americans view prohibition as a lofty moral issue; like Hoover, they deem it a "noble experiment" and have the best wishes for its success.

Such Hearst activities as these give confirmatory evidence to the suspicion that Hearst supported Hoover in the last campaign only because of his cordial personal detestation of Smith for driving him out of New York politics; and that, having aided in the elimination of Smith, he now intends to turn his guns upon Hoover.

Hoover, however, with the support of the 21,000,000 Americans who gave him their votes, seems reasonably safe.

HIGH-HATTING GOD

"High-browing God" is the striking title of an editorial in The Personalist, a publication by the department of philosophy of the University of Southern California, with Dr. Ralph Tyler Flewelling, editor.

He is after the atheists, misbehaviorists, literary intelligentsia, magazine scientists and noisy sections of society in general. "Dear old God! According to popular literature, He seems to be having his troubles of late," is a characteristic introduction.

With some evangelists on one side slapping Deity on the back and on the other hand pseudo-scientists opening the door but a crack to Him, the philosopher has considerable cause for being caustic.

High-hatting Deity is a magazine sport with some critics. They depend upon sensation for trade. Holding a watch on God and defying Him to strike them dead, after the fashion of Sinclair Lewis, is worse than cheap publicity. There is considerable evidence of pity on the part of heaven.

Peer Gynt was a loud-mouthed button molder and infidel—until grief struck him. Then he turned driveling pietist. A murderer not long ago was blatant with the name of Deity during the first hours of his arrest. But in the shadow of the gallows he turned to religion in pitiful collapse. The ilk is common.

Because groping humanity from the beginning has thought Deity to be such a one as itself, some have tried to bow Him out of the universe. Caliban is representative of the breed. It never occurs to them that possibly Deity is embarrassed by their blindness and inability to know. When puny man is electrocuted by a little flame from a strand coming down from God's mountains and is blinded by an instant's look at the sun, how can squint-eyed weaklings expect to see Him or touch Him?

Having nothing but the thumb-joint for an inch, the foot and step for a yard and a year's span for measurement of space and time, the pride that prompts them to appraise Deity becomes shame. The puerile always bluster.

What do they proffer in His place? A mechanistic universe hardly solves the riddle. Too much reason and law appear in everything. Automatic progress as Creator does not satisfy the thinker. For every evolution there must be an involution. You cannot even go a mile without gas!

Herbert Spencer traced all the truths of religion as instinctive in every tribe. It did not seem to occur to him that their very existence at all called for explanation.

Atomic activity and Einstein's relativity are making inroads on atheism. They are but gripping back the curtains of the shining Hebrew cloud and all but reveal the Ultimate. Robert A. Millikan and Michael Pupin, the greatest scientists of all, are definitely Christian.

Faith more than ever can feel the pull of an Anchor!

FOR CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

Michigan and Kansas are among the seven States not providing capital punishment for willful homicide. Of late there has been considerable agitation in Kansas by those who still believe in giving murderers what they deserve. In Michigan, where no person has been made to suffer the death penalty for murder since 1847, there is now a strong movement toward a return to capital punishment, partly due to the fact that Adolph Hotaling could not under the present law be adequately punished for his fiendish murder of little Dorothy Schneider and that it has been learned that Mike Petrovich moved his family from Pennsylvania to Michigan so that he could kill his wife in a State where the punishment for cold-blooded murder is the same as for four felonious violations of the liquor law.

A Michigan association of police chiefs favors a return to capital punishment. A majority of the State Bar Association is also in favor of the death penalty. Other discerning citizens have declared for it, and at the present session of the Legislature it is proposed to introduce a measure that will strike an effective blow against such crimes of violence as have lately aroused the indignation of the people and caused them to ask why they should pay the board of murderers for an indefinite period instead of making them suffer the just penalty for their crimes.

The Detroit Free Press attributes the abandonment of capital punishment in Michigan to the old rural way of thinking. It says that industrial growth has so altered conditions as to make necessary a return to the death penalty. To this might be added the fact that for more than eighty years Michigan has not afforded sufficient protection to its citizens from red-handed killers. Then, too, to visit upon a bandit who slays a human being only such punishment as may be given him if he robs without slaying is to place a sort of premium upon murder.

One need not be deemed animated by an overweening desire for vengeance if one takes the liberty of pointing out to the lawmakers of Michigan the deterrent effect of the gallows and the advisability of setting it up again in that crime-infested State.

HORSE CENSUS

Horse sense has it victories; but a horse census does not seem to be in demand. Poor vanishing Dobbin is fading out of the picture, save in Hollywood.

There is a vague suspicion that in a few short decades his remains will be dug up in some La Brea boneyard and he will be peddled to museums with a credit slip of having roamed these hills 10,000,000 years ago or so.

The city statistician reports eight fewer accidents from horses this year than last—twenty-two in all. When we used to hear that there were more accidents from horses than from cars, this figure is unimpressive. However, all other types of accident showed a hardly commendable increase.

Aside from milk and express wagons, the horse does not have much to show for his oats. True he does not burn gas while the delivery boy is courting the chamber maid, and he can wake up people as easily in the morning. Now and then some prince or movie cowboy flings a silver saddle upon him and rides for a fall. Polo even engrosses some of his attention; but this does not largely distribute his equine attributes. Even the brains of Silver King have not been largely disseminated.

The tractor is also crowding him off the ranch and the lowly mule with his saxophone voice is his understudy. As a betting institution at the races, the motor outranks him for spills, kills and thrills.

After a few traffic tie-ups occasioned by his deliberate advances on a busy morning, the average citizen repudiates him forever. He greatly encourages the alert business man in having motored out of the good old days. Even the lowliest worker now yelps, "My kingdom for a car!"

Horse sense has always been highly esteemed. However, not every citizen got drunk even in the good old days and needed the friendly offices of his horse as guide on the homeward way.

STRETCHING IT

According to the cables Dutch planters in Java are seeking rubber backing in America. Yet rubber backbones have been railed against for many months. A guy with a rubber backing is not much good except for handsprings.

The LEE SIDE O' LA
BY Lee Shippey

THE painted rocks in the Lake Elsinore-Temecula district are an unread riddle. Centuries ago forgotten Indian tribes "painted" pictures and characters on them with some mineral "paint" which wind and weather and time have failed to destroy. None of the Indians in the reservation at Temecula can—or will—translate those signs. We asked some of them, but they only shook their heads. "Is there no one in the reservation who can read them?" we asked. They only grunted. Finally one said: "They say one old man down San Diego county, near Pala—he read 'um. Maybe so. Maybe not."

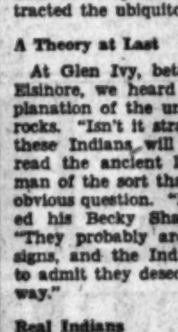
Every visitor to Lake Elsinore, of course, hears of the painted rocks, and many picnics in the mountains are arranged by persons who wish to see them. That area, incidentally, is full of boulders, rocks which stick straight up out of the ground or are piled one upon the other, as if Titanic children had been using them to build block houses. And along the highways, alas! those upstanding rocks have attracted the ubiquitous sign-painter.

A Theory at Last

At Glen Ivy, between Corona and Elsinore, we heard a reasonable explanation of the untranslated Indian rocks. "Isn't it strange that none of these Indians will even attempt to read the ancient legends?" asked a man of the sort that always asks the obvious question. "Not at all," retorted his Becky Sharpish companion. "They probably are just advertising signs, and the Indians are ashamed to admit they desecrated nature that way."

Real Indians

Reservation Indians usually are a disappointment to the tourist. They are too modern and Americanized. They rattle about in flivvers, wear overalls and work clothes. In places like Yuma one may see Indians who virtually are "on location." The most romantic-looking Indian we've seen off-stage was in Yuma—a tall, haughty painted brave with long, braided hair which he could fling back over his shoulders with an imperious gesture which gave every tourist a thrill. One sight of him boosted the bead-and-bowl souvenir business the squaws were doing 70 per cent.



But in spite of their American clothes, there still are Indians around Temecula who preserve the arts and crafts and traditions of their ancestors, and if one will drive on to Warner's Hot Springs he will pass really primitive Indian villages in which the making of ollas and baskets and the trapping of fur-bearing animals still are leading occupations. Most of those villages are so sequestered, though, that one needs a guide to find them.

Entered for the Efficiency Contest

An efficiency addicted friend of ours drives a small, light car and has figured it out that it costs him $35 a month. In an earnest effort to reduce that figure he sent for all sorts of appliance circulars, and soon was overjoyed. He found one accessory would save him $10 a month, another at least $5, another $15 and two others $7.50 apiece. Therefore, all of them would not only wipe out all expense, but make the car yield him a profit of $10 monthly. So, being a true efficiency shark, he secured all the attachments, for which he now is paying on the well-known i.p.

But even efficiency experts sometimes fail to click. Somehow or other his car still is costing him $35 a month for gas, oil and upkeep, plus $3 a month for upkeep of attachments.

DELIBERATE GRAFT

BY ALMA WHITAKER

When the air grows murky with graft scandals a dreadful cynicism pervades the people. We all get a demoralizing "What's the use?" sensation. It poisons our very patriotism.

If well-paid public servants, who have taken a solemn oath of office, can betray their trust for common greed—what has become of honor, or even ordinary good sportsmanship? What becomes of our boasted ideals, our pride of country?

What becomes of our faith, ever demanded in our plays, our motion pictures, our literature, in the triumph of virtue? How are we to raise the next generation in fine scruples, essential honesty, all the vitally important ethics, with these cynical betrayals all around us?

It is all so heart-breaking, so utterly ironical—in the greatest and most prosperous country in the world. When the poor and oppressed turn cheats and thieves and sneaks, it is understandable. Such pitiful temptation is theirs. But when men who can afford to be decent, who could be so trusted, respected, honored, deliberately choose the viler way, and contemptible conduct becomes a subject for cynical jokes, what is left?

When rich men will lie and cheat and steal, just to become richer; when men of standing and position hold honor so cheap and opportunity merely as a chance to cash in; when they deliberately choose the path of hypocrisy and corruption; when the prevailing maxim seems to be "Every man for himself and the devil take the hindmost"—well, how can we dare send missionaries to foreign countries in the name of Christianity?

Doubly ironical are these betrayals, this disgusting corruption and greed, in a country steeped in service clubs, with lofty grandiloquent codes of ethics. Doubly hideous is this condition in a country so blessed above all others in the world; a more prosperous, highly educated, abundant country than any other on earth. The poison must go so deep . . . yet why, why, why?

What dreadful lack is there in us? Is education at fault? Are we leaving out some dire essential in the curriculum of these vaunted superior schools and colleges of ours? Or is money, indeed, the root of all evil—our dreadful insistence upon the importance of wealth?

Apparently the direst need of our country today is a new glowing aristocracy of fine scruple—or at least of common good sportsmanship. We still think it abominable to cheat at cards or in games. We have a fairly well recognized code of ethics, under which we shall wax mightily critical when the Olympic Games come here in 1932. We shall look with smug horror upon any tainted foreigner who fails to observe the finer rules of the games . . . yet in the most important game of all, the game of life, we tolerate unspeakable cheating.

Oh, it isn't only those in positions of political trust who cheat. The cheating seems to permeate every activity of life. Always, always, we are talking reforms, "clean-ups," returns to decency. This week the lawyers are cleaning house, last week the doctors, next week the advertisers, the week after it may be literature, drama, or the Anti-Saloon League, or the newspapers. There are enough of us left to sense the hideous necessity for these flamboyant, "clean-ups," to voice good resolutions—to be temporarily ashamed.

But there is no fine glorious crusading spirit for decency sustained in our hearts. We are content to laud decency in noisy spurts—and to be cynically wisecracking when the next scandal comes along.

Surely there must be hope for us. During a recent discussion on this loathsome subject, in which local judges, lawyers, doctors, college professors took part, speaker after speaker held England up as a more righteous country than ours—in her justice, in her political service, in her business. Yet once England, too, was stepped in corruption. There are black pages in England's history. Somehow, she struggled out of the mire to the place where rival countries can point to her as an example of finer conduct. Even far China with her teeming squalid millions, living in poverty, has managed to gain an international reputation for honesty.

But all the crusading in the world won't help us, if we do not each individually hold our personal honor high; if we do not each conduct ourselves with an honest regard for scruple and good sportsmanship . . . whether it's using "pull" to settle a traffic tag, or dealing with bootleggers, or taking an unfair advantage in business we must become too proud to cheat. The small cheater becomes the big cheater. We cannot afford to compromise with a single scruple ourselves, if we are honest in our disgust at public grafters. Fancy selling one's honor for the price of a traffic tag or a bottle of booze! Pretty paltry . . .

THE MODERN GIRL

We knock and criticise her, we scold, apostrophize her, we wish that she was wiser, more dainty and refined; her path we're always stalking to criticise her talking, her clothes, her way of walking, her manners and her mind.

We say, "Oh, highty tighty! she is frivolous and flighty and all her ways are mighty undignified to see; she joyrides, flirts and chatters, our old-time rules she shatters and laughs at serious matters with unabated glee."

We chide and we correct her, we shadow and detect her, we study and dissect her with all her smiles and tears, and find on looking o'er her (and learning to adore her) she's just like girls before her for several thousand years.—[Boston Transcript.

TO MRS. UNCLE SAM

BY EUGENE BROWN

Dear Auntie: Somehow I never met you and I can't remember seeing your picture, but there must be a you.

Uncle Sam would attend to that.

Folks have told me at different times that Uncle Sam never married, but I know better than that. If he is our typical American he would have at least one wife. You would be a representative American yourself and accordingly you should be about 45 years old with your golden hair still hanging down your back. You would perhaps be named Emma. Sam and Em would go right nicely together.

Maybe every spring you would put up a few jars of strawberry jam. Once a week you would blow yourself for the movies and on Sunday morning you would go to church. Maybe you would help in singing "Rock of Ages." It would be a pretty good voice at that.

But maybe I am all wet. You may turn out to be one of those new-fangled dames who can't go round the block without your powder rag and lipstick. You may be able to puff cigarettes until you can blow the smoke out of your ears. Maybe you spend your afternoons playing bridge at a cent a point and only go home when the night clubs shut off. You may be heavily dated at the beauty shop and your dainty breath may be spiced with juniper, but somehow or other I can hardly figure you that way.

I seem to be able to guess you only as being a trifle what they call old-fashioned. You are still able to pleasantly remember the days when young folks took buggy rides on country lanes and found joy in the doing. But as I said before it is hard to size up a lady in these parlous times.

Maybe you had better settle this thing by sending me your picture. I know I would love it. In return I would be glad to send you mine—which is very much in demand, especially at police headquarters. I don't believe you ever saw me or my photo. I have the high forehead and graceful manners of the trained pool player and have been a highly efficient voter. I think you would like me very much.

I think that perhaps you have been too modest in the past. Now that women are doing half of the nation's politics and most of its tennis Uncle Sam should encourage you to step out a little more. We love modesty, but we do not expect effacement. Maybe Uncle Sam has sort of been keeping you under his thumb. We think a lot of him, but I still feel that he is a rather nosey sort of guy with a passion for the spotlight. I imagine that he expects to see his mug in the paper every morning. Anyhow, he has kept the bright boys who draw pictures right busy for a long time. But if you are really and truly my auntie I want to raise my auntie in a household nook. We should be better acquainted. Aunties are not usually so retiring—except at night. We would love to see you. Can't you and Uncle Sam pack up the old suit case and come and make us a visit. It would be joy for us. You could easily find our place. It is the first one on the street and has a cute little mortgage on it. Maybe you could bring Columbia with you if she is not going to school this week. Hail Columbia, anyhow.

We are sure that you would like Hollywood even if you got bored at my place. Everybody does. And another thing: Uncle Sam couldn't get away without having his picture taken. He would like that. So come as soon as possible and look us over. I will show you a picture of Herbert Hoover.

Regards to uncle. Take care of yourself.

THE LISTENERS

BY MARY LOUISE BRIGGS

The wind and moon are listeners to whom I tell my tales,
For I am lonely here.

I am of the snows,
Where white hoar like a splintered glass,
Reflects the frosty winter sun.

Where comfort symbols are more dear because they are so few . . .
Red holly berries bright against their prickly fruit-green leaves . . .
Red-hearted ochre coals
Whitening with ash . . .
China dyeing the dusk with strawberry-red, delphinium-blue lusters . . .
Worn gold . . .
Shivering water lights
Playing on the ceiling . . .

I remember how in spring
Maple seeds took flight as tender winds unrolled their soft green wings . . .
Too, the hard green apple cores
I hid away . . .

Summer came,
When my too-eager fingers became magenta-tipped
From crushing purple-satined blackberries . . .

Tonight the wind runs cold
And whispers so of things that used to be . . .
I am lonely and blue . . .
Listen, wind . . . moon . . .

Bishop J. J. Cantwell approves mission poster held by Miss Ethel Bossart of the laymen's committee.

LENTEN MISSION DECREED

Catholics of Diocese Will Pledge Aid Today to Effort to Rouse Livelier Faith

Today in all Catholic churches of the diocese of Los Angeles and San Diego pledge cards will be distributed among those who attend the masses for their written promises to "make the mission," according to an announcement made yesterday at the office of the diocesan chancellor. The missions are to be conducted simultaneously throughout the diocese during Lent.

Bishop Cantwell yesterday issued instruction to all pastors concerning arrangements for the mission services. In each church a mission cross, fifteen feet high, black in color and draped with a corpus veil, will be erected in the sanctuary. On the outside of the church there will be placed a large banner bearing the slogan, "Make the Mission."

Mgr. John Cawley, rector of St. Vibiana's Cathedral, said that 40,000 members of the Holy Name Society in Southern California are expected to "make the mission" and assist pastors in reaching "fallen-away" Catholics. The Holy Name group, under the leadership of P. H. O'Neil, president, plans canvassing each parish from Santa Maria as far south as Calexico. Other Catholic social, fraternal and church organizations have indicated their intention of taking formal part in the great Lenten revival.

It was stated yesterday by Rev. Bernard J. Dolan, chancellor of the diocese, that the original number of missioners expected to come from eastern centers to assist in conducting the mission will include some of the most famous preachers of this generation of Catholics. The task of arranging the dates for all the more than 250 churches in the diocese has not yet been completed, Father Dolan said, nor have the individual missioners been appointed to respective churches.

Not only the English-speaking parishes will participate in the mission, but foreign speaking congregations as well. The mission committee for Mexican Catholics is especially active.

RAIL VETERAN TO BE BURIED TOMORROW

Last rites for William O. White, veteran Southern Pacific Railway employee, who died at his home, 2915 Estara avenue, Thursday, will be conducted at the chapel of McIntosh & Mater at 2 p.m. tomorrow followed by interment in the family plot in Forest Lawn Memorial Park.

Mr. White had lived in California thirty-two years, coming here from Ogden, Utah.

He was a member of the Eastgate Masonic Lodge of Los Angeles. He leaves his widow, Mrs. Ida J. White; two daughters, Mrs. Hazel V. Duke and Mrs. Ida White Watt, both of Los Angeles, and two grandchildren. A grandnephew, Orville J. Hart, has attracted some attention as a model for sculptors of babies, notably the one which stands in "Babyland" in Forest Lawn Memorial Park.

ATTORNEY APPOINTED FOR EDISON

William Mullendore New General Counsel Chosen by Electric Company

The appointment of William C. Mullendore as general attorney for the Southern California Edison Company was announced yesterday by John B. Miller, chairman of the Edison company board of directors. Mullendore was a representative of the United States relief administration in Germany during the post-war period. In 1917 he was assistant counsel, United States food administration. Following a year as a flying cadet in the United States Army Air Service, Mr. Mullendore again became identified with the food administration, as liquidator and counsel during 1919.

WILLIAM C. MULLENDORE

During the year 1922-23 he was Herbert Hoover's assistant and accompanied him on various official trips about the United States. He was with Mr. Hoover when the latter went to Alaska with the late President Harding.

Mr. Mullendore began his law career following his graduation from the University of Michigan with the class of 1914. He returned to Kansas, his birthplace, and practiced at Winfield until 1923. In 1924 he joined the Los Angeles law concern of Fredericks & Hanna. In 1927 he engaged in practice with offices in the Pershing Square Building and was engaged as special counsel by the Edison company.

Last of Quintet of Burning Oil Wells Now Out

The Getty No. 20 gasser, which has been burning at Santa Fe Springs for three days, sanded up early yesterday. It was the last of a five-well conflagration in the Santa Fe Springs field. For twenty-four hours preceding the death of the gasser it alternately spouted fire and sand and rocks. Between 3 and 4 a.m. and well sanded up, smothering the fire. Crews promptly started to clear away sand and debris.

The fire which flared up Wednesday quickly involved other wells. The General Petroleum Corporation's No. 145 C, which was drilling, blew in and the friction ignited the gas and oil. Two producers of the same company, the Getty No. 20, which was drilling, and Getty No. 2 a producer, became involved by the spreading fire. Three of the well fires were suffocated by wet cement, and one of them sanded up on Friday.

Nearly $800,000,000 is now on deposit in savings banks of Switzerland.

Barker Named in Tax Liens

Four income tax liens, aggregating nearly $500,000, were filed yesterday in United States District Court by Collector of Internal Revenue Welch against Lawrence Barker, of Lawrence Barker, Inc., of 210 West Seventh street. Mr. Barker is reported to be engaged in handling personal investments.

The liens are for additional taxes as follows: 1927, $25,539.46; 1926, $22,801.02; 1925, $27,785.35; 1924, $417,528.63; totaling, $493,654.46.

ACTRESS GIVEN ROLE

Samuel Goldwyn has cast Lilyan Tashman for the role of Erma in Ronald Colman's new picture "Bulldog Drummond." She will play the role of a woman criminal.

Talking Picture Made in Flight

Twenty-five hundred feet of talking motion pictures were taken yesterday on board a giant Fokker plane of Western Air Express while in flight from San Francisco to Los Angeles. This is the first time a sound picture ever has been made in an airplane. The experiment was conducted by E. O. Darling, San Francisco manager for Fox Movietone.

Eight hundred pounds of various kinds of equipment were in the cabin of the plane, in addition to seven passengers, whose conversations were recorded. The vast panorama of mountains and valleys was filmed and the passengers' exclamations over beauty spots were caught by the sound device.

Mission Seeks More Blankets

William E. Fowler, a director of the Midnight Mission, has written to the City Council asking that body whether it cannot aid the Mission in obtaining 2000 blankets either by gift or loan from some institution having an oversupply. His letter was referred to the Council's Finance Committee.

INSTRUCTIONS ASKED

The City Engineer has requested the City Council for instructions to prepare plans and ordinances for the paving of Solano avenue between North Broadway and Yuba street and has recommended that the Council make an allocation toward this improvement. The matter was referred to the Public Works Committee.

Thompson Burial at Floral Park

The body of Burnice Thompson, band musician and Southern California Edison Company employee, was returned yesterday to his parents' home, 125 West Fifty-fifth street. He died of pneumonia while on a visit to his boyhood home, Abingdon, Va. His parents, Mr. and Mrs. Ben W. Thompson, arrived here yesterday with the body. Funeral services will be conducted at 2:30 p.m. tomorrow at C. R. Vesper & Son's mortuary. Burial will be at Floral Park Cemetery.

Burnice Thompson was 24 years of age. He was a member of Hollenbeck Lodge, Masons, and of Roberts's Golden State Band.

RADIO STATIONS SEEKING TALENT ABOVE AVERAGE

Broadcasters Have Many Artists in Line, But Always Looking for Unusual

BY DR. RALPH L. POWER

The situation in regard to new talent for radio stations has not materially changed lately. That is, the various broadcasters report oversupply of singers and instrumentalists. There is always a waiting line.

On the other hand, many program directors are willing to give tryouts from time to time in the hope that something really new and something out of the ordinary will happen.

Most of the managers say they have plenty of average or medium talent. They are not at all interested in merely adding to this. But if a musician is far above the average, or some instrumental combination or vocal group is far superior to what a station now has, the audition periods will bring out that fact.

KHJ, the Don Lee station in Los Angeles, and KFOX, Long Beach, are both using the staff idea. The entertainers are all hired on a monthly basis and there is no present opportunity for engagements of once or twice a month.

FULL-TIME ARTISTS

However, E. K. Barnes and Glen Dolberg, comanagers of KHJ, and Harold G. Nichols, part-owner of KFOX, arrange auditions for outstanding talent. It should be understood, though, that there are no vacancies on these staffs and auditions will only be arranged where there is some tangible evidence that the inquirer really has something distinctive to offer in the way of radio artistry.

KGFH, Glendale, which operates only during daylight hours each week day, and is more or less a community station, holds trial periods every week day for an hour at 2 p.m., according to R. L. Rust, manager.

I call it a community station, not in the sense that it is supported by civic groups, but because it is a small station with a distinct service for the outlying district. It appeals particularly to those around the outskirts of Los Angeles and does well in not trying to compete with the larger broadcasters in the metropolitan area.

SMALLER STATION

For those who think they may be able to perform fairly creditably via radio, I should judge that KGFH would be a good bet. It admittedly can afford considerable practise for would-be radio performers but, of course, can hardly be said to offer much of an opportunity to cash in on a money basis except occasionally.

KFI and KELW, the one in Los Angeles and the other at Burbank, have discontinued actual audition periods. KFI, according to Carl Haverlin, commercial manager, has plenty of talent for its needs for some time to come. Only in exceptional cases can it devote time to tryouts.

KELW, of which H. W. Cole is manager, has found that audition time does not always prove satisfactory, especially for those who are regularly employed. So the station, by telephone reservation, will hear those who give promise of correspondence courses in the gentle art of radio entertaining.

I hope, along with all of the station managers, that this article will not bring to them a long line of "customers" for their trial periods.

But sometimes they discover exceptional talent in the various auditions. The problem seems to be one of protecting the station staffs from constant interruption and at the same time bringing to light talent out of the ordinary.

To those who have a deep-seated belief that they are somebody's gift to radioland the above schedule will enlighten them on how to go about convincing the stations. Of course, it will not give them a panacea as to how to crash the gates, but at least it will tell the best time to attempt to do so.

AUDITIONS THOROUGH

The field of radio entertainment, like everything else, has almost constant fluctuations. Some types of artistry will be a drug on the market today and eagerly sought after tomorrow. Many, like pianists and soprano soloists, face a situation where there are thousands who want to get on the radio. Some specialists, if they are extra good, usually have little difficulty in getting a few engagements each month. This includes callers for minstrel shows, experts on the jews-harp and harmonica, old-time barn dance players and other specialties in which members of the regular studio staffs cannot fill the bill.

Practically all of the broadcasters go about this tryout business in a workmanlike manner. They have good studio accompanists on the job for those without accompanists. And many of them have a miniature public address system so they can hear the auditions, simulating actual broadcast conditions, without, however, actually putting the numbers out into the ether realm.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE

The audition periods at KNX are at 10:30 a.m. each Tuesday and Saturday, according to Naylor Rogers, manager. George Gramlich is chairman of the audition committee. Telephone appointment for a specific day, however, must be made with Miss Marita Roehl at KNX.

The station force says that pianists seem to be a drug on the market and they have enough sopranos at present. Other types of entertainers can sometimes be used.

Of course, the stations owned and operated by church interests as a general rule use talent from their own congregations. Of this class of studios there is KTBI, the Bible Institute, Rev. John Glasse, program director; KGEF, Trinity Methodist Church, E. C. Ruckabee, studio director, and KFSG, Angelus Temple, R. H. Morrison, manager.

POUCH HAS TWO STATIONS

James R. Pouch, who owns both KMIC, Inglewood, and KFWC, Pomona, reports that his time for trials is between the hours of 2 and 4 p.m. Saturdays at each station.

Studio talent can often be used at the Inglewood station during daylight hours and over the Pomona transmitter during the evening schedule.

Paul Carson of the KEJK staff, Beverly Hills, announces that each Friday from 10 a.m. to 12 noon prospective talent is interviewed and given a try-out. Although the station operates largely on the staff plan of having artists on a full-time basis, it often happens that other people can be used once in a while on special programs.

NO TALENT FOR PASADENA

KPSN, Pasadena, under its present schedule, gives only a news broadcast service a half hour on week days and an hour of phonograph recordings, so no other talent could be used there.

Out in Hollywood KMTR announces that it is not interested in hearing new instrumentalists or singers.

KPLA, of which A. MacDonald is manager, has set aside 1 o'clock on Monday afternoons for auditions, both classic and popular types of entertainment, and KTM gives a hearing during the week at practically any time of the day. Telephone appointment, however, must be made in advance for a specified time.

The general radio entertainment situation, especially during the winter months with the customary influx of musicians from elsewhere, creates a hectic period for broadcasters.

AIR PROGRAMS AT ALL HOURS

Audiences Now Available at Practically Any Time

Radio Assumes Its Place as Great Social Agency

BY HAROLD A. LAFOUNT
Federal Radio Commissioner

Five years ago the prediction was made that radio broadcast in time would become a twenty-four-hour proposition. Few believed it at the time. Yet this very thing has come to pass.

Stations are operating on a twenty-four-hour basis with complete duplicate equipment in case of mechanical difficulty. The recent changes in time division of many stations has resulted in a number being on the air until 4 a.m., while scores begin the broadcast day at 5 or 6 a.m.

This is a good thing for radio in general. In the early days of radio programs it was quite the thing to confine the daily musical menus to a few hours in the evening.

MUSIC DIRECT TO HOMES

Now one has but to turn the dial and something in the line of music or speech will be wafted into the home.

There was a time when commercial sponsors believed that evening hours were the only thing. Yet it has been demonstrated amply that an audience can be created for any time of the day or night and for practically any type of program.

Health exercises seem to be the thing just now for the early morning broadcasters, followed by an hour or two of happy, cheery programs in the form of songs and miscellaneous music.

Concert music, with a news period or two, fits well into the midday schedule, with matinee musicales of orchestral music or phonograph records until, perhaps, 5 o'clock.

Then dinner music until 7 o'clock, with another news broadcast, holds sway in radioland, after which the gala evening programs go on until around 10 or 11 o'clock. Dance music then begins and lasts until the early morning hours.

TELEVISION IMPORTANT

There is a potential audience for every hour of the day or night. Of course, music predominates, but educational lectures are making a place for this class of broadcast.

Many colleges already make extensive use of radio for their extension activities. Besides a score of such institutions which are utilizing radio to its fullest extent, there are two projected plans, one in the East and another in the West, for gigantic colleges of the air.

What the future may have in store for radio is difficult to predict. I do think, however, that much of the development of the future will hinge on what use can be made of television.

As I pen this message to readers of The Times, that thought is uppermost in my mind.

Better Voices Present Need, Says Lecturer

Greater efficiency in talking motion pictures requires that actors and actresses improve their general health and vitality and at the same time develop more pleasing voices through a system of brain breathing, according to Dr. St. Louis Estes, physician, scientist and lecturer, who opens at the Majestic Theater on Sunday evening, January 13, for a series of seven nightly lectures.

"Talking pictures," says Dr. Estes, "are extremely deficient in the production of voice sounds because players do not know how to control the air to the brain. Voices that will carry more perfectly to the screen must come from the top of the head and not from the neck."

Members of the motion-picture colony are planning to hear Dr. Estes during his series of talks which will be given all during next week.

College in Its New Quarters

The Western Business College tomorrow begins activities in its new quarters at 5404 Sierra Vista avenue following a house warming Friday night. Pupils, alumni and their guests attended the opening reception and were welcomed by J. B. Knudson, the principal. Songs by Miss Ilene Johnson, accompanied by Miss Doris Chadney, and dramatic readings by Miss Blanche Rourke, were followed by dancing. The Carrol Knudson Orchestra played.

FINAL SERVICE TODAY FOR MORRIS NEWMAN

Funeral services for Morris Newman, father-in-law of Samuel Yellen, head of the Yellen Mortgage Company, will be conducted this afternoon. Mr. Newman, who came here from Bayonne, N. J., three years ago, died Friday of heart disease. He resided with a son and a daughter at 5432 Harold Way. He leaves a widow and nine children. Services will be conducted by Rev. Rudolph Lupo and Cantor Herschoff of Temple Beth El at Glassband and Groman's undertaking parlors, 901 Washington Boulevard.

Mrs. E. Barner of College Station, Tex., has developed a flourishing candy-making business with sales amounting to an average of $800 a month. She made her start in a home demonstration club in El Paso county.

Babies Will be Judged Today

Judging will begin shortly before noon today in the first annual baby show and children's health contest to be conducted at the Los Angeles College of Chiropractic, 918 Venice Boulevard. Dr. Charles H. Wood, chairman, yesterday announced the entry list for the finals totals more than 150.

The contest for a perfect specimen of California juvenile health will be judged by the State Board of Chiropractic Examiners and Dr. Wood. Dr. Wood plans to award fifteen medals and thirty ribbons to the winners.

GREATER SHOW POLICY SET

Los Angeles' Paramount Theater Programs Will be Like Those of New York and Chicago

When the Metropolitan Theater throws open its doors on Thursday the 24th inst., under its new name of the Paramount Theater there will be inaugurated a new policy of enlarged program similar to that offered at the Paramount Theater in New York and the Chicago of Chicago, in the matter of stage presentations and pictures.

The foregoing has been brought about largely through efforts of the Publix officials on the Pacific Coast,

HERMAN WOBBER.

Herman Wobber, general manager of the Coast division; R. E. Crabill, director of theater operation; Gus Eyssell, manager of the Los Angeles Paramount, and Ed Olmstead, advertising manager.

The changes to be made in the physical aspects of the theater already have been announced. They include huge new electric signs for Broadway and Hill and Sixth streets, new lighting for the outside and new marquees. Inside the facilities have been greatly enlarged for handling the amplified programs. The organ, which is to have as its new virtuoso Milton Charles, remembered here for his association with the old Million Dollar, is to be completely reconditioned.

The Paramount Theater in Los Angeles now has at its service all of the vast resources of the Publix Theater Corporation. This organization, whose director of stage production is Jack Partington, California producer, each year offers fifty-two complete revues and musical comedies, and each one tours the complete Publix circuit, playing in thirty-five theaters. Every revue and musical comedy unit is given leading names of the legitimate and variety stage. The foremost stage dancing instructors and organizers create and develop the chorus features and specialties.

Publix maintains its own scenic effect and costume studios in New York. A huge music department prepares original orchestra arrangements for each show. Noted song and lyric writers are engaged in writing song hits to be featured in the revues.

NEW BOOKING PLAN

A new booking arrangement has been concluded with the Paramount-Famous-Lasky Corporation whereby the Paramount is to play all of the new Paramount talking pictures starting with George Bancroft in "The Wolf of Wall Street," on Thursday, the 24th inst. This will be followed by such talking pictures as "The Dummy," featuring Ruth Chatterton, Jeanne Eagels in "The Letter," "The Doctor's Secret" and "The Canary Murder Case."

The first of the enlarged stage presentations will be "The Beaux Arts Frolic," considered the greatest production of Frank Cambria. He is a member of the Publix producing staff, which includes such notables as John Murray Anderson, Boris Petroff, Joseph Santley, Charles Niggemeyer and R. H. Burnside.

MUSICAL FEATURE

The Paramount will continue to bid for the patronage of music lovers. Milton Charles, the new organist, comes here direct from the Chicago, where he has had marked success both as theater concert organist and phonograph recording artist.

The changes being made in the organ will make it the largest in this city, the equivalent of a 200-piece symphony orchestra or jazz or military band.

Present prices will be retained, but the opening day of the Paramount show hereafter will be Thursday instead of Friday.

NEW COURSES ARRANGED

Courses in strength of materials, and engineering mechanics will be given by the University of California extension division, 815 South Hill street, Wednesday evenings, commencing the 16th inst. Gerald Marsac is instructor. Strength of materials classes will be from 7 to 8 p.m. Engineering mechanics classes will be from 8 to 9 o'clock bination which is not always cohesive. It is not hard to plumb the reason when one watches his eyes dream at the vista from his window, at the pictures of the past, and then swing back, boringly as if to watch the words he speaks. His eyes twinkle, but one gets the impression the twinkle hangs like a block light at a signal tower while the sight charges through subterfuge as double trucks rattle over fish-plates, stopping only at the terminal of perception without so much as a glance at the way freights on the sidings of men's minds.

If the twinkle is there at the finish, so much the better for the individual and for the Southern Pacific. This is the man who directs the destinies of one of the nine corporations in the United States today—five of them railroads—that have capital assets of more than $1,000,000,000.

How did he do it?

Well, when the agent put him to work as a ticket clerk he made a good clerk, so they hung the title of assistant agent on him. It was one of those titles that carried a small increase in salary, a large increase in work and what glory he could get out of the two. Part of the work was to pound a telegraph key as well as pound dates on the backs of tickets which looked like Chinese novels then as much as they do now.

SAM KATZ.

WITH HAND AND HEAD

But the capacity for growth had been born. He worked and he wrote. He helped to make the Argonaut, a magazine with whose name the literati still conjure; he wrote for the Overland Monthly, the Black Cat, the New York Sun, the Illustrated American and a host of others. He did well, both in writing and railroading, so the railroad appended to his name the title of agent for the Motor Roads Company.

It was a company that operated those funny accordion cars through the Orange Belt. The passengers sat in one end and tried to dodge the smoke from the coal or oil motor at the other end. Mr. Shoup says they were thirty-five or forty-ton affairs and were quite the thing on short-haul traffic. The Motor Roads Company had three of them. Soon the Southern Pacific acquired two of them and the rest is obvious. (Was it mentioned that Mr. Shoup was the agent?) This is one of the recollections that gets a twinkle.

AHEAD OF WORK

At any rate, young Mr. Shoup, after five years of wrestling with the problems of transportation in San Bernardino county, was sent to San Francisco in 1896 and put in the general passenger department to subjugate rates, advertisements and any other thing that needed a master. Mr. Shoup knew more subjugating holds than his tasks, so he found time between falls helping to establish the Sunset Magazine as a railroad house organ. He did such a good job of it that when it was sold fifteen years later it enjoyed a prestige that the intervening years have failed to shatter.

Mr. Shoup would write as well as railroad. He couldn't be stopped. So the Southern Pacific took the cue and kept writing bigger and better titles for him.

He became district freight and passenger agent at San Jose in 1905 and shortly thereafter was sent to Portland as assistant general freight agent when the Southern Pacific and Union Pacific were operated jointly during the Harriman regime. In 1906 San Francisco had a little disturbance which has become more or less prominent on the dial of destruction and the Southern Pacific went through a realignment designed to help the situation. Paul Shoup was called back as assistant general passenger agent. He moved things so well he was promoted, two years later, to the assistant general managership of all the Southern Pacific electric lines, oil companies and other properties.

BECOMES ANGELENO

Neither Mr. Shoup nor the Southern Pacific, now that both had acquired the habit, could keep from opening doors, so he was made president of the Pacific Electric Railway, an "Espee" subsidiary which blankets Southern California's urban and suburban territory like Dixie's dew. It was then he went to Los Angeles. His directing hand was needed there, but he retained control, for the same reason, of the Southern Pacific Electric lines in Oakland, San Jose, Fresno and Stockton.

He was in Los Angeles until 1918, when the Federal government took over operation of the railroads. Mr. Shoup's twenty-seven years of building Mr. Shoup and helping to build the Southern Pacific caused another door to swing open. He returned to San Francisco embellished with the title of vice-president and was put in charge of everything that was left. The effect was that while the government ran the trains, or tried to, William Sproule, recently retired president, and Paul Shoup ran the railroad, something akin to a distinction with a big difference.

TOP OF THE LADDER

From that time on it was merely a question of swinging doors. Figuratively of course. He became executive vice-president in 1925 and on the 1st inst., sat down in the president's chair, able to call it his own.

Can the average young man feel assured of an existent opportunity to do the same or as well?

"Read," replies Mr. Shoup, "what John F. Sinclair says in this article on 'Some Builders of Prosperity' in the current Review of Reviews:

"'There is more demand for big business leaders today than ever before, because there are more big positions to fill. Young men, eager for advancement, will find more opportunities in the field of industry and business than their fathers found twenty years ago.'"

Is higher education essential?

"Knowledge is to be gained in all walks of life; in all experiences Knowledge and experience broaden the intellect. Broadening is essential. There is a school in every daily task whose lessons are there to be absorbed. The great value of colleges and universities is that they systematize and compress the rudiments of knowledge."

THE HIGHER EDUCATION

Mr. Shoup, incidentally, is not a university graduate, but Leland Stanford, Jr., University found his knowledge ample to bestow a trusteeship.

Is a "drag" or "pull" necessary?

"If may serve as an introduction. Frequently it is a hindrance rather than a help. The man is what he makes himself, irrespective of outside influence. The most constant of all attributes of accomplishment is ability; the determination and knowledge to fulfill ones tasks and absorb new responsibilities."

Personal character?

"A man's personal habits must be such as to command the confidence and respect of those with whom he comes in contact."

ON SCHEDULE TIME

Paul Shoup has brought his train in. That's how he did it, with four omissions. They are the woman who was Miss Rose Wilson before he married her in 1900; Carl, the oldest son, now an instructor at Columbia University; Jack, post-graduate student at Stanford, and Louise, undergraduate at Stanford.

"Proper home environment," explains Mr. Shoup, "is a vital factor in any achievement."

That's how he did it. What he did it with was the ability to high-ball down the main line with personality at the throttle and integrity for a road bed. Why? Because he needed a job at 17 to keep on eating.

FUNERAL RITES FOR CORONER NANCE'S FATHER DELAYED

Funeral arrangements for Benjamin F. Nance, father of Coroner Frank Nance, are being deferred, subject to the recovery of the widow, who is seriously ill, it was announced yesterday. Arrangements are in charge of R. C. Dellenbaugh, and burial will be in Forest Lawn Memorial Park. The time could not be set until Mrs. Nance can attend.

Mr. Nance died on Thursday at his home, 1905 Dracena street. He resided in Los Angeles for forty-one years, and had a wide circle of acquaintances. He was a thirty-second degree Mason, and was a member of the First Congregational Church of Los Angeles.

Besides his widow, Mrs. Neva Nance, he leaves two daughters, Mrs. Alice Buchia of Los Angeles and Mrs. L. A. Monahan of San Francisco; two sons, Frank Nance and Ira H. Nance of Los Angeles, and a sister, Mrs. Mary Fulkerson.

PORTRAIT OF MRS. DORSEY GIFT TO CITY

Teachers Will Present Painting as Memorial of Beloved School Head

To establish a tangible and permanent tribute to Mrs. Susan M. Dorsey, who is retiring as Superintendent of City Schools after nine years' service in that capacity, the united teachers of the city will present to Los Angeles a $3000 portrait of Mrs. Dorsey at a mass meeting to be held in her honor Wednesday, the 23rd inst., at Shrine Auditorium. The portrait was painted by John Hubbard Rich and paid for by volunteer offerings from the teaching forces of the city.

At the same time a Susan M. Dorsey scholarship will be announced and dedicated by the teachers. This is to be established from the surplus remaining after the portrait was acquired.

City and county officials, Gov. Young and his staff, the presidents of all Southern California universities and their respective staffs have been invited as honor guests. In all about 300 special invitations have been sent out. A cap and gown procession of college presidents and other outstanding educators will precede the formal unveiling of the portrait. Arrangements for the affair are in the hands of the six teacher organizations of the city, acting for all the teachers.

Peace Offering in Love Tangle Used as Weapon

Accused of using a peace offering to slug a rival yesterday, John A. Cooney, 37 years of age, a chauffeur living at 1407 West Eleventh street, was locked up at Georgia-street Police Station. The book charge is suspicion of assault with a deadly weapon. The deadly weapon mentioned is a brass antique vase which Cooney is accused of bending over the head of George Rupp, 34, of 1027 South Lake street.

Cooney had courted Miss Lillian Waltman of 938 South Alvarado street, it is said. Recently he had been displaced in her company by Rupp, police state. Today Cooney went to the Waltman home, carrying the brass antique. It was a peace offering. Cooney told the police. George Rupp was calling on Miss Waltman at the time Cooney arrived. The attack followed.

Delta Upsilon Initiates Group

A.A. GRUBB.

Delta Mu Phi, local fraternity at the University of California at Los Angeles, yesterday officially was installed as a chapter of Delta Upsilon, national social fraternity, the ceremonies taking place at the Los Angeles Elks' Club at 10 a.m. Fifty-two former members of Delta Mu Phi were initiated.

The installation ceremonies were under the direction of Lynne J. Bevan, a Delta Upsilon alumnus from Chicago University and a member of the national council of the fraternity. After a luncheon at the Elks' Club, an automobile tour was made of both the present campus and the new Westwood campus of U.C.L.A. From 4 to 6 p.m. an informal reception to all students and friends of the university was held at the chapter house at 943 Heliotrope Drive.

The formal installation banquet was given at 7 p.m. at the Elks' Club. Dr. Ernest C. Moore, director of the University of California at Los Angeles, and George Cleaver, president of the local chapter of Delta Upsilon, spoke.

Flyer Will Test Plane Stability

A demonstration of the stability of modern airplanes operating under all usual conditions in the air will be held at the Lincoln Air Lines on South Angelus Mesa Drive this afternoon, according to Herbert R. Miller, local airplane distributor. Pilot Harold Chapman, flying a Command-Aire biplane, will maneuver the plane into a number of different positions, from which he will allow the plane to right itself "hands off."

A Command-Aire recently attracted national attention, according to Miller, when the pilot left the cockpit and sat several feet back on the fuselage while the plane traveled for several miles through the air. The stunt will not be attempted today, Miller said, as the program will consist of maneuvers and not stunts.

The Lincoln Air Lines field lies between that of Sperl Aerodrome and the field of the Pacific Air Transport on South Angelus Mesa Drive.

De La Huerta's Daughter to Wed

Announcement of plans for the marriage of Senorita Elisa De La Huerta, niece of Adolfo de la Huerta, former President of Mexico, to Señor C. Alvarez Gayou of Phoenix, Ariz., Monday at St. Vincent's Church, was made yesterday.

Senor Gayou was formerly a lieutenant-colonel in the Mexican army under Gen. De la Huerta, but now is engaged in business at Phoenix. The former President will act as best man at the wedding. The bride and groom will leave immediately after the ceremony for their Arizona home.

Bunko 'Optician' Pair Sought in Quackery Cases

Two bunco men, posing as traveling opticians, who are touring the city obtaining large sums of money from unsuspecting victims by telling them that they are in danger of total blindness and then offering a miraculous radium treatment, yesterday became the object of a county-wide search by the Sheriff's office.

The search was ordered after relatives of Mrs. Minnie Bunts, a widow living at 411 East Thirty-ninth street, reported that she had paid the men $300 for eye treatments.

According to the report, the "opticians" called at Mrs. Bunts's home when she lived at 10331 Cedar street, Inglewood, last September. After examining the woman's eyes the men reported that she faced total blindness and possible paralysis unless she took immediate treatments. A miraculous radium cure was offered for $300 and Mrs. Bunts accepted the offer at once, the report states. After obtaining the money the men disappeared and have not been seen since.

'Dog's Life' Dog Quits This Life

Bill, who played the dog in "A Dog's Life" with Charlie Chaplin, died yesterday. Chaplin rescued Bill from the pound in 1916, and shortly afterward the canine appeared before the camera with the famous comedian.

Bill was the dog whose tail, protruding from a hole in Charlie's pants, beat the drum. That rated a big laugh, and since then Bill had been assured a living on the Chaplin lot. Old age took him off. He was buried on the lot.

Five Young Men Charged With Robbing Woman

A complaint charging five youths with robbing Mrs. Ruby Champion, wealthy Beverly Hills society woman, was issued by Justice of the Peace Miller of Huntington Park yesterday.

The men named in the complaint are Ralph Bambino, Edward Locke, James Jarowitz, Lester Collins, and Edward English. They are accused of attacking Mrs. Champion and her two escorts, Joseph Lewis and James Pamplin, New Year's Eve and stripping rings valued at $1650 from the woman's fingers.

According to Capt. Peoples of the Sheriff's robbery investigation detail, and Deputy Sheriffs Hurst and Wheeler, Bambino confessed implicating the other men after the loot was found in his home.

JURY MAY VISIT "MURDER FARM"

Northcott Faces Journey to Asserted Crime Scene

Winslows Will Testify They Think Their Sons Slain

Change in Belief Sequel to Official Conference

BY JAMES M. KENDRICK
"Times" Staff Representative

RIVERSIDE, Jan. 12.—Gordon Stewart Northcott probably will face on his chicken ranch the jury which holds his fate in its hands during the coming week when the twelve jurors in Superior Judge Freeman's court will be taken to the scene of the accused youth's asserted murder orgy.

This move to the Northcott ranch is expected to follow Mr. and Mrs. N. H. Winslow's appearance on the witness stand Monday morning when court reconvenes, during which the parents of Louis and Nelson Winslow will testify that they now believe their two young sons who disappeared last May from their Pomona home were mistreated and slain on Northcott's Wineville chicken farm.

MUTE EVIDENCE

Bits of mute evidence which the State will contend constitutes the circumstantial evidence that Northcott dismembered and later destroyed with quicklime the bodies of the boys whom he is accused of murdering will be used against him when Mr. and Mrs. Winslow take the witness stand, Dep. Dist.-Atty. Redwine said today.

J. Clark Sellers, Los Angeles criminologist, who has conducted the scientific examination of the evidence produced by the Riverside investigation, will play a major role in linking this evidence with the asserted murders.

Today the prosecution indicated that Mrs. Winslow now believes the cap found in the room of Northcott's chicken house was one in the possession of her older son when he disappeared from their Pomona home. Until yesterday, the mother questioned the identification of the cap.

CONFERENCE HELD

The switch to testimony concerning the Winslow boys was made suddenly yesterday afternoon following a conference with the boys' parents. Until that time Dep. Dist. Attys. Redwine and Kelley had concentrated their efforts on producing evidence indicating that Northcott had slain the Mexican youth whose headless body was found in Los Angeles county last February. Northcott is accused of this murder by his nephew, Sanford Clark, whose testimony will play a parallel role with scientists who are to be called by the State.

Young Clark divulged the asserted murders after his arrest on an immigration-violation charge and accused his uncle of the murder of four boys, including Walter Collins, for which he will be tried separately from the present indictment.

At least three surprise witnesses are expected to be called during the middle of the coming week, it was indicated by the prosecution today. The defense also asserts it has surprise witnesses with whom it will attempt to refute the testimony of the prosecution.

LEACH CASE JURORS OUT SIXTY HOURS

Progress Toward Verdict in Stock Promotion Fraud Trial Indicated

After deliberating for sixty hours on the fate of Martin A. Leach and five other defendants, accused of stock promotion frauds, the jury in Judge Shaw's court was ordered to a hotel for the night at 9 p.m. yesterday. It was indicated that they might arrive at a verdict before Monday.

Those who were tried with Leach are Ernest P. Hughes, C. W. Chestnut, Frank Hurlburt, C. H. Walker and Clarence Birney. The six men originally were placed on trial with thirteen others on an indictment charging one count of criminal conspiracy, twenty counts of grand theft and seventeen counts of violation of the Corporate Securities Act. During the course of the three months trial, however, the number of defendants was reduced to six and three of the counts charging violation of the securities act were dismissed. The indictment charged the defendants with disposing of mortgage notes in the Pacific Southwest Loan and Mortgage Company without having obtained permission from the Corporation Commissioner.

That the jury of eight women and four men is making progress in its deliberations was indicated yesterday at noon when Judge Shaw called the jurors into court. They reported no verdicts had been reached, but asked if they could legally return verdicts applying to some of the defendants on certain counts, without reaching an agreement on other defendants and counts. Advised that they could take such action, the jurors went to a downtown hotel for luncheon and returned to resume their deliberations during the afternoon. The jury received the case at 4 o'clock Thursday.

STABBING AFFRAY MAY CAUSE DEATH

Detectives of Georgia-street station last night were investigating the stabbing of Roy Cowen, 40 years of age, of 3129 Fairmont street. According to Detective Lieutenant Jackson of the Georgia-street Receiving Hospital, where Cowen was taken for serious stab wounds in his left side, as a result of which he may die, an argument over wages had arisen between Cowen and a colored brickmason employed at his place of business, 213 West Eighth street. Police arrested John Hunter, charging him with assault with a deadly weapon, in connection with the case.

UNION CHIEF FACES JAIL

Organized Dyers' President, C. M. Murphy, Ordered Arrested in Slugging of Cleaner

Warrants for the arrest of Charles M. Murphy, 1690 West Boulevard, president of the cleaners' and dyers' union, and Jeff Goodman, 2802 Ganahl street, a member of the union, were issued yesterday by Municipal Judge Reed on charge of battery committeed against Frank D. Janovics, independent cleaner, late last summer, and Riley Delaney, asserted union slugger, was arraigned on the same charge.

Delaney asked time to plead, which was granted by Judge Reed, who set the 15th inst., as the date for plea and fixed bail at $1000. Bail on the warrants issued for Murphy and Goodman was also set at $1000 by the court.

The complaint on which Delaney was arraigned, charges all three men as principals in the slugging outrage. It was issued by Deputy City Prosecutor Margid and sworn out by Detective Lieutenant Hynes, who declared that he has proof that Murphy and Goodman took Delaney in an automobile to the house near Eighty-third street and Vermont avenue, to which Janovicz was lured under pretext of clothing to be cleaned and then assaulted with a piece of gas pipe covered with rubber hose. Delaney was identified by Janovics as the man who assaulted him shortly after his arrest a few days ago.

Following his arrest, according to Hynes, Delaney admitted that he knew Murphy well and that the latter had several times "propositioned" him in regard to independent cleaners and dyers, against whom Murphy is declared by Hynes to have conducted a campaign of terrorization for nearly three years.

Following the confession of Barry Plimier, union acid thrower, who was sentenced to serve six months in jail recently by Judge Reed following his plea of guilty to a charge of throwing acid into the plant of Charles Schulman, independent cleaner, at 103 North Grand avenue, Hynes expects to be able to clean up the entire gang of sluggers and acid throwers, most of whom were named by Plimier, within a short time.

FALL DAMAGES INCREASED

Circus Girl Who Got Only $500 in First Suit Over Accident Dons Modest Gard, Gets $15,000

A fall from the back of Jewel, elephant owned by the Al G. Barnes Circus, was worth $15,000, according to a jury in Superior Judge Bishop's court, who awarded this amount to Miss Lila McComas, film actress, plaintiff in the suit.

After several hours considering the testimony the jury brought in their verdict yesterday, the amount being $14,500 more than Miss McComas was given by a jury in the first trial of the action.

FIRST SUIT WINS $500

The judgment was returned against the Alliance Investment Company, the actual owners of the circus.

In the first trial of the case the jury only gave Miss McComas $500. After the trial some of the jurors told the little actress that had she worn a more modest costume at the trial and longer dresses the amount would have been more. Superior Judge Beecher, who heard the first case, decided that the jurors should not be influenced by the clothing a litigant wears and granted a new trial.

Miss McComas, represented by Attorney William Ring, asserted that her fall came while she was riding on the back of the elephant during the filming of a picture, the accident caused by the slipping of the girths that held the houdah on the animal's back.

OWNERS GIVEN BLAME

The defendant company denied any liability for the accident, asserting that if there was any liability it was on the Fox Film Company, the concern making the picture. They placed the blame on Miss McComas, declaring she fainted and fell out of the houdah.

However, the jury fixed the blame on the owners of the elephant and gave Miss McComas $15,000 for permanent internal injuries she asserted she received as a result of the tumble.

MORRISSEY TO HEAD PHOENIX BANK BOARD

PHOENIX, Jan. 12. (Exclusive) At the annual meeting today of the First National Bank of Arizona, the post of chairman of the board of directors was filled by election of Thomas A. Morrissey, president of the Pacific National Bank of Los Angeles. Chauncey H. McKillips, local capitalist, was installed as president, succeeding Thomas Armstrong, Jr., who will remain in the directorship and will continue as bank counsel. Wayne Thornburg, prominent cattleman, also was added to the board. Mr. McKillips for years was at the head of the local stores of the J. C. Penney Company. Sylvan C. Ganz, president of the Arizona Bankers' Association, remains as executive vice-president and Carleton A. Washburn as cashier.

SUTTER COUNTY JURY FAILS IN LAND CASE

YUBA CITY, Jan. 12. (AP)—The trial of K. Yoshioka and K. While there is a possibility that it may leave tomorrow, the crew is said to be desirous of remaining here over the week-end.

FOUR IN FIVE INDIANS HAD IT

MILWAUKEE (Wis.) Jan. 12. (AP)—The argument that eating rough foods keeps teeth in good condition may be proved fallacious.

Skeletons of 200 Indians, all between 600 and 1000 years old, are under inspection by Alton K. Fisher of the Milwaukee Public Museum. The bones were excavated to determine if uncooked food gave the natives perfect teeth.

Evidences of numerous diseases of the teeth have caused a refutation of a popular theory. Mr. Fisher has found that Wisconsin Indians suffered from pyorrhea, abscesses, decayed teeth and a variety of infections.

PROHIBITION CONFERENCE ON TUESDAY

Thousands of Christians to Observe Anniversary of Dry Amendment

Thousands of Christians of various denominations are expected to attend the Prohibition Conference to be conducted on the afternoon and evening of the 15th inst., at Trinity Methodist Church in celebration of the ninth anniversary of the going into effect of the Eighteenth Amendment. The public is invited.

DR. WILEY J. PHILLIPS

The conference will begin at 1:30 p.m. and will continue until 6 p.m., following which a banquet will be served at the church. Reservations may be made by telephoning VAndyke 7527.

Speakers in the afternoon will include Dr. Wiley J. Phillips, editor of the California Voice; W. I. Hull, Los Angeles county chairman of the Prohibition party; Dr. Frank Stevens, pastor of First Methodist Church at Santa Monica; H. Clay Needham, and Charles E. Stokes, prominent prohibition lecturers. Dr. M. Len Hutchins, national medical director of the W.C.T.U. will preside.

Addresses by J. C. Bell, W. C. Pearce, ex-Governor of Oregon, and Mrs. Eva C. Wheeler, State president of the W.C.T.U., will feature the program at the banquet.

War Gas Used on Fruit Pests

HONOLULU, Jan. 12. (AP)—Chloropicrin, a toxic gas used by the United States Army during the World War, is to be used in experiments seeking to increase Hawaiian pineapple production by parasite control.

Tests already indicate that toxic war gas destroys the nematodes which stunt pineapple growth by attacking roots of the young plants, and at the same time stimulates the plants themselves, acting as a fertilizer. Nematodes nest in the soil and reproduce some 300 times a month.

Soviet Rejects American Films

MOSCOW, Jan. 12. (AP)—The chief repertoire committee has rejected 393 out of 746 foreign-produced, chiefly American films, as unfit for soviet citizens on account of their bourgeois ideology, adventure and mysticism.

Out of 324 soviet-made films twenty-six had been rejected on account of their poor artistic value and incorrect treatment of social problems.

MOTORCYCLE RIDER INJURED IN CRASH

Justice Price, 25 years of age, living at 426 East 106th street, driver of a motorcycle, was injured last night in a collision at Thirtieth street and University avenue by an automobile driven by Walter Vannier, 819 South Beacon street. Price was treated at Georgia-street Receiving Hospital for possible fractured skull and internal injuries and is not expected to live, according to hospital surgeons. Neither driver was held by police.

AMUNDSEN "GAS" TANK BELIEVED DISCOVERED

OSLO (Norway) Jan. 12. (AP)—A gasoline tank resembling that on the French Latham airplane in which Roald Amundsen and five companions disappeared into the North last June has been reported found by a fisherman in a remote part of Lofoten Islands, off Northwestern Norway. Bad weather so far has prevented authorities reaching the place for examination of the wreckage.

Oil Man Gives School Orchard

PITTSBURGH, Jan. 12. (Exclusive)—J. S. Trees, who has made money in oil, has a hobby befitting his name. He is giving a peach orchard to the school for boys at Warrendale. In return he is getting one elm, weighing forty tons, which it will cost him $5000 to move to his estate.

AFRICAN STUDENTS TO TOUR AMERICA

NEW YORK, Jan. 12. (AP)—Forty South African students during January will tour a part of the United States to observe this country's college, home, industrial and civic life by invitation of the National Student Federation of America. Their itinerary includes Washington, Chicago, Detroit, Buffalo and Boston. In the party are twenty-six girls, thirteen men and two chaperons, all of Dutch, English and French descent.

COLLEGE SALES LARGE

AMES (Iowa) Jan. 12. (AP)—By winning seventy-one championships and 130 first prizes, the best record at the International Livestock Exposition, Iowa added substantially to her agricultural income this year. Sale of Iowa State College live stock brought the school alone approximately $11,600.

Students of Geology All 'Up in Air'

Marking what is believed to be the first employment of an airplane for such a purpose by college students, seniors of the geology department of the University of Southern California took the air yesterday for their weekly field operations under the direction of Dr. A. J. Tieje, chairman of the geology department and professor.

Flying a single-motored Fokker monoplane of the Stoody Company of Whittier, eleven students in groups of three, each accompanied by Dr. Tieje, made four flights along the base of the Santa Ana Mountains and foothills to El Toro and return. The flights, which lasted from an hour and fifteen minutes to two hours each, were considered of especial value in illustrating topographical features of the district south of Whittier, which has been used for field work by the class during the last twelve weeks.

Among those making the air trip was Miss Dorothy A. Moyer, graduate student and instructor in geology. The trip was optional with the students, not affecting their class standing in the event they chose not to make it.

LITERATI AT MEETING HERE

William J. Locke, Hamlin Garland and Others of Note Honor Session of State Librarians

William J. Locke, distinguished British novelist, was chief speaker at the sixth district meeting of California Library Association members at the Biltmore yesterday afternoon. More than 400 men and women had attended the morning meet, which concluded with a luncheon.

The meeting opened with a short business session at 10 a.m. and was followed by informal talks on books, book-selling, authorship and book-reviewing. Roger Boutell of the Tecolote, Santa Barbara book shop, one of the veterans in book selling in California, discussed the flood of publications from which the merchant must pick to please the customer.

"GENTLEMAN OF OLD SCHOOL"

Hamlin Garland, who called himself "an elderly gentleman of the old school," discussed the writing angle. He spoke of the contempt of the modern writer for authors like himself, who would rewrite a passage twenty times. He declared that of the 10,000 books published yearly, more than half die in three months and another thousand within six months from the date of publication.

"Moby Dick," he said, was one of the few books to which he could return with unfailing delight. The radio, too, came in for criticism. "Authors may soon be minstrels singing their books into the air," he predicted.

Library, personnel, and reference service to adolescent and college readers were subjects discussed during the afternoon meeting, which was handled in three different groups in the library building.

NOTABLES OF LETTERS

Among others who attended the luncheon were Mrs. Locke and Miss Locke, Mr. and Mrs. Cottrell of Australia; Harrison Leussler, Mr. and Mrs. Penton, both writers on child psychology, Dr. Henry Hoyt, Long Beach, Carey McWilliams, Dr. Dorothea Moore, Mr. and Mrs. Everett R. Perry, Mr. and Mrs. Orra E. Monnette, Mrs. Otto J. Zahn and Mrs. J. Wells Smith. Miss Althea Warren, assistant librarian, presided at the luncheon, and Miss Eleanor Stephens, secretary of the association, assisted.

FRANCE WANTS SONS

PARIS, Jan. 12. (AP)—Children of the 195,000 French people residing in countries adjoining France will be given a holiday in the homeland this year. To combat the tendency of children living abroad to forget their native land, the Union of French Nationals Abroad intends to bring them back to France at least once a year, in the hope that they eventually will return to stay.

HOLD ON TO HEALTH

THE way to health is often paved with good intentions. But if you don't fulfill your resolutions the druggist will continue to fill your prescriptions.

Why not hold on to health? It is largely a matter of a sensible adjustment of play to work.

The business man's hours at his desk—the housewife's monotonously recurring duties, should be balanced by care-free hours in the open.

Why not get out into the country? Fresh air, sunshine, flowers, trees and exercise are all as necessary to health and happiness as food.

The prescription which gives these essentials calls for a car. With a good automobile you may substitute fresh air for physic and sunshine for medicine.

If you already own one car, you will find that a second will afford the same pleasures to your wife and children that you yourself enjoy. The cost is more than equalized by the benefits.

Juvenal said: "A sound mind in a sound body is a thing to pray for." It is also a thing to play for. And the motor car bears you swiftly to your playground.

The opportunities for buying a car economically are enhanced by reading the want-ad "Automobiles" columns of The Times, where the best used car values on the market are listed. The dealers will be glad to give them a satisfying test for you.

HORSE EXHIBIT PLANS RUSHED

Closing Date for Entries to be the 28th Inst.

Williams Says Details Will be Completed Soon

Contenders to Appear in Local Show Ring

Details of the eighth annual Los Angeles National Horse Show, to be held at the Ambassador Auditorium from February 16 to 23, yesterday designated the 28th inst. as the closing date for all entries.

Marcus H. Hellman, chairman of the executive committee, announced that plans for the event are being rushed to completion. Chairman Hellman was formerly president of the local Horse Show Association.

In more than a decade Mr. Hellman has been prominently known as an exhibitor at the leading horse shows throughout the United States. He is an authority on stock horses and will be one of the judges of the class from February 2 to 9, at the San Francisco show.

FAMOUS SHOWS

In the last eight years Mr. Hellman has served on important committees for the successful promotion of the local equine exhibitions and through his efforts, in co-operation with other Southern California horsemen, the shows have become internationally famous.

More than 400 champions and challengers will compete for $40,000 in prizes this year at the Ambassador classic. The equine aristocrats will be valued at more than $500,000, according to Mat S. Dixon, secretary of the show.

Active management of the show was assumed last week by W. S. Williams, following his arrival here from the Northwest. In the last year Mr. Williams has managed eighteen important horticultural events throughout the country. This will be his fifth year as manager of the Los Angeles show. Mr. Hitts said yesterday:

"We will have an exhibition and number of promising new candidates for horse show honors that will make their initial bow here. The contributions include champion hackney three-gaited, heavy harness, roadsters, hunters, jumpers, saddle and stock horses."

OPENING EVENT

A matinee will open the show on the afternoon of February 16. Programs with new features daily will be given during the entire week. A seating capacity of approximately 10,000 will be provided.

Tickets will be on sale February 1 at the Ambassador, Dyas Company, the Horse Show Association headquarters, telephone VAndike 2311. Until that date reservations for box and loge seats may be made at the show headquarters.

Announcement has been made by W. F. Miner, president of the association, that the horse show ball, one of the notable Southern California social events of the year, will be held at the Ambassador on the night of February 16. John Milner is chairman and C. M. Crawford is secretary of the ball committee.

Burial Tuesday for Preacher of Nazarene Faith

The funeral of Rev. John W. Tuthill, Nazarene preacher, will be conducted Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock at First Nazarene Church, Ninth and Wall streets. Brown Brothers, morticians, will be in charge and burial will be made in Inglewood Park Cemetery.

Mr. Tuthill was ordained thirteen years ago as the Pasadena Nazarene church. Six years ago his health failed and he has acted as supply minister throughout Southern California. His death occurred at his home in Santa Monica last Thursday and was ascribed to myocarditis.

Mr. Tuthill was born in New York in 1870. He leaves his widow, Mrs. Ella R. Tuthill.

Vanderlip Here to Pass Winter

Frank A. Vanderlip, international banker and former president of the National City Bank of New York, arrived in Los Angeles yesterday for a three months' winter vacation. Mr. Vanderlip, who has an estate in the Beverly Hills, was accompanied by W. H. Harden, also a New York banker.

Mrs. Vanderlip will leave New York in a week to join her husband here. Mr. Vanderlip says his plans for the next two months consist of long rounds of golf, horseback riding and motoring.

FORMER ENVOY WILL TELL OF COLOMBIA

Baltasar Pires, former Ambassador to Colombia, will address members of the Shell Club Wednesday at a luncheon meeting. His topic will be "Colombia, the Beautiful." Mr. Pires recently returned to Bogota after six years of service there. During his stay in Los Angeles he is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. William McClelland, Jr., of 1400 South La Jolla street.

MRS. ISABELLA DUNN DIES

Mrs. Isabella Dunn, a native of Scotland and a resident of California for five years, died at 77 years of age at her home, 5508 Virginia Road, last Friday. The funeral will be conducted tomorrow at 11 a.m. at the Pierce Bros. funeral parlors, 1218 West Adams street. Interment will be made in Inglewood Park cemetery. She leaves a daughter, Mrs. Isabella Mahoney of Los Angeles, and a son and daughter in New York.

POLICE HOLD OREGON GIRL AS RUNAWAY

Portland Miss Tells Her Identity After Prolonged Questioning by Officers

Anna Case, 15-year-old Oregon girl, missing more than three months, was held in Juvenile Hall here last night for probation officers from Portland, where she is said to be a ward of the courts as result of previous runaway escapades. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Frank, 673 Emerson street, Portland.

The girl was taken into custody Thursday night at Franklin avenue and Vine street, Hollywood, for investigation and questioned for almost seventy-two hours by Policewoman Toomey of the Hollywood Police Station before she broke down and admitted that she is a Portland runaway.

She said she had come as far as Roseburg, Or., with a man who gave her $15. She then hitchhiked south to Reno, Nev., and arrived here on September 17, last. Since that time she has worked in five or six Hollywood homes and made unsuccessful efforts to get work at the motion-picture studios. Her total personal effects consisted of the contents of her vanity bag when taken to the Hollywood Police Station.

HOOVER FOR NATION HELD FORTUNATE

W. H. Cowles Says Era of Continued Prosperity in United States Expected

"The United States is fortunate to have Herbert Hoover for its next President. Under his administration the nation will have the same well-balanced prosperity, progress and economy it has enjoyed under President Coolidge, with the added benefit of an increase in foreign commerce and the construction of great engineering projects."

This was the opinion expressed at the Biltmore yesterday by W. H. Cowles, publisher of the Morning Spokesman Review of Spokane, Wash., and a director of the Associated Press. Mr. Cowles stopped in Los Angeles en route to Chicago and New York, where he will attend gatherings of the North American Newspaper Alliance and the Associated Press, respectively.

"I have great confidence in President-elect Hoover," Mr. Cowles said. "He already has shown many signs that he will be a good executive. For one thing, he has demonstrated his willingness to listen to good advice. I am sure that he is going to have the advice of President Coolidge, which will be of great value to him, because of Coolidge's great political sagacity. He also has called Senator Root into conference and that, too, indicates his willingness to receive advice."

The Spokane publisher and his wife, who have been spending a vacation at Montecito, left last night on the Southern Pacific for the East.

Five Boys Taken in Burglaries of Schoolrooms

Ten school burglaries in the East Side district were cleared yesterday with the arrest of five youths and the recovery of a heterogeneous mixture of loot of minor value taken from the desks of teachers and school supply rooms, according to Deputy Sheriffs Ayers and Scott.

The boys taken into custody gave their names as Louis Venegas, 14 years of age, 4318 New York avenue; William Clark, 15, 4345 New York avenue; Ecequil Medina, 15, 4534 Michigan avenue; Frank Esparza, 14, and Mike Caro, 14, of 4317 New York avenue.

Venegas was the first youth taken into custody. When questioned by Deputy Sheriffs Ayers and Scott and P. L. Jones of the attendance division of the Los Angeles city schools, the boy admitted committing the burglaries, naming the other four youths as accomplices.

Search of the youths' homes resulted in the recovery of a large quantity of loot, most of which was found at the home of the Clark boy.

Officers have been attempting to trace the youthful burglars for more than a month.

Planet Subject of Library Talk

The public is invited to a free lecture on "Photography of Planets," to be given before the Amateur Telescope Makers' Society in the public library lecture room Friday night. Prof. H. W. Wright of Lick Observatory is announced as speaker. The lecture was arranged under the joint auspices of the Astronomical Society of the Pacific and Mt. Wilson Observatory. There are 150 members of the society in Los Angeles, ranging from high school students to octogenarians.

PROJECT REFERRED

The City Engineer has recommended to the City Council that the project to pave St. Elmo Drive between Longwood avenue and a point 125 feet east of Highland avenue and to build curbs and sidewalks be added to the Pickford street and Verdun-avenue improvement district. The matter was referred to the Council's Public Works Committee.

BENNIS RITES TOMORROW

Funeral services for Mrs. Susan A. Bennis, 4723 Beverly Boulevard, will be conducted tomorrow at 11 a.m. from the LeRoy Bagley funeral parlors, 5440 Hollywood Boulevard. Rev. M. A. Wimberley will officiate. Burial will be made in Inglewood Park Cemetery. Mrs. Bennis, who died at the age of 64, was at one time a prominent Eastern Star and Daughter of the American Revolution.

In England last year deaths caused by motor accidents averaged twelve a day.

OIL NEWS

BY HOWARD C. KEGLEY

Production at Elwood was increased from 14,628 barrels to about 18,000 barrels per day by the completion late yesterday afternoon of the Doty No. 2, the fifth well brought in by the Barnsdall-Rio Grande combination in that field. The flow had not been gauged last night, but it was estimated at not less than 3500 barrels, with a heavy flow of gas.

This gives the operators two producers on the Doty lease and three on the Luton-Bell lease. The Luton-Bell No. 5 was down 2920 feet yesterday and drilling ahead. It is within about 300 feet of the depth at which the sand was picked up in the other wells on the same lease.

Now that the Doty No. 2 is completed its equipment will be moved over to the location for Luton-Bell No. 4. The location for Doty No. 3 has been approved and drilling will be started soon.

The Barnsdall-Rio Grande combination has extended its joint activities. It became known yesterday, and is preparing to enter the Lawndale field in an aggressive drilling campaign. Barnsdall obtained leases on nearly fifty acres in the heart of the drilling area, in three separate leases, and Rio Grande joins in the development.

The first well to be drilled by them will be located at the southeast corner of Rosecrans avenue and Inglewood Boulevard, to be known as Wright & Bonney No. 1. The combination has twenty-six acres in the Hawthorne community lease and twenty acres in the Ramona community lease.

Drilling Campaign

The Western Drilling and Producing Company, a subsidiary of the Western Oil and Refining Company, is preparing to launch an active drilling campaign in the southwest portion of the Los Angeles basin. This campaign includes the starting of four new wells, most of which are more or less exploratory.

In drilling the company's Pacific No. 1, a wildcat in the Huntington Beach district, the operators passed through a shallow sand. While the No. 1 is still drilling ahead, it has been decided to start Pacific No. 2 near by to test out the showings encountered in the first well. The Pacific No. 1 recently had a considerable showing of gas, it is asserted.

One of the new wells will be located in the Manhattan Beach area, at the corner of Herion and Third streets, in Redondo Villa Tract B.

The company has entered the new Lawndale field and work already is under way on a location at the northwest corner of Shirley and Inglewood Boulevard.

The location has been approved and preparations started for drilling a new well at Huntington Beach, to be designated as No. 25. Well Is Freakish

The Union Oil Company's recently completed Bell No. 33 at Santa Fe Springs has been increasing its flow of clean oil daily. It came in with a gross production of 6800 barrels and a cut of 29 per cent. The cut has gone down to 4.2 per cent, while the gross flow has increased to 8140 barrels, giving a net production of 7814 barrels of oil per day. The increase for twenty-four hours ending yesterday was 1023 barrels.

This well is the shallowest of the deep zone producers in the field, having been completed at 5400 feet, getting all its oil from the Nordstrom sand, more than 400 feet above the Buckbee sand.

Production Steady

Production in the McKeon Drilling Company's York & Lockhart No. 1 at Santa Fe Springs has been steady at slightly less than 2800 barrels since its second recompletion. This well originally was completed for a flow of 3150 barrels, but it sagged down and was cleaned out and put back at 1200 barrels. It went down again and was recompleted last week. The oil is clean and tests 35.3 deg. gravity.

The company's York & Lockhart No. 2 is standing cemented at 5298 feet and an effort will be made to put it on production Wednesday. The drillers expect to take only seventy-five feet of the sand, to avoid water troubles.

Pacific Western Completion

The Orton No. 11 of the Pacific Western Oil Company, in the Ventura-avenue field, has just been completed at a depth of 6950 feet, and according to an official report yesterday is flowing at a rate of 2500 to 3000 barrels, with a pressure of 1000 pounds on the casing. The well is expected to build up somewhat from this point.

The company reports that its Orton No. 12 and Orton No. 13, drilling in the same area, are due for completion some time during the next ten days. One of two wells to be drilled by the company on the Southern Pacific right of way in that general area, is down about 750 feet. It is known as Espee No. 2.

Buys Coogan Leases

With the announced intention of putting on a deep-drilling campaign there some time this year, the Italo Petroleum Corporation has purchased the Jackie Coogan leases in the Huntington Beach field, from the White-Behr Consolidated Oil Company for a reported consideration of $450,000.

Included in the deal are engines, compressors, boilers, tank farm, warehouse, pipe racks and yards. Five wells drilled on this lease by the White-Behr have yielded over 1,000,000 barrels of oil, according to reports. The Jackie Coogan No. 1 was the original discovery on the west side of the sugar refinery, producing at the rate of 5000 barrels when brought in. Jackie Coogan No. 2 is still producing about 130 barrels a day.

Try Well Again

Another effort will be made today or tomorrow to put the Bandini Oil Company's No. 7 well at Santa Fe Springs on production. This well was completed more than a week ago but mechanical troubles prevented the development of production. Casing has been recemented around the shoe.

Hutton Well Ready

The Shell Oil Company's Hutton No. 10 at Signal Hill has finished drilling at 7500 feet and is ready for completion today or tomorrow.

SHIPPING NEWS

AND ACTIVITIES AT LOS ANGELES HARBOR

STEAMSHIP LINE FORGING AHEAD

California and Eastern to Add Two New Carriers

Announcement of Expansion Made by President

Move Gives Company Fleet of Eight Vessels

California and Eastern Steamship Company will add two more ships immediately to its fleet of six in the intercoastal trade, according to Frank C. Hill, president and holder of controlling interest in the company.

The company also will announce the appointment of a new general manager early this week, succeeding A. P. Hammond, who has been with the line since its inception, Mr. Hill declared. Hammond has quit, and with him Thomas G. Widmeyre, general freight agent, due to differences on policy matters.

The company is the only Los Angeles-owned line in the intercoastal service. That Los Angeles, however, has talent sufficient even for this over-tonnaged, rate-warring coast-to-coast service is seen in the line's growth from one ship five years ago to six now, and a potential eight. The westbound service of a sailing every sixteen days will be increased in frequency by the additions.

Details regarding the new ships are to be left until the new general manager "gets his sea legs," according to President Hill.

PLANS IN MAKING FOR FOREIGN TRADE WEEK

Plans for the third annual Foreign Trade Week, beginning February 18, rapidly are nearing completion under auspices of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce and the Foreign Trade Club, according to J. H. Smiley, general chairman. Luncheons at most civic and social and trade meetings that week will feature speakers on foreign trade, and excursions made to the port. Los Angeles' trade beyond America's frontiers rapidly is gaining momentum, and the two previous trade weeks have been given credit for helping make the Southland "shipminded."

Bids will be opened at Washington tomorrow on nine Shipping Board cargo steamers laid up in Atlantic ports. Two of them, the James Otis and the John Jay are among the largest freighters afloat, being of 12,850 tons deadweight each. Others are the 8788-ton Terra Haute and the 8200-ton Oklahoma City, Houston, Atlanta of Texas, Minooka, Hutchinson and the Capitol of Nebraska.

Daniel G. Cooke, for twenty years in San Francisco shipping, has been appointed dock superintendent at San Pedro for the Redwood Line. He succeeds E. G. Richardson, who has been ill several months and still is incapacitated. Paul Fay formerly with the Los Angeles and San Francisco Navigation Company, also has joined the Redwood office staff.

The Swedish motor ship Fermia is at the outer harbor on her maiden voyage from Europe, discharging 12,000 tons of sand, the first since the duty was taken off that product. She is owned by the Bostram Company and is under charter to the W. L. Comyn & Co.

A corps of immigration specialists to pass on orientals is seen as an imperative adjunct to Southern California's Immigration District No. 31, if the present practice of inspecting aliens only at ports of debarkation continues.

This practice, changed intermittently, leaves all Los Angeles-bound orientals for examination here, although many ships bringing them touch first at San Francisco. Likewise, aliens arriving from other lands are not passed here, if destined eventually for northern ports.

The practice is swamping local inspectors, and emphasizes the particular need also of full-time interpreters on oriental languages. Incidentally, it is boosting Los Angeles Harbor records rapidly in foreign travel. The port immigration offices at Twenty-second street, San Pedro, likewise are soon to take over additional space in the building leased from the city.

Walter E. C. Carr, district director, is now in Washington, in annual conference with his chiefs, and is expected also to discuss needs for a new immigration station on a site now being reclaimed at Reservation Point.

More than 300,000 bales of cotton, or half of all produced in California, Arizona and Lower California, are expected to pass through Los Angeles Harbor by the close of the season this spring. Three-fourths of the local movement will be through the Los Angeles Compress and Warehouse Company's new $500,000 plant, 120,000 already having been received. Last year the company handled 90,000 bales.

The President Madison is due at noon today with forty passengers and 1500 tons of freight from the Orient. She will load 2000 tons of Southland products and embark thirty travelers before sailing tomorrow noon.

Rev. W. T. Weston, organizing secretary of the Seaman's Institute at New York, is sailing on the Panama Pacific liner Virginia and will arrive February 2, next. He will visit his brother, Alfred J. Weston of San Pedro, prior to sailing for Honolulu, where he will reorganize the British Institute.

George Ade, humorist, tried an egg over the mouth of the crater of Kilauea, "just to show there's heat in the thing." He is a passenger on the globe-girdling liner Belgenland, here ten days ago.

TRANS-PACIFIC MAIL

Following schedule of sailing is provided by the Los Angeles postoffice:

January 14, from Los Angeles. Specially addressed mail for Panama and Canal Zone.

January 15, from Los Angeles. Mail for Melbourne and Sydney.

January 15, from San Francisco. Mail for Japan, Korea and Siberia.

January 15, from San Francisco. Mail for Hawaii.

For connections at Seattle mail must leave Los Angeles the third day prior to date of sailing, not later than 5:30 p.m.

To connect at San Pedro for the Hawaiian Islands every other Saturday mail leaves Los Angeles at 6:30 a.m. on Saturday.

Note—To connect at San Francisco mail must leave Los Angeles on dispatch made not later than 5:30 p.m. the day prior to date.

COTTON RETURN ENRICHES AREA

Value of Pacific Southwest Crop Estimated

Bank Survey Puts Figure at Near $50,000,000

Increase on Previous Year Near 40 Per Cent

With the 1928-29 cotton harvest in this district rapidly drawing to a close and 90 per cent of the crop now ginned, the Pacific Southwest territory will return to growers more than $51,000,000, a larger amount than in any previous season, with all records broken for acreage planted, production and foreign trade, according to a survey just compiled by Harold E. Craig, manager of the research department of the Los Angeles-First National Trust and Savings Bank.

The aggregate value of the crop exceeds that of the previous season by $14,200,000 or nearly 40 per cent, and is $10,200,000 above the previous five-year average value of $40,800,000. The previous record year was valued at $46,800,000, which was in the 1925-26 season.

The total acreage planted in the territory, which comprises, California, Lower California, Arizona and New Mexico, is estimated at 687,000 acres. This is an increase of 215,000 acres or more than 45 per cent over the previous season, and exceeds the former record season of 1925-26 by 96,000 acres.

Production throughout the entire district is estimated at 442,000 bales, a new high record and exceeding the last season by 145,300 bales or almost 50 per cent. The former production record was established in the season of 1926-27 at 414,800 bales. The yield averaged practically 0.643, nearly two-thirds of a bale per acre, which is slightly above the previous five-year average and far above the average for the United States as a whole, the survey states.

The movement of cotton through the Los Angeles Harbor also promises to set a new record, according to Mr. Craig's report. The previous largest volume was in 1926-27 when nearly 239,000 bales were shipped. Total shipments this season, up to the end of November, were 40 per cent greater than 1926-27 for the same period. The foreign movement in particular is showing a pronounced increase with heavy shipments direct to Germany, Japan, England and France.

Prices have held fairly good this season, although not as high as some previous years, according to the report. The demand has been somewhat slow and the market basis, not as strong as formerly. As a result local cotton has not commanded the usual premium and some sales have been at a small discount during the latter part of the season. The average price will probably be close to 20 cents a pound.

SPECIAL LECTURE ON CREDITS ANNOUNCED

As a special lecturer before the new class in credits and collections at university college, University of Southern California, Fred Hahn of Haskins & Sells will talk on "An Analysis of Useful Significant Ratios" Monday evening at 6:30 in the Transportation Building. Topics for discussion include significance of comparative statements; the relation of receivables to inventory; total debt to net worth; current liabilities to net worth; net worth to fixed assets; current assets to total assets employed; fixed assets to total assets employed. Emery E. Olson is the instructor in charge of this advanced group, which is sponsored by the Los Angeles Credit Men's Association.

TREND OF BEEF PRICES UP

Swift Predicts Profitable Year for Cattle Raisers; Shortage of Raw Material Grows

BY EARLE E. CROWE

From both the Armour and the Swift meat-packing companies came reassuring statements last week for the raisers of cattle in this country. The presidents of these immense enterprises, addressing stockholders' meeting, held out encouraging hopes for another good year for the producers, who have been slowly recovering from the series of unprofitable years that set in after the war.

Louis F. Swift, in his comments, predicted that beef and cattle prices, which have been relatively high in the last two years, will continue to remain on a reasonably high level for some time, allowing a fair margin of profit to the properly managed cattle ranches.

SUPPLIES SHARPLY OFF

"From a profit standpoint," he said, "the outlook for the cattle raiser is much improved. The period of liquidation has run its course. According to the estimates of the United States Department of Agriculture, there were only 55,696,000 cattle on farms January 1, 1928, which is the smallest cattle population this country has had in any year since 1912. The department also estimated that the number of beef cattle in the country was 23,373,000, and this is the smallest beef cattle population we have had since 1877."

In support of the president's prophecy and comment, the Swift and Company Year Book discusses at some length the extent of the cattle shortage, which is responsible for the improvement in cattle and beef prices. Citing Department of Agriculture figures showing the number of beef cattle declined more than 30 per cent between 1919 and 1928 the statement is made that since the war the country has slaughtered, on the average, about 1,500,000 more cattle each year than it has produced.

There now are about the same number of cattle on farms as in 1913, according to this analysis, but there are 20,000,000 additional people to feed.

CONSUMPTION RATE FALLS

Depletion of breeding stock and the building up of herds have curtailed the beef supply, the Swift booklet explains, so that per capita consumption of beef dropped from sixty-three pounds in 1926 to about fifty-four pounds in 1928, a decline of about 15 per cent. In other words, the shortage of supply caused the average American family to consume nearly fifty pounds less beef in 1928 than it consumed in 1926.

Evidently cattle and beef prices will range at fairly high levels for some years to come, at least so far as the danger of oversupply of cattle is concerned. The Swift Year Book, discussing production, says:

"Cattle production moves in cycles. A study of beef production of almost sixty years shows that from thirteen to eighteen years elapse from one high point in cattle production to another; and likewise, from one low point to the next. It is generally believed that marketing cattle at younger ages will tend to reduce the length of the 'cattle cycle' in the future."

MARKET DRIFT IRREGULAR

Activity of Few Specially Selected Industrials Features Week on Local Exchange

BY FRANK L. GARDNER
Banks, Huntley & Co.

The past week on the Los Angeles exchanges was distinctly one of specialty markets. A succession of especially selected issues, mostly confined to the industrial classification, were brought forward to register substantial and in many cases even sensational price improvements. Activity from this course served to impart an appearance of strength to the whole market, when in reality, aside from the issues noted, it was a standing strength with a range from 54 3-4 to 55½.

VERY MIXED AFFAIR

The oil issues, favorites among the speculatively inclined for the past six months, were largely relegated to the background. Affected by rumblings of the almost annually recurring price-cutting fight for retail gasoline business, most of the oil listings sold off. It is perhaps timely to suggest that history has shown these difficulties never to be as serious as pictured. Invariably the well managed and well financed concerns emerge in a more strongly and firmly entrenched position than when the fight started.

FINANCE STOCK LEADS

Among the industrials, instances of conspicuous strength were numerous and impressive. Pacific Finance was a leader in percentage of appreciation with a spectacular spurt of 25 points to a new all-time peak at 98½. Expectations of an exceptional earnings report for the past year were probably responsible for the move. Emsco Derrick and Equipment old stock, before its replacement by the new on an eight-for-one basis, ranged from 312 1-8 to 317. The new issue, from early sales around 39½, advanced impressively to a new record at 41 5-8, closing at 41.

Hydraulic Brake was brought forward with an 8-point gain to top sales at 48. Lincoln Mortgage common, which has recently been inactive around 60 cents, spurted to high sales at 1.47½. Los Angeles Investment jumped from 2.25 to 2.55, but sold off to 2.35 at the close. Pacific Clay Products ranged from 32½ to 36 1-4 and finished at 34½. Southern California Edison common continued to register put-

Mart Clouded by Uncertain Credit Trend

NEW YORK, Jan. 12. (AP)—The speculative outlook was clouded by the uncertainties of the course on credit this week, as the usual conditions incident to the year-end settlements had definitely passed. Stocks were liquidated rather freely early in the week, when there was considerable talk of a rise in the New York Federal Reserve Bank's rediscount rate, but prices made irregular recovery later, under the leadership of the steels and the utilities.

The reserve bank made no increase in its rate, but published a rather disappointing brokers' loan compilation, showing a negligible reduction of only $17,000,000. Call money fell to 6 per cent, the lowest since November 15, but rose to 7 late Friday, maintaining a higher average than is normal after the year-end adjustments. Time money held unusually high at 7½ per cent.

The Federal Reserve report had its bright side, however, disclosing that the New York banks had paid off nearly $200,000,000 of their indebtedness, and that the reserve ratio had jumped about 12 per cent at New York. The New York banks withdrew about $350,000,000 in brokers' loans, but this was nearly offset by increases in the accounts for out-of-town banks and "others."

Cork Company Offers Rights

PITTSBURGH, Jan. 12. (Exclusive)—Offering of one new share for each fourteen held by stockholders of record, March 9, next, at $40 a share, has been authorized by directors of the Armstrong Cork Company. Payment must be made on or before April 20.

Directors of the company also declared the usual extra dividend of 12 1-2 cents a share and the regularly quarterly of 37 1-2 cents a share, payable April 1 to stockholders of record March 9. Proceeds from the new financing will be used for expansion purposes. Announcement was also made of the acquisition of a mill manufacturing felt products at Fulton, N. Y.

DROP IN COTTONSEED CRUSHINGS REPORTED

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12. (AP)—Cottonseed crushed from August 1 to December 31 totaled 2,968,434 tons, compared with 3,009,511 for the same period of 1927, and cottonseed on hand at mills December 31, totaled 4,276,495 tons, compared with 3,933,180 tons a year ago, the Census Bureau announced today. Cottonseed products manufactured during the period and on hand December 31 included: Crude oil produced 920,255,197 pounds compared with 936,668,870, and on hand 123,836,969, compared with 158,834,182. Refined oil produced 726,918,816, compared with 709,964,678 pounds and on hand 431,693,697, compared with 503,139,695.

Stock Dividend by Pacific Finance Rumored to be in Offing

Directors of Pacific Finance Corporation, scheduled to meet on Tuesday, are expected to declare an extra stock dividend of four shares of common for each 100 shares owned, the new stock to be distributed over the ensuing four quarters of the current year, according to rumors circulated in the financial district yesterday.

Pacific Finance has been the sensation on the Los Angeles Stock Exchange throughout the week just closed, and yesterday climaxed a steady advance with a 10-point jump to 98½, a new all-time peak. This marks an advance in four successive days of 25 points and a jump of 31 points since the first of the year.

Since directors of the company have not yet taken action on the new dividend, officials refuse to issue a statement at this time beyond intimating that the stock has been selling out of line with the present increased rate of earnings. In unofficial quarters it has been said that the stock dividend would be the beginning of a regular policy on the part of the company.

Net earnings for the nine months ended September 30, last, were reported the equivalent to more than double dividends payable on the common stock which has a rate of $3 a share annually. Less than a year ago the dividend was increased from 8 to 10 per cent and the par value of the stock reduced from $100 to $25. In October, last, the present rate of $3 came into effect, which is equal to 12 per cent annually. Then early in November stockholders were given the privilege to purchase one share for each twelve and three-quarter shares held at $50 a share. There are at present 200,000 shares outstanding.

BOOM IN RAILROAD ISSUES FORECAST

FINANCIAL SERVICE EXPECTS ADVANCE TO SOMETHING NEAR REAL VALUE

McNeel's Financial Service, in its latest issue, reports a boom in the rails.

"There is little doubt that before this great period is over the railroad stocks will be caught in the speculative whirl and will sell at something nearer their true value than they are at present," McNeel's declares.

"Railroad stocks on the average are at the highest level in all history, yet the average level is only 15 points higher than at the top of the 1906 boom. In the twenty-two years which have since elapsed, a tremendous amount has been spent on our railroads, and the real value of those roads has been tremendously increased. Compared with the rank and file of industrials in relation to their earnings, they are selling at very low levels. A decision by the Supreme Court on the railroad valuation case, or a favorable decision by the Interstate Commerce Commission on the western rate case, or a revival of railroad consolidation plans, might turn speculative enthusiasm to the railroads."

TWO SEATS ON BIG BOARD SET AT HIGH

NEW YORK, Jan. 12. (AP)—Sale of two stock exchange seats at the record price of $600,000 each was announced yesterday. The purchasers were Laurence C. and Robert L. Leeds, cousins, and the memberships were sold by Wallace E. Harding and Nelson S. Bartlett.

COTTON MARKET

NEW YORK, Jan. 12. (AP)—Early advances of 15 to 20 points netted considerable realising in the cotton market today but it was absorbed on reactions of 9 or 10 points. The close was steady at net gains of 9 to 12 points. The advance was attributed to covering and trade or commission house buying prompted by reports of a steadier spot basis in the South.

THROUGHOUT most of 1928 the volume of money in circulation was smaller than that in 1927, when the volume in turn had been smaller than in 1926. This perceptible contraction in the volume of outstanding currency presents a powerful force for ease in the money market that has not been fully appreciated.

New Issue of Cement Liens Expected Soon

Reports in circulation in Spring-street financial circles yesterday indicated that the Monolith Portland Cement Company is contemplating new financing to be offered some time this week. It is understood that the financing will be in the shape of $1,000,000 first mortgage bonds.

The bonds will be secured by the California properties of the company located at Monolith, near Mojave, it is understood. Reed, Adler & Co., and the California Company have underwritten the issue, it was reported.

Stock purchase warrants, according to the rumor, will be attached to the bonds. It is expected that the capital stock of the company will be listed in Los Angeles. Proceeds from the sale of the issue will be used to reimburse the company for expenditures at Monolith and for additional working capital.

Resignation of Rubber Concern Chief Announced

NEW YORK, Jan. 12. (Exclusive) Charles B. Seger will resign as chairman and president of the United States Rubber Company, it was announced today. At a special meeting of directors called for the 15th inst., F. B. Davis, president of Dupont Viscoloid Company, will be elected president. Mr. Davis represents the Dupont interests, which now have complete control of the rubber company, it is reported.

Mr. Seger will continue as a director and member of the finance committee. It is understood that his relinquishment of active control of the company is in order to devote more time to his railroad interests.

He is chairman of the finance committee of the Union Pacific Railroad, and this post, together with his duties in connection with allied interests of Union Pacific, which includes a directorship and membership on the finance committee of the New York Central Railroad have been absorbing a steadily increasing portion of his time.

WOOL MARKET

BOSTON, Jan. 12. (AP)—Several houses have moved fair quantities of Texas twelve months wool during the past week. This was the most active line of the market. A few sales of French combing fine wools were closed, but the volume lacked particular interest. Of more importance was the interest of 48-50 fleeces, sizable lots of which were moved. Bids of the maximum market price of 50c in the grease were rejected on some offerings.

STOCK MARKET TURNS HEAVY

General List Declines Widely; Quotations Lower

Credit Situation Arouses Bear Movement

Increase in Copper Production Predicted Shortly

NEW YORK, Jan. 12. (AP)—There was a widespread disposition to take profits, pending a clearing of the credit atmosphere, on the stock market today, and the majority of issues closed fractions to nearly 9 points lower.

There were no new developments of a character to precipitate selling, but bulls appeared to be discouraged with the general heaviness of the market, and withdrew their support. The further stiffening of call money rates after increasing customary amounts the week tended to cast a pall in speculative circles.

U. S. STEEL OFF

The pleasing industrial developments of the month, so far as they to have been largely discounted marketwise last month. This was particularly evident in the case of the unexpectedly large increase in United States Steel's unfilled orders. While the issue forged ahead for a day after the announcement it easily turned heavy into the closed about 3 points off. The and industrial reviews this week adopted a conservative tone, describing present conditions as

There appears an increased earnest desire in banking circles to see a substantial reduction in brokers' loans. This week's reduction was also negligible, and an increase next week, which is regarded as probable if even a moderate lending up movement develops during the week, would be regarded as an untoward development, particularly as there is still talk of an increase in the Federal reserve rediscount rate.

COPPER STOCKS DULL

An American bureau of statistics reported a moderate gain in copper stocks during December, but stocks are still comparatively large and higher prices are predicted.

Scrap steel prices were reduced at Cincinnati, and the Atchison, Topeka, Santa Fe announced another large equipment order.

Wright Aero was the outstanding performer of the day's short session, selling off 3 points at one time from a maximum of 13, and closing with a gain of 1⅜. Otis Elevator moved more than 8 to a new peak.

LOS ANGELES EXCHANGE

Pacific Finance Continues Spectacular Advance; Oil Stocks Turn Easier

Following a net rise of nearly 8 points in the previous session, Pacific Finance Company shortly after the opening soared more than ten points to a new all-time peak at 98¼ yesterday on the Los Angeles Stock Exchange. The action of the stock was inspired by the circulation of a rumor that an extra stock dividend would be declared shortly. After achieving the top price, profit-taking set in which depressed quotations to a close at 96¼, but up 8 points on the day.

The balance of the market on a well-sustained volume of trading receded to lower levels. This was especially evident among oil stocks, where fears of a gasoline price war served largely to undermine general confidence. Losses, however, were confined to small figures and industrials dropped fractionally lower, while banks and utilities held firm for the most part.

Rio Grande Oil sagged 7-8 to 34 and Barnsdall 3-4 to 43 1-4. Union Oil and Union Associates sold briskly to close down 1 point each to 48 3-4. The rights to both stocks held to 1.50. Standard of California lost another 5-8 to 68 1-3 and Richfield 3-8 to 45 1-4. Pacific Western at 22 1-4 was steady, while Signal Oil lost 1-2 to 41. MacMillan was untraded, with a closing bid at 37 1-4. Occidental Petroleum moved up 10 cents to 4.60 and Bolsa Chica held firm to 3.45.

Lincoln Mortgage, which had a meteoric advance in the previous session, reacted on liquidation to 1.25, off 15 cents. Piggly Wiggly Western States Company, still speculative on merger rumors, dropped off 1 1-3 points to 28. Transamerica Corporation added 1-4 to end at 131 1-4 and Los Angeles-First National moved up a like amount to 122 3-4. Other banks were steady. Hydraulic Brake and Pacific Clay Products each reacted 1-2 point to finish at 47 1-2 and 34 1-2, respectively. Emsco eased 1-4 to 41.

LOS ANGELES CURB

Gladding McBean, trailed by Crystalite Products, continued the spectacular performer on the brief session yesterday on the Los Angeles Curb Exchange. Both stocks again soared into new high ground. Gladding McBean, leading the volume of trading, shot up from the opening to another new top at 94 1-2, an advance of nearly 10 points, and on the subsequent profit taking closed at 92, up 7 3-8 net. Crystalite jumped 6 points to a new peak at 37, where it ended.

Exeter Oil, traded to the extent of 45,450 shares, featured the oil division of the market. The stock advanced 25 cents to a new top and close at 1.75. Operations in Ventura county, where a deeper zone was recently discovered, coupled with the recent acquisition of leases in the Semi-Tropic field and Santa Barbara county, are believed to have been back of the action of the stock. The balance of the oil issues held steady for the most part. Mexican Seaboard dropped another point to close the day at 58.

Pacific Indemnity Company, probably influenced by the rise of Pacific Finance on the parent board, an affiliated company, was forced up 15 points to a high and close for the day at 250.

The balance of the industrials showed little change excepting Claude Neon Electrical Products, which continued to fall off with a drop of 1 5-8 points to 62. Fokker Aircraft lost 3-4 to 23.

Sales totaled 136,93 shfares valued at $1,164,908.

SUGAR PRICE CUT

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 12. (AP)—Sugar prices quoted by the California and Hawaiian Sugar Refining Corporation and the Western Sugar Refinery yesterday dropped 10 cents a hundred, which dealers said was the lowest point since the beginning of the World War in 1914. The prices quoted were: Granulated cane, $5.05; granulated beet, $4.95 per hundred.

NEW YORK BOND PRICES

NEW YORK, Jan. 12. (AP)—Prices worked irregularly higher on the bond market today, although week-end profit-taking caused many declines. Rails were among the more active issues. Anaconda Copper 7s extended their recent gain more than a point to a new high price of 133. Net gains of a point or more were registered by General Asphalt 6s, Detroit River Tunnel 4½s, Lowe's 6s, which touched a new top at 117, Otis Steel 6s A, United Drug of Delaware 8s and United States Rubber 5s. A few oils were acquired at fractionally higher prices, although Barnsdall 6s yielded to selling pressure.

St. Paul 5s of 2000 again were leaders in the rail group, advancing fractionally on a comparatively large turnover. There were a few weak spots, including Oregon Short Line 4s.

Utilities yielded to profit-taking. Public Service of New Jersey 4½s, showing a net loss of more than 3 points.

A few Italian industrials continued to gain in the irregular foreign list, Pirelli 7s ex-warrants and Pirelli 7s advancing about 5 points each to new high levels.

United States government obligations were inclined to heaviness.

The quotations represent sales of bonds (in thousands of dollars) and the high, low and closing prices in the order given. To expedite transmission, the close is omitted when the same as the low, and both low and close when same as high.

quarterly dividend on the old stock was on the new stock, which pays but $1 quarterly. American Sugar mounted more than 3 points on reports that 1928 earnings will run more than $10 a share, and Bordens improved on announcement of a stock split-up plan.

Some of the utilities encountered profit-taking on their recent advances, but General Gas and Electric B moved up nearly 6 points. Most of the coppers were heavy, although Anaconda improved. Automotive shares generally sagged, Studebaker, however, was again well supported. Motor Products lost nearly 8 points. Adams Express 3, and Keith Albee Orpheum preferred 7.

With U. S. Steel, the steel group was largely heavy, Bethlehem Crucible and Ludlum losing part of yesterday's gain. Vanadium, however, stepped up nearly 2 points. Merchandising shares were soft, Macy & Co. losing more than 4 points. Radio fluctuated over a 9-point range and closed down more than 3.

Foreign exchanges were easy, with the demand rate for sterling down to $4.84 9-16. This revived talk of resumption of the gold movement from London to New York, with the movement from London to Berlin apparently halted with the lowering of the Reichsbank's rediscount rate.

SOCIOLOGISTS HEAR WARNING

Danger of Overpopulation Address Topic

Higher Living Standards Given as Remedy

Banquet Terminates Session; Officers Elected

The dangers of overpopulation and suggestions of how to remedy such dangers were the topics of an address delivered last night by Lyman Bryson, associate director of the San Diego Museum, speaking before members of the Pacific Southwest Academy of Political and Social Science meeting at the Alexandria.

The banquet terminated a full day's session, during which various papers were presented by faculty members of several Southern California colleges.

At a business meeting earlier in the day Dr. Ray Malcom, professor of political science, University of Southern California, was elected president, Dr. Constantine Panunzio, Whittier, was made vice-president and Dr. Arthur G. Coons, Occidental College, was re-elected secretary.

LIVING STANDARDS

"The chief retarding influence on population growth is a rise in the standard of living," Bryson declared in an after-dinner speech. "Perhaps the chief contribution that we can make to the cultural condition of such overpopulated continents as Asia, for instance, and which will cut down their dangerous growth, is by trade regulations which will raise their standard and lead them to limit their families."

Probably the most scientific paper read was that by Dr. Glenn E. Hoover, associate professor of economics and sociology, Mills College, on "The Quantitative Optimum."

The speaker pointed out advantages enjoyed by sparsely settled countries, such as Australia, New Zealand, Canada and the United States.

ADVANTAGE MENACED

"As for the increasing of our population, I can but view with alarm the day when we may have lost our advantages by attaining a density of population equal to that of the Old World," Dr. Hoover declared.

"So long as there is a grave danger of excessive population, it seems that a statesman-like policy should be directed toward retarding our rate of increase. This can be done by means of immigration restrictions and the dissemination of knowledge of birth control. By making parenthood volitional, rather than fortuitous, we would receive some comfort from knowing that an increase, even though objectionable from a national point of view, was at least welcomed by those who brought such increase into existence. Until then we are deprived of even that consolation."

JAPANESE PROBLEM

Prof. Ken Nakazawa of the University of Southern California discussed the problem of overpopulation in Japan. He pointed out that Japanese are not leaving the homeland as rapidly as most people think. He contended that the increase of population in Japan could not be prevented but that the Japanese government is making efforts to increase the production of food and also to redistribute the population to less populous areas within the empire.

Roy Hidenichi Akagi, Japanese secretary of the Japanese Students' Christian Association in North America, spoke on the social ostracism which American-born Japanese face in this country. Another paper was read by F. A. Pesqueira, Mexican Consul at Los Angeles, who, speaking on Mexican immigration, stated that his government desires to stop further exodus of Mexican citizens. He suggested that the problem be dealt with by both America and Mexico, especially since this country is in need of Mexican labor.

CHIEF UNIT OF TILTON'S TO BE HERE

Chain's Headquarters Will be in Los Angeles as it Plans Additional Stores

Headquarters for the entire chain of stores now being operated and to be opened by Tilton's on the Pacific Coast definitely are established in Los Angeles. Three executives of the organization already have established their permanent homes in this city, Harold Reskins, J. Resler and Harry Resler.

Explaining this move, Mr. Reskins said: "We have long wanted to extend our operations to Los Angeles, and have merely awaited a favorable location for our store. When our real estate agents here advised us of the second floor location at the northwest corner of Fifth and Broadway we were greatly pleased. At last we can extend the advantages of our clothing system to the people of Los Angeles.

"We recognize in Los Angeles and Southern California the coming metropolis of the entire United States outside of New York, perhaps. Already there is here a population of more than 2,000,000 — the greatest west of Chicago—and the nucleus for the greatest population center in the country besides New York. The great area of Los Angeles and Greater Los Angeles is sufficient to house and employ 2,000,000 people more—and notably, to house and employ them in contentment and prosperity. The gardened homes, the beaches and play areas in Los Angeles are like nowhere else in the country.

"That is why we look forward to our new Los Angeles store being one of the most successful in our entire chain, and the first of several new units to be opened in Southern California."

Alterations in the sales room now are being made and a definite date for the opening soon will be announced.

The W. & J. Sloane Direct-Import ORIENTAL RUG SALE

Brings the Bazaars of the Far East To Los Angeles

A Director of the Company has journeyed to the Rug Markets of the Far East, and the superb results of his pilgrimage have followed him home, bought and imported directly by W. & J. Sloane. That he bargained wisely and well is proven by the quality and extent of his purchases, incomparable in beauty, variety and value.

Many of the rugs are of the character seldom found by the commercial buyer—old treasures of ancient weave fit for the palaces of Persian monarchs, as stirring in their gorgeous colorings as the harmonies of a symphony.

There are hundreds of mats from Anatolian villages, scatter rugs in a galaxy of sizes and Persian weaves, luxurious carpets that clothe a room in beauty, and rare antiques and museum pieces that will excite the admiration of connoisseurs.

We offer at astoundingly low prices the fruits of this dramatic adventure in rug buying. The list below is but a partial index to a magnificent stock.

ARMOUR INCREASES OPEN GOLF LEAD

It's the Same Old Story Today

Tommy Armour of the Lighthorse Brigade surpassed his opening day's score of 69 with an even more gorgeous 67 yesterday—four strokes under par for Riviera. He is five strokes ahead of his nearest competitor—Harry Stupple, a dark horse—and looks like a cinch to win the fourth annual $10,000 open. Armour is sixteen strokes ahead of the mighty Walter Hagen. The panorama shows a part of the crowd watching Al Espinosa, Walter Hagen and Armour on the eighteenth green. Lower photo is a close-up of Tommy Armour.

SOUTHERN CONFERENCE TO ADMIT TWO SCHOOLS

BY BRAVEN DYER

Western Christian College and Southern State, two of the upper-most institutions of learning in this neck of the woods, are destined to be admitted to the Southern California Conference within the next few months. This was indicated yesterday at the Southern California Conference's annual winter meeting of the basketball athletic committee, held at the local Y.M.C.A.

Dean Christian College, represented by Coach Ralph Welch and Manager Santa Barbara, with President Phelps of the team as spokesmen, made formal application for admittance to the Southern Conference. Both institutions asked that they be taken into the group on January 1, 1930.

After considerable discussion of the matter a motion was finally introduced and passed that the application of the two institutions be held over and acted upon only after the applicants had lived up to the eligibility rules of the conference for at least one year.

This means that if the two institutions adopt the rules of the conference immediately they will automatically become eligible for admittance to the body in 1930, although even then the

STANFORD DOWNS BRUINS IN BASKETBALL GAME, 34 TO 20

STANFORD UNIVERSITY (Cal.) Jan. 12.—Displaying their opponents after a second-half offensive that did not let up, Stanford University's basketball team defeated the undergrads season with the Cardinal victory over the University of California at Los Angeles last night.

Stanford, reported to be one of the finest teams in the southland, were unable to match the Stanford defense, being held to seven field goals.

The Cardinals led at half-time, 12 to 9, but the southerners came back fast and assumed a 3-point lead on two baskets by Linthicum and another by Woodroof. Then the Cardinal attack started, and three baskets by Berg, two by Rothert and one by Hawkins, put the Redshirts far in front and they were never headed.

The Stanford freshmen swamped

BEAR BASKETEERS THUMP TROJAN CAGEMEN AGAIN

Berkeley Quintet Triumphant Over Southern California, 33 to 27; "Frenchy" Larrieu Injured

BY BRAVEN DYER

Repeating their victory of Friday evening, the University of California basketballers just about knocked the Trojans of Southern California out of the 1929 Coast Conference race at the Olympic last night. The count was 33 to 27, with the outcome very much in doubt until the final two minutes of play when baskets by Capt. Verne Corbin and Walt Weber, sub forward, put the game on ice for the Golden Bears.

The victory was a costly one for the Berkeley team, however. "Frenchy" Larrieu, star forward and the big noise of Friday's struggle, went out of the game with a broken arm and is lost to Nibs Price's squad for the remainder of the season. Larrieu fell heavily under his own basket near the end of the first half, landing on his arm as he came down.

"NIBS" PRICE.

Score at half time last night was 16 to 15 in favor of California. The count had been tied no less than four times during the first period, with the Trojans holding the upper hand until near the close when the Bears forged into the lead. They stayed there from that stage forward, although the locals once drew within one point of their foes in the second session.

Poor passing and poor basket shooting were the causes of Troy's downfall. California also has better basketball players than Southern California, which often helps. Time and again the Trojans tossed the ball into the hands of their opponents.

This "Musta" Been a Plot

IOWA CITY (Iowa) Jan. 12. (AP)—Most bowlers are satisfied with a perfect 300, but not Dr. Harold S. Smith of Iowa City.

After losing two games with 169 and 158 scores last night, Dr. Smith accepted a proffered handicap of twenty pins. He then scored twelve straight strikes, which won the handicap and gave him a superperfect count of 320.

SCOTS GO AFTER OPEN GOLD

BY RALPH HUSTON

Toss a $10,000 rainbow up into the sky, and the Scots will find the end of it. Tommy Armour, who is showing the way in the fourth annual Los Angeles open, will be the third of the wearers of the tartan plaid to grab off the pot of gold—if he maintains his flying pace.

BOBBY CRUICKSHANK.

Two years ago "Wee Bobby" Cruickshank walked off with first place, and last year "Bra' Mac" Smith's steady play carried him to the fore. And, as Scotty Chisholm points out, Harry Cooper, winner of the first open, was an Englishman.

ARMOUR GREAT

Few of the fans who trail the stars over the beautiful Riviera course realise the terrific handicap under which Armour is playing. Bobby Cruickshank objected to some enthusiast's wail that the former open champion held up the game with his slow decision, and much-waggling of clubs.

"If you were handicapped like Tommy is," declared the wee Scot, "you wouldn't even be on a golf course. I was with Tommy in France, and I know what I'm talking about. Four years in the trenches is enough to handicap any man's nerve.

RABBIT PUNCHES

BY PAUL LOWRY

RUNNING WILD

THERE seems to be no way of stopping the mad dash of Col. Tommy Armour, who is outgalloping Lighthorse Harry Cooper when the latter was at his best.

What Col. Armour is going to do to Lighthorse Harry's record of 279, which has stood the test of three years' play in these $10,000 open parties sponsored by the Junior Chamber of Commerce, is too pitiful to contemplate.

It brings the shudders to your correspondent's frame every time he thinks about it, and after naming his three favorites in the current tourney at Riviera without including Col. Armour your correspondent has a shudder or two coming, anyhow.

But there will be other shudderers. One will be the architect of the Riviera course—George Thomas. Another will be Billy Bell, his co-worker. Another Ben Neal, membership secretary.

All these handsome gentlemen are shuddering because they gave birth to statements that nobody playing in the $10,000 would be able to break 290.

As prophets the Messrs. Thomas, Bell and Neal are simply terrible. Worse than your correspondent, who named the cough-drop brothers—Horton and MacDonald—and big Ed Dudley as the potential winners.

Your correspondent has one of those dying chances, but the Messrs. Thomas, Bell and Thomas are completely sunk, thereby proving that your correspondent is better than some prophets, anyway.

Just to add further proof to the point Col. Armour, who is really the Four Horsemen of the golf world in one—at least for this tourney—has 68-67 for a 135 to his credit.

Par golf for two rounds today would give him 142. Add this to 135 and you have 277.

Your correspondent will do his own explaining about the failure to include Col. Armour in his selections, but will the Messrs.

JACK SHARKEY'S MANAGER AGREES TO FIGHT TERMS

BY WILLIAM R. KING
Associated Press Sports Writer

BOSTON, Jan. 12. (AP)—After haggling for three hours here today, John Buckley, manager of Jack Sharkey, and William F. Carey, vice-president of the Madison Square Garden Corporation, signed a contract which guaranteed the Boston heavyweight $100,000 for boxing Young Stribling of Macon, Ga., at Miami Beach, Fla., on February 27, next.

YOUNG STRIBLING

The terms provide that Sharkey would be paid $25,000 on February 17 and the remaining $75,000 on the morning of February 27. The contract certified that the referee would be an official acceptable to both Sharkey and Stribling and that his identity would be disclosed by Jack Dempsey at least seven days before the bout. Other concessions given Sharkey were all traveling and hotel expenses for himself and Mrs. Sharkey as well as Mr. and Mrs. Buckley.

TO TRAIN IN PUBLIC

Buckley said he and Sharkey would arrive in Florida on February 1, and would strike their camp at Miami, where the Boston fighter planned to train publicly, thereby collecting about $50,000 more, he figured.

Sharkey was not present during the negotiations, which were attended by Buckley, his attorney, Carey, Jack Dempsey, their attorney, Sheldon Fairbanks, general manager of the Garden, Eddie Mack, Boston Garden boxing promoter, and Daniel J. Carroll, manager of Jimmy Maloney, another Boston heavyweight.

Carroll was called into the meeting during an early stage when Carey and Dempsey were trying to obtain Sharkey's services for a lower figure. Buckley was adamant and when Dempsey and Carey appeared to balk at his price, he sug-

SETS NEW COURSE RECORD TO DISTANCE GOLF FOES

Rounds Riviera Course in 67 and Takes Six-Stroke Advantage; Stupple in Second Place

BY EDWARD LAWRENCE

How're they going to stop him? This gamey Scot, Tommy Armour.

That's exactly what sixty-six golfing gentlemen, numbering the cream of America's professional aces, are asking themselves this bright and sunshiny morning as Tommy tees off for the final thirty-six grind in the fourth annual Los Angeles $10,000 open with an almost unbeatable lead of six strokes over the field.

The contemptuous figure, so frequently referred to as "Old Man Par," who considered himself impregnable in this great battle of the Riviera, was again forced to admit stinging defeat yesterday afternoon at Armour's hands. The predecessor of Johnny Farrell, National open champion, stroked another truly magnificent round of golf, 33-34-67, four under par which, added to his 68 of the first round, gave Tommy a thirty-six-hole total of 135.

Yesterday, they said, "Oh, No! Tommy can't stand the pace. Now they are saying the same thing about Bob Stupple, assistant professional of the Exmoor Country Club, Chicago, who breezed in with a 69-72-141 to nose out Macdonald Smith for second place. But Ed Gayer from the Windy City tells us that the twenty-two-year-old golfer from the Middle West is no flash in the pan; that he wins consistently in and around Chicago, and has never failed

Tex Rickard Relates Tale of His Boyhood Days Spent on Frontier Cattle Ranches

ROUGH COWBOYS CARE FOR CALF

Baby Steer Is Adopted by Bad Two-Gun Men

Bread and Molasses Fed to Orphan Youngster

Tex Elected Town Marshal and Arrests Pigs

(This is the only autobiography written by Tex Rickard. It was prepared in collaboration with Bozeman Bulger, for publication exclusively for The Times and the North American Newspaper Alliance. Shortly before Rickard's death he discussed with Bulger plans for publication of these memoirs in book form. Following is the fifth installment of the autobiography, which is appearing in daily chapters.)

BY TEX RICKARD

(In Collaboration With Bozeman Bulger)

(Written exclusively for the Los Angeles Times and the North American Newspaper Alliance.)

(Copyright, 1928, by the North American Newspaper Alliance.)

In relating the incidents of those herd boyhood days among the cattlemen and the tragedies that must have influenced my later life to a certain extent, I don't want to give the impression that we were devoid of tenderness. Quite the contrary.

At the age of 16 I was employed to go with a herd of cattle all the way to Montana. Look at a map and you may realize just what that meant.

The cattlemen, always seeking a market, had found that by driving a herd of longhorns to Montana and grazing them there for a few months they would gain from fifty to sixty pounds a steer. They could then be shipped to Kansas City and sold at a real profit.

RESCUES CALF

One night we had camped to let the herd bed down for the night. I was sent out to scout around the edge of the herd and see that everything was all right. On this ride I ran across a little calf, born during the day, that had lost its mother. The little fellow was so weak and hungry I knew it would die if left alone. To find its mother in a herd of 5000 was impossible; besides, the calf couldn't have kept up with the moving herd when we started out next morning.

I picked the calf up, threw him over my shoulder and carried him into the camp. The cowboys all gathered around, offering many forms of advice. We had no condensed milk.

"Wait a minute," one of the cowboys suggested. "Come with me."

So up went out through the herd at night until we found a cow. We roped her and carried her to the camp. There we tied her legs, everybody taking a hand, and made her let the calf have its supper.

The next day we put the calf in the chuck wagon and carried it all day. At night we caught another cow and went through the forcible feeding. By this time every roughneck cowboy was a foster wet-nurse for that calf. I never knew why, but that calf's name got to be "Sitting Bull."

Never a night came but the cowboys, riding in, would inquire about the welfare of Sitting Bull. They got to be rivals over who would superintend his feeding.

Some days we would let Sitting Bull walk until tired and would then take him in the chuck wagon.

One day Sitting Bull grew hungry and we had run out of milk cows. I was in the chuck wagon with him. I had an idea that a calf would like something sweet. My eye caught sight of a molasses can. I ran my finger around in it and let the calf lick it. Sitting Bull was immediately crazy about molasses. He got to where he would lick the cans just like a goat.

NEW PROBLEM

But I had brought on another problem. It looked as though we cowboys would have to go short on molasses to keep Sitting Bull satisfied. He would twist his little tail and rear and pitch at the mere sight of a molasses can.

I then made another most important discovery in dietetics. We knew Sitting Bull needed some kind of starch. He couldn't have grass or wheat, of course, but bread, one learned cowboy explained, came from wheat. So why not feed our charge bread and molasses? It was so ordered by the counsel of godfathers, and Sitting Bull not only accepted the idea in the proper spirit, but was delighted.

In two weeks that calf ate so much molasses and bread that he was all puffed out. By this time we tried to make him go with the herd. But there was nothing doing. Wherever the chuck wagon went Sitting Bull followed, his head right against the tailboard.

When a herd is bedded down for the night, you know, the chuck wagon goes right through and takes up a position maybe five miles ahead to be ready for breakfast as the herd is started again.

Now you might think that Sitting Bull would want to associate with his kind; might revert to type. Not so. He would very calmly walk right through that immense herd, no matter how complicated or lengthy the move, and follow that chuck wagon right to the moment it stopped. When the camp fire was built he would stand in the edge of the light circle until some one had opened a can of molasses.

Upon our arrival in Montana we kept Sitting Bull until he was a good-sized little bull. He would never go with the herd. So with great care, we found a woman who would give a molasses-eating calf a good home.

Long after we had shipped that herd to Kansas City we received reports that Sitting Bull was a good calf, except that he would follow wagons.

ELECTED MARSHAL

When I went back to Henrietta I was elected town marshal. That was a mighty interesting job, but not altogether one that brought in great wealth. The marshals were not paid salaries but had to depend upon fees for their livelihood. We got $2.50 for each arrest. Business, naturally, was pretty good on Saturday nights. Don't get the impression, though, that we arrested men just for the fun of it; that we could take advantage of a man being in his cups just to get a fee. When you arrested a man in those days he understood that you meant it. We understood it, too.

The greater part of my fees came from impounding stray hogs. We had a law that when a man's hogs were put in pound he had to pay $1 each to have them released. That fine went to me.

I had a valued assistant in a lad named J. Fred Eppler, later a business man in Philadelphia. At that time he was a telegraph messenger boy. He had a keen eye for hogs. Every time he located a stray one and penned it up I would allow him a 15-cent commission—sometimes a quarter.

We made just one very serious mistake.

"Say, Chief," the boy came running to tell me one day, "I've just located a sow that's loose and I think I can catch her."

"Sure, get her in." I directed, seeing a dollar fee for me. Fred saw a quarter for himself.

When he returned to his job that afternoon the sow had given birth to fourteen pigs. Here was a bonanza! Each pig also would bring in a dollar.

PIGS IS PIGS

Eppler got the sow and pigs locked up and we began to look around to notify the owner. While doing so Sheriff Cooper Wright came in my marshal's office.

"Tex," he said in that drawl, so feared by criminals, "what in the devil do you think you are doing? That boy tells me he's got my old sow in pound."

"She's got fourteen pigs by now," I informed him.

"What! Me pay $15? Where's that boy?"

The Sheriff walked right down with a switch in his hand for the boy, and with a kick opened the gate and drove that sow and pigs home.

You can bet that's one fee we never collected.

MAKE 1929 DEBUT HERE SATURDAY

Here are three mainstays of the Stanford University basketball team. Mears, former Hollywood High School boy, is playing a great game at center for the Redshirts. Harry Berg is a veteran forward, while Reynolds has been doing good work at guard. The Cards play Southern California at the Olympic Saturday night.

JAMES MEARS, Center HARRY BERG, Forward

STANFORD FIVE PLAYS TROJAN QUINTET HERE

Husky Hunt's Stanford University quintet will make its 1929 southern bow next Saturday night when the Redshirts come here to oppose Southern California at the Olympic. But one game is on the schedule for this week-end.

While the Trojans and Redshirts are clashing here, U.C.L.A. will be in the north, battling California in a pair of contests.

For the past few years Stanford has been anything but a threat in Coast Conference basketball circles. Not since the days of Ernie Nevers and Nip McHose have the Redshirts been able to cut much of a figure on the court.

But things are different now. Hunt fell heir to a couple of sensational freshmen in Vance Fawcett and Jimmy Mears, two former Hollywood High School boys. Mears is playing center regularly for the varsity now, while Fawcett is one of the three best forwards on the squad.

John Tampcke and Mike Reynolds, two more sophomores, have been doing sensational work as guards, the former winning a regular position. He plays alongside of Capt. Harlow Rothert.

Harry Berg, a veteran from last year, has been holding down one forward berth. The other returning letter men are Chuck Smalling, Bill Clark and Dowi Richards, forwards, Chuck Smalling and John McCandless, centers, and Red Thompson, guard.

HARVARD MILITARY WALLOPS MONROVIA

Coach Herb Winan's Harvard Military Academy tennis squad turned in its third straight win of the season yesterday by trimming the Monrovia High netters. The cadets won fourteen out of the fifteen matches.

The results:

SINGLES

Bundy (H.) defeated Jordan (M.) 6-2, 6-2.
Hargrave (H.) defeated Morris (M.) 6-1, 6-2.
Jack Pike (H.) defeated Rhoads (M.) 6-3, 6-7, 6-4.
Lovell (H.) defeated Jack Elder (M.) 6-2, 6-2.
Curiel (H.) defeated Thomas (M.) 7-5, 6-0.
Rooser (H.) defeated Sanford (M.) 8-6, 6-0.
Albright (H.) defeated Meirs (M.) 6-0, 6-0.
Hughes (H.) defeated Leppert (M.) 6-0, 6-1.
Mackey (H.) defeated Willard (M.) 6-1, 6-0.
Zinser (M.) defeated Eldridge (H.) 6-0, 6-0.

DOUBLES

Pike and Hargrave (H.) defeated Rhoads and Elder (M.) 6-2, 6-2.
Bundy and Albright (H.) defeated Jordan and Morris (M.) 1-6, 7-5, 10-8.
Lovell and Curiel (H.) defeated Thomas and Sanford (M.) 6-1, 6-3.
Rooser and Mackey (H.) defeated Willard and Meirs (M.) 6-3, 6-1.
Eldridge and Hughes (H.) defeated Leppert and Zinser (M.) 6-1, 6-3.

WILMINGTON STAGES ANOTHER "NATURAL."

Wilmington again stages a local "natural", when Jimmy Lundy, rugged and hard-hitting Montana lightweight, who established himself as a big card around the harbor by soundly trouncing Pedro Amador, the Panamanian, goes to the post Wednesday night against Darrio Barron. They are booked for ten frames at 137 pounds.

Backing up the feature, Moffett has a heavyweight semifinal of equal attractiveness. Big Les Kennedy, Lundy's stablemate, who is a prime favorite at Hollywood where he beat both Frank Williams and Russ Walters, opposes Al (Gunner) Anderson, Minneapolis Swede, known as the Tarzan of the heavyweights. They go six rounds.

Frankie Burns vs. Eddie Domondez, 146 pounds, six rounds; Roy White vs. Martin Bobo, 140 pounds, and Ned Herman vs. Midget Lagera meet in fours.

WILL REVIVE HILL CLIMB

A revival of the old annual Mt. Wilson Trail climb is planned, open to all amateur hikers, for Saturday, March 16, when a footrace will be held from Sierra Madre to Orchard Camp on the old Mt. Wilson Trail. The distance to be covered is three and one-half miles over a well-traveled mountain trail. Prizes will be awarded to participants according to their age and sex.

Bears Defeat U.S.C. Five

tire game, the other 11 points coming via the free-throw route. The Trojans caged eleven of twenty-one tries, which isn't so hot. California got but five out of ten, but luckily didn't need any more.

At that the home boys were very much in the running until the final two minutes of play. At this time the count was 29 to 25 in favor of California. Stevens, Bear forward, fouled Johnny Lehners and Referee Dempsey awarded the Trojan guard two free throws. The foul put Stevens out of the game and Ten Eyck came in to replace him. The substitute committed a social error by talking and Lehners was promptly awarded another free throw and chance to draw within one point of the Bears.

But Johnny could only equal the Ancient Mariner's record for he got but one of three, which made the score 29 to 26. Weber then fouled Jess Mortenson and the big Trojan center responded by bringing the count to 29 to 27.

With one minute and thirty-five seconds to play if looked as if the Trojans might even things up, especially when Calland put Frank Smith back into the game for Boelter. But Corbin and Weber came through with a basket each, the former's on a tip-in from close to the net, and that was the old ball game.

These two players shared high-point honors, each chalking up ten digits. Weber was the leading field-goal artist with five. Johnny Lehners, with three field goals and a like number of free throws, led the Trojans with nine points.

As was the case on Friday night the Trojans were no physical match for their foes. Corbin and Ten Eyck towered over all but Mortenson and many of the California shots came from right under the basket. "Midget" Boelter, who subbed for Cano during the second half, stood about half as tall as either of the elongated Bears.

The California boys were just naturally better basket shooters than the Trojans. Mortenson, generally Southern California's mainstay, got only one field goal.

CONFERENCE TO ADMIT SCHOOLS

conference would naturally have to formally admit them. This would amount to a mere formality, however.

Conference authorities are desirous that the two schools adopt conference rules in that they refrain from playing freshmen on their varsity squads. At present both California Christian and Santa Barbara State use frosh athletes on their varsity athletic teams.

With a view to giving the two institutions some incentive for the development of freshman teams the conference passed a motion allowing conference frosh teams to meet first-year teams from either Santa Barbara State or California Christian College. At present frosh teams of the Southern Conference cannot schedule games outside their own body.

California Christian College had a strong football team during the 1928 season. The writer saw the boys give San Diego State an uncomfortable morning one fair Saturday. At present the C.C.C. basketball team has chalked up an amazing string of wins, losing but one contest thus far.

Santa Barbara State is ideally situated for future growth, is backed financially by the State and should develop into one of the leading educational institutions of the western slope before many years.

UP AGAINST IT

At present the Southern Conference is up against it for enough football games to go around, due to the action of Redlands and La Verne in refusing to meet Pomona and Occidental. Redlands failed to schedule with either the Sagehens or Tigers for 1929, while La Verne, after balking, finally took on Pomona but left Oxy out.

It is felt that the conferences should have a rule forcing every team to play every rival. Failing in this the fathers hope to increase the size of the body so that no team will find itself with only four games, as is the case with Occidental for 1929. The smaller teams just naturally dodge the champion. Last year Pomona was avoided in a similar manner.

The conference officials approved all schedules adopted by coaches and managers. They also sanctioned a trip by an all-conference track team to Stanford on April 13 for a meet with the Redshirts.

At present the conference numbers seven institutions—Occidental, Pomona, California Tech, Whittier, Redlands, San Diego State and La Verne.

LOWRY'S RABBIT PUNCHES

Thomas, Bell and Neal kindly step to the front and hem and haw a bit? They have a lot more to explain than your correspondent.

REAL DARK HORSE

IT'S been a long time since the neigh of a dark horse was heard in an open golf tourney hereabouts, so it is quite refreshing to see the name of Henry Stapple, an assistant at the Exmoor Country Club, Chicago, right up in the front ranks.

So far up in the front, in fact, that he is sitting pretty in second place—six strokes back of Tommy Armour.

He did himself proud yesterday with a 69 after a 72 Friday, and he slipped through the crowd before anybody heard about his score.

He was so unostentatious about it all after waiting two long hours on the tee because his playing partners failed to show that even the camera hounds were given the slip.

So if you fail to see a picture of the man closest to Tommy Armour this morning you'll know it is because he is a real dark horse and nobody figured him.

However, the boys who know something of his ability say he is not shooting over his head, and that he has never failed to qualify for the P.G.A. championship.

BASEBALL CLOVER

AFTER getting all wound up on this golf business it's hard to sidetrack to other sports, but observing Will Hardrock Lane at Riviera one's thoughts naturally veer to baseball.

Will plays golf, loves it in fact, but he also deals in baseball. He owns the Hollywood Stars, and he's going to train his boys at San Diego this year.

The good citizens of that community are going to pay Will $7500 for the privilege of gazing at his athletes in action, which is more than Hardrock Will made at Wrigley Field last year, so Will isn't feeling bad about it at all.

And then there are several golf courses in and around San Diego. Also one at Agua Caliente. Taking everything into consideration, Will figures he made a good move.

His athletes can play Portland and Seattle in practice games during the spring training days because Portland will be at Santa Ana and Seattle at San Clemente, and Will can play wherever he pleases—"August Caliente preferred," he says.

MARBLES OR CASH?

THAT proposed fight at Las Vegas between Mickey Walker and Ace Hudkins may sound all right, but it is natural to ask what the boys are going to use for money.

By the time the citizenry of Las Vegas get through meeting the demands of Walker and Hudkins for a championship bout there won't be enough money left in the town to buy a new padlock for the public bastile.

Walker wants as much for defending his title as Jim Jeffries got for coming back against Jack Johnson at Reno in 1910. And that was a heavyweight title fight.

However, you can't blame the boys of Las Vegas for having a little civic pride.

Shelby had some, too.

Gene Sarazen Keeps Miami Golf Honors

MIAMI BEACH (Fla.) Jan. 12.—Gene Sarazen sank a one-foot putt for an eagle 3 on the seventy-second hole at the LaGorce course here this afternoon to retain his title in the Miami Beach open championship. Sarazen finished with a 286 total.

George Christ, Davenport, (Fla.) professional, who had forged ahead of Sarazen on the sixteenth hole of the final round, dropped to second place when he required five strokes on the last hole. His total was 287, one above the champion's.

JACK SHARKEY SIGNS FOR GO

gested that they call Carroll into the conference and obtain his consent to match Jimmy Maloney against Stribling for their Miami bout. Dempsey and Carey refused to consider the suggestion seriously and finally agreed to Buckley's terms for Sharkey.

The Boston Garden officials, Fairbanks and Mack, were on hand to offer Sharkey an $80,000 guarantee to meet Stribling in this city, if he refused the Miami match.

As soon as Buckley accepted the $100,000 offer, Jack Dempsey, who will play the late Tex Rickard's role as promoter of the Miami battle, left for New York. He said he expected to leave for Miami early tonight.

BUCKLEY OBJECTS

Dempsey left Carey behind to iron out the last-minute disagreements with Buckley, which were many. The Boston manager objected to many clauses and phrases in the contract but these were finally changed to his satisfaction.

Both Dempsey and Carey said that Stribling already has accepted the terms, 20 per cent of the gate less the taxes. Both predicted the receipts would exceed $500,000.

Once during the haggling, Buckley suddenly changed from a boxing manager to a promoter. He asked Dempsey if he would meet Sharkey for $400,000 and when the former champion refused, made it $500,000. Dempsey, however, took it as a joke, although Buckley said Sharkey would be willing to fight for 25 per cent and give one-fifth of his share to Rickard's widow.

DEMPSEY ADMITS HE'S A PROMOTER

NEW YORK, Jan. 12. (AP)—Jack Dempsey returned to New York from Boston tonight just in time to board a train for Miami Beach, Fla., where the former heavyweight champion of the world will make arrangements for the Jack Sharkey-Young Stribling bout there February 27, next.

In Boston Dempsey left William F. Carey, vice-president and treasurer of Madison Square Garden Corporation, to straighten out business matters in connection with the Boston Garden.

"Give me a break, boys," Dempsey called to newspaper men, "I'm a promoter now."

Revealing that his connection with the Garden was for this one fight only, Dempsey said he was interested only in carrying out Tex Rickard's plans as he knew them and of being of every possible assistance in protecting the interests of Mrs. Rickard and her baby.

POLOISTS PLAY IN TILT TODAY

San Mateo Blues to Meet Midwick Four

Northern Players in Southland Appearance Locally

Australian Mallet Star Here for Coast Series

BY FRANK ROCHE

The San Mateo Blues and Midwick Purples go on parade this afternoon at the Midwick Country Club polo field, Hollywood, when all the wounded and dead polo balls are gathered up at the end of the afternoon.

The polo season opens with a gathering never equaled in the history of Southern California. Among the polo players who will perform for Southland fans at Midwick this winter is none other than Tommy Hitchcock, whom Cheve is an admirer of mallet strokes. Hitchcock will bring a crack team here to assist the monthly competition of Gordon Moore, F. W. Hellman and Charles Schwartz. The team will play under the name of Rancho San Carlos colors.

SAN CARLOS FOUR

The Hitchcock four will enter the Pacific Coast open championships which will either be held at Midwick or Del Monte with Midwick most likely getting the tournament as it was held in the east last season. Count who will be No. 3 on the San Carlos four, the young man who won international polo fame in the American-United States polo series. He is a six-at seven goals. Schwartz is a five-goal player. Moore is rated at six goal.

Another happening that is of joy to the hearts of local polo officials was the arrival yesterday of the Calawaii of the American team headed by Maj. Henry Ansaa squad is composed of Capt. Pierson, Frederick Boyd, Walter Dillingham and Harry Baldwin. The last two are members of a Hawaiian polo team, but they will play with the Ansaa here. The Ansaa polo ponies, forty-eight of the best ponies in Australia will then be for sale.

The game today will give polo fans a chance to see the two teams that rate in the first annual chukker match between San Mateo team, which is the first start in Pacific Coast polo, bound to be a better balanced outfit today. The Blues showed they had plenty of class in the opening game but needed some competition to put their belts before they could do at their best.

BLUES WON TITLE

The Blues won the Pacific Coast Circuit Cup championship last season and they played to the final round in the annual tournament at Cleveland. The team dropped old Hugh Drury Jr., son and Dick Schwartz to the veteran's place. Drury is playing the squad from the east or at least he did for the George Pope, Kenneth Whitney Lindsay Howard hold down the same positions they had last season.

The Blues missed Drury's leadership in Friday's game. A number of times during the game Blues seemed to be over the chance which escaped Midwick team running up a lead on them. Today things may be a good deal different. If Schwartz turns in as he is capable of at least one Midwick players will have their full.

The Purple team from Midwick is composed of Wrightsman, Hal Roach, Fowler and Dr. Harry Wheeler. Roach is a very strong contender for the best on the Coast. Wheeler is splendidly mounted and playing in every game. Wheeler is capable and dependable pony at all times.

The local experts look for a fine competition when the two tangle. The Blues will make over next week for two games.

The line-ups:

San Mateo Blues		Midwick Purples
Byers	No. 1	Wrightsman
Walsh	No. 2	Roach
Howard	No. 3	Wheeler
Schwartz	Back	Drury

University of Southern California to Boast Strong, Well-Balanced Track Team

A FAMOUS SMILE AND FOUR REASONS FOR IT

Dean Cromwell, University of Southern California track coach, has a right to be mean if he feels like it, having lost a goodly number of stars from his last year's team, but he has some more capable youngsters performing under the Cardinal and Gold banner, so he's smiling happily in anticipation of the approaching track season. With Capt. Charley Borah in the sprints, Jimmy Payne in the hurdles, Ed Gloege in the half, and Warren Woodruff in the two-mile, the Trojans have a good start on anybody in any meet.

INTERFRATERNITY MEET SCHEDULED FOR FRIDAY

Cromwell Seeks Additional Stars in Annual Classic; Borah Heads List of Veterans

BY RALPH HUSTON

Track activity at the University of Southern California, which has been under way with some enthusiasm since the football squad left Howard Field, gets into action in earnest Friday afternoon when Coach Dean Cromwell stages the annual interfraternity track festival.

The meet usually discovers some unusual talent in the Greek lettered ranks and this year will be no exception.

Cromwell will have Jimmy Payne, Charley Webber and Duncan Powers in the hurdles. A newcomer is Ernest Payne, no relation to Jimmy, who transferred to Southern California from Chaffee Junior College.

After a couple of bad seasons the Trojans expect to get back in the running again in the weight events. Jim Stewart, frosh star of two years ago, who placed in the Olympic decathlon, will be eligible to perform. Sam Kline, a sophomore, is a promising performer in both shot and discus, and Clarence Schleimer, formerly of Pasadena High School, a transfer from Pasadena Junior College, is likely to break into the limelight.

Jack Williams is imbued with the right spirit this season, and has been in constant training for more than two months. At his best, Williams had the possibilities to be as good as Barnes or Sabin Carr, but he never seemed to be in that condition. He will be aided in the aerial event by Bill Hubbard and Bill Livingston from last year's team, and by Harold Mitchell, of last year's frosh.

Stewart may have to take active part in the high jump, as there are no apparent candidates for this event. Jess Hill will hold the limelight in the broad jump, and Jess Mortensen has the nod in the javelin.

"Red" Maxwell, now a junior, is the only returning letterman in the quarter, and his main help is expected to come from Jack MacPadden, late of the frosh. The latter showed up well last season, improving in every race.

GLOEGE ALONE

Ed Gloege will be the mainstay in the half. He ran under 1:56 last season, and having fully recovered from an operation, is in shape again for the season.

Warren Woodruff, Ellsworth Patterson, Bryce Schurr and Blake Hansen are back again in the distances, and will be augmented by Bob Swede. The latter was captain of his freshman team at Princeton, and was ineligible here last season by reason of his transfer.

Cromwell will have Jimmy Payne, Charley Webber and Duncan Powers in the hurdles. A newcomer is Ernest Payne, no relation to Jimmy, who transferred to Southern California from Chaffee Junior College.

Leo Diegel had fourteen par holes, three birdies and was one over once. Harry Cooper navigated the first ten holes in exact par figures. He got four birdies, thirteen par holes, and was one over once for his 70.

Al Watrous and Leo Diegel are having an unsuspected memory contest. Both possess a remarkable facility for remembering names, and startled fans, who once had the privilege of shaking hands with one or the other at some tournament a year ago, find themselves not only remembered, but their names correctly called.

NEW SENSATION

Willie Hunter, Jr., approximately two years of age, provided the gallery about the scoreboard with a fine exhibition of stance and driving. The Montebello Park pro's infant son has a driver all his own, and he knows how to use it.

Cyril Walker, one-time British champion, came back in 75 again today, giving him 150 for the two days. He took a disastrous seven on No. 11, when he topped his ball.

SCOTS, LA NATIVIDADS HOCKEY TEAMS TANGLE

A return meeting of two fast-skating ice hockey teams—the Clan Scots and the La Natividads—who staged the most furious game of the season at the Palais De Glace rink a week ago, is on tap for tomorrow night at the Melrose and Virgil arena.

The last contest between these squads at the Palais De Glace found so much rivalry existing between the sextets that the wild and woolly session ended with Managers Tubby Coleman and Gordon Dewar tangling in a grappling and fisticuff affair.

NET STARS CLASH IN OPEN PLAY

Several Feature Matches Scheduled Today in L. A. Tennis Tourney

Play will be resumed this morning at 6 o'clock in the fourth annual Los Angeles open tennis championships at the municipal playground courts, located at Harvard and Sixty-second streets, where more than 100 Southland netters will clash in titular contests.

The men's singles continues from the third to the fifth-round bracket. Several feature tilts bring together seeded stars and various possible threats. Jack De Lara meets Dale Robinson, Lester Stoeffen faces Ben Neiden and Ned Wheldon encounters Gerald Bartosh in three early morning feature tilts.

A field of thirty women will open battle for the city women's championship this morning. The Alice Park-Carol Stevens match is the feature preliminary pairing of the day. These clash at 11 o'clock. Gladys Patz, defending champion, meets the winner of the Curtis-Harris affair, while Louise McFarland of Pasadena, second seeded favorite, crosses rackets with Elisabeth Still.

A limited number of doubles teams will open the men's doubles event this afternoon. A very classy field seeks the city championship in this event. Arthur Kusaman and Ben Gorchakoff, Occidental, and Ellsworth Vines and Sid Wood, Pasadena, are the leading combinations.

BEARS BUST ATTENDANCE GRID MARK

New Season Turnout Record Set by California Pigskin Enthusiasts

BERKELEY, Jan. 12. (Exclusive) Despite Captain-elect Roy Riegels's immortal run in reverse gear in the New Year's Day classic at Pasadena, the University of California football varsity established a new attendance record during the season just closed, it is announced today by the Associated Students' athletic manager, Jack F. MacKenzie.

The manager reports that a total of 427,899 people witnessed nine regularly scheduled and one post-season contest last season as compared with 410,760 that saw an equal number of games in 1927.

Old attendance marks began to fall with the first game of the year, that with the University of Santa Clara. In 1927 this event attracted 28,344 people as compared with 42,500 in 1928. The Montana game brought out the smallest attendance, 10,099 fans, in 1927.

The 1928 record for small attendance was the Nevada contest, which drew 10,950 spectators. In drawing 86,404 people to the Rose Bowl contest on New Year's Day, the Golden Bears and Georgia Tech broke the Stanford-Alabama mark by 10,000.

BOXER NOW MANAGER

Bud Taylor, ring veteran, has retired from competition to devote all his time to the stable of boxers he is assembling around Terre Haute, Ind., his home town.

Golf-Croquet Tourney Has Large Entry

Many more entries, both professional and amateur were filed yesterday for the golf-croquet contest to be held tomorrow night at the Ambassador Hotel lobby. The professional list of entries contains Walter Hagen and several other of the nationally famous pros now playing in the annual $10,000 tournament.

Golf-croquet is a brand new combination game, being constituted of golf, poker playing and croquet. The game is played on a woven rug in which the fifty-two cards in a playing deck are interwoven. Contestants putt five golf balls from different angles at the cards, the joker being in the center and which runs wild. High poker hands are tried for, whichever card the balls stop on determining the hands.

The high amateur in the affair will be presented a trophy cup by the Ambassador Hotel, while the second high amateur will be awarded a trophy cup by the B. H. Dyas Company. The Ambassador also has placed up a purse of $100 for the professionals entered in the play, $75 to the winner and $25 to the runner-up.

EXPORT MARES TO ENGLAND

American trotting stallions and brood mares are being exported to Europe in large numbers.

WARNER PLANS TO USE BOTH A AND B GRIDIRON FORMATIONS

STANFORD UNIVERSITY, Jan. 12.—Glad to be home again at Stanford, Pop Warner, the eminent football coach, already has commenced planning for next season. He has decided, for one thing, to use both A and B formations, for the sake of variety of attack. Toward the end of the past season, Pop had both the old and the new formations workin because he found that B alone was not baffling enough.

As to the losses which the 1928 team suffers, the Old Man thinks that they will be readily replaced, except for the guards. Post and Robesky were a great pair, and Al Forster, Ball Driscoll and Pete Haiser will have difficulties shining as brilliantly. The present team, by the way, loses Capt. Hoffman, Spud Lewis, Robesky, Post, Tiny Sellman, Bob Sims, Frank Wilton, Bob Vermilya, Spud Harder and Hodge Davidson from the letter men.

Commenting on eastern football, Pop declared that the East has definitely bowed to western supremacy. "They admit that their type of play is too conservative to compete with the present style used by the West. The lesson taught them by Pacific Coast teams this season, however, should cause some radical departures from the system used in that section last fall," Warner said.

Warner regards Red Cagle, the Army half, as an indubitable all-American. "He's a whizz," Pop said, "and you can bet that any game he plays in is worth watching."

BRUINS IN BASEBALL WORKOUT

U.C.L.A. Horsehiders Open Practice; Prospects Bright for Championship

The Bruin wound his claws around a baseball when the first baseball practice this season at the University of California at Los Angeles was held last Wednesday on Moore Field. A. J. Sturzenegger, varsity baseball coach at the Bruin institution, had his battery men out only for the first workout on the diamond this season.

A large number of men answered Coach Sturzenegger's first call last Wednesday, a number of good prospects turning out. Of the six pitching prospects for the season, five took their turns at hurling the horsehide in the initial workout. The varsity lettermen returning to the box are Capt. "Whitey" Graham and Harry Griffith, Lee Duke, Les Charleston and George Forster.

Catchers who turned out for the first practice are Stahl, varsity letterman; McFarlane, also a varsity player last year, and Alfred Chandle, peppy frosh catcher of last season. Berib Berlenbach's graduation last June left the position wide open, so a tough fight is expected for the regular berth as backston on the Bruin 1929 nine.

Graduation left the Bruin baseballers off easy. Besides Berlenbach, ex-Capt. Pete Fruhling and Frank Harvey, stellar players on last year's team, are the only ones eliminated from play this year via the sheepskin route. Two veteran players on Bruin nines are also expected to return to school this coming semester: Frank Smith, two-year letterman and outfielder, and Les Ward, varsity pitcher.

The U.C.L.A. diamond squad appears to have good chances this coming season to win the championship, although St. Mary's, last year's pennant coppers, will be favored to repeat again, despite the loss of Larry Bettencourt, who leaped from playing third base for the Saints to holding down the hot corner for the St. Louis Browns. Due to the loss of key players at California, Stanford and Southern California, prospects at those schools are uncertain. Present indications point to a red-hot series between St. Mary's and U.C.L.A. for the pennant.

MEMORIAL STADIUM AT BERKELEY RESEEDED

BERKELEY, Jan. 12. (Exclusive) With the hope that the gridiron greensward will not be reduced to a bare dirt field as during the 1928 season, athletic authorities at the University of California announce completion of reseeding the Memorial Stadium. This should result in a brand new turf for the next playing season. Owing to the reseeding, spring practice will this season be staged upon such odd corners of the campus as are not occupied by buildings or contractors' equipment. Last year practice was held in the stadium, which was largely responsible for the early death of the grass.

RACES ON TAP TODAY AT ASCOT

Expect Thirty Pilots to Take Part in Program This Afternoon

Thirty speed creations, tuned to the last degree, were to be moved out to Ascot Speedway this morning to usher in the 1929 sanctioned racing season at the historic five-eighth-mile bowl this afternoon.

With each of the cars will be as many pilots, a like number of mechanicians and other attendants, all bent on sending their favorites through the qualifying time trials starting at 10 a.m. in near-record time. The race program proper will get under way promptly at 2:30 p.m.

Leon Duray, who in the early days of Ascot ruled as its champion, will be on hand to size up the field of youthful drivers who will be his rivals during the coming season. Duray is one of several eastern track campaigners wintering here.

The day's program includes the following events:

(1.) Two-lap dash for three fastest cars.
(2.) Ten-lap sprint for eight fastest cars.
(3.) Ten-lap sprint for next eight fastest cars.
(4.) Ten-lap sprint for next eight fastest cars.
(5.) Twenty-five-lap midwinter sweepstakes for first four cars in event Nos. 2, 3 and 4.

SOCCER SQUADS TANGLE TODAY

City League Teams in Four Tilts on Local Bill

Los Angeles A.C. in Clash With Magyar Eleven

Hollywood in Crucial Tilt With Viking Players

This afternoon's tussles in the Los Angeles City Soccer League will have a decided bearing on the league honors with Hollywood's apparent league domination cut down to a 1-point lead over Magyars and Los Angeles Athletic Club.

The Movie City men are slated to tackle the smart Vikings eleven in the second game of the Rose Bowl program and with the two second-place squads meeting at Loyola Field the league standing is liable to show another team heading the group for a week at least.

Magyars and L.A.A.C. hook up in the nightcap affair of the Loyola Field bill, and with the winner going to first place if the Vikings can down the Sheiks, the Loyola Field struggle promises to be an even battle with little to choose between the two squads. Mercury is the only undefeated team in the league at present.

While the leading teams are staging their games the other teams in the loop promise to bring out some interesting battles.

Sons of St. Georgs, fresh from their victory over the Hollywood men, tackle the Scots in the opening of the Venice Boulevard doings. The Scots dropped a hard game to Vikings last Sunday and with their league title chances fading with another defeat today Manager Danny Stevens's men are figuring on taking the fast-traveling Sons aggregation into camp. Harry Gomm's men are at present hitting a pretty strong pace and look to be a hard team to stop from getting into a league play-off.

Pasadena makes a home-town appearance when they clash with the Richfield Oilers. The standing of both clubs does not warrant any titles this year, but today's opener at the Rose Bowl field should be a keen struggle.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA LOOP

Two league fixtures and four cup-tie games will be the program in President Taylor's Southern California League today.

What promises to be a hectic game will be the meeting between Spanish-Americans and Long Beach Caledonians at L. A. High grounds in the feature game of the second round of the cup competition. Rangers and San Pedro Scandia will stage a cup contest as the opener on the L. A. High field. Inglewood and Victorias clash in another trophy tilt on the Inglewood High grounds. Bonnie Britts take on the Long Beach United eleven at Recreation Park in the final all-verware fixture.

Rovers and Germania come together in a scheduled league affair at Ross Snyder Field, while Teutonia and Santa Monica will also mix up in a league tilt.

BENEFIT GAME TODAY

The Orange County All-Stars will play the Old Timers in a benefit baseball game this afternoon at the Orange County Fairgrounds, the proceeds to go to the Tuberculosis Sanatorium.

CHAMPIONSHIP BEAR CREW BOASTS SEVEN VETERANS

BY LEWIS B. REYNOLDS

BERKELEY, Jan. 12.—Seven members of the world's champion University of California crew will report for duty here when Coach Ky Ebright issues his call for spring rowing practice January 15.

Based on material known to be available for the 1929 season, prospects are good that the Golden Bears will repeat their triumphs of 1928 in the Pacific Coast and the Poughkeepsie regattas. Stalder, bow man in the eight that last year won ten consecutive races at all distances from 1000 meters up to four miles, is the only oarsman who has graduated. Don Blessing, coxswain, has also completed his college career.

SEVEN RETURN

Returning members of the world's champion crew are: Pete Donlan, stroke; Hube Caldwell, No. 7; Bill Thompson, No. 6; Bill Dally, No. 5; Jim Workman, No. 4; Fran Fredericks, No. 3; and Jack Brinck, No. 2.

Outstanding candidates for the position left vacant at bow by Stalder are Ward Von Tillow, who rowed on the 1926 and 1927 varsities at Poughkeepsie, and Harold Gilmore, who rowed in that position in the 1928 Washington regatta.

Vincent (Moon) Mullins, cox of the Jayvees last year; Dick Montgomery, pilot of the freshmen, and Jim Logan, third varsity cox, are the men who will compete for the berth left open by Blessing.

The regatta with Washington will be held on the Oakland estuary this year, the race having been set for the morning of Saturday, April 13. The Husky and Bear freshman eights will row a two-mile preliminary at 9 o'clock, and the junior varsities will row three miles at 10 o'clock. The varsity race is set for 11.

All races will be over the usual course from the Webster-street bridge to a point below the boathouse. Indications are that a crowd of 25,000 or more will witness the regatta this year—a new record if expectations are materialized. A dual track meet with the Huskies in the afternoon at the California oval will wind up the day's program.

Coach Russ Nagler will begin freshman practice at the same time that the varsity turns out. He and Ebright tried an experiment last November during fall practice, when a regatta was held with the Sacramento junior college crew, the first freshman boat and third varsity participating in a triangular regatta. The freshmen may meet the Sacramentans again this spring, perhaps on the Sacramento River course.

STAYED IN EUROPE

None of the seven members of the varsity which won international honors at Amsterdam took part in fall practice, six of them—Donlan, Caldwell, Thompson, Workman, Fredericks and Dally—remaining in Europe after the Olympic Games. All six will register next week when college opens for the spring semester. Jack Brinck, who registered last September, was excused from fall practice by Ebright, who told him to forget the crew for a few months.

No decision as to the number of crews that California will send east for the national regatta at Poughkeepsie will be made until after the Washington race. Last year entries were made in freshman, junior varsity and varsity classes. It is considered certain, however, that the varsity will be sent back to defend the title it won last summer when it smashed the course record that had stood for twenty-seven years.

The complete record of titles now held by the Californians follows:

Defeated Washington by one-half length at Seattle, April 6, 1928. This marked the first time that any crew had ever defeated the Huskies on their own course. Distance, three miles; time, 18:10 2-5.

Won the national intercollegiate regatta at Poughkeepsie on the Hudson River, June 19, 1928, defeating the nearest competitor, Columbia (1927 champions) by one length. Other crews defeated were Washington, Cornell, Navy, Syracuse and Pennsylvania. The time was 18m. 25 4-5s., breaking by more than seventeen seconds the former mark of 18m. 53 1-5s. made by Cornell in 1901. Distance, four miles.

Defeated Yale by one-half length in final trial, Philadelphia, July 7 for right to represent the United States in Olympic Games at Amsterdam. Distance, 2000 meters; time 5:46.

Won Olympic Games title by defeating England by three-quarters of a length in finals; Sloten, August 10. Distance, 2000 meters; time 6:03 1-5.

Bert Colima Faces Walcott Langford in Comeback Attempt on Olympic Program

SLATTERY MAY MEET HEAVIES

Decision Depends on Result of Delaney Battle

Anxious to Follow Precepts Set by Loughran

Claims Speed Would Offset Weight Advantage

NEW YORK, Jan. 12. (Exclusive) If Jimmy Slattery comes out on top in his match with Jack Delaney in the Madison Square Garden on February 1, he expects to take a whirl in the heavyweight division. He certainly should put some sparkle into that dull mass as long as he lasts.

JIMMY SLATTERY

The story goes that Slattery has much the same ideas on the heavyweight subject as have been expounded by Tommy Loughran. Tommy, in the course of a few minutes and without even using any big words, can come pretty close to convincing anyone that a good light-heavyweight is better off in the heavyweight ranks than his own division.

Loughran's argument, in brief, is that weight above 175 or 180 pounds usually is more of a handicap than a help. The 175-pounder, he contends, is big enough to cope with a heavyweight and has a tremendous advantage in speed.

NOT SO GOOD

Tommy admits that it is not well to be tapped on the chin by a 200-pounder, but he holds that if a fellow is smart and fast there is not much danger of that, especially after looking over the current crop of big fellows.

Loughran has proved his theory to some extent, having slapped Johnny Risko around a couple of times and also having walloped Jack Gross and Big Boy Peterson.

Slattery figures he can do anything Loughran can and probably more. The Buffalo boy has cuffed a few big fellows, but none of any prominence. Jimmy might not do so well in fifteen rounds, but if he should stick to his knitting he probably could gallop home in front of many of the big boys now swelling around in the guise of heavyweight contenders.

There was a time when most of the lads who make a study of the sock market were pointing to Slattery as another Jim Corbett. Just about the time every one was ready to make this unanimous Dave Shade of California, little more than a welterweight, put the crusher on Slat's chin. However, that misfortune did not serve to discourage the Buffalo Celt and he is very much in the picture today.

With things as they are one can hardly blame Loughran, Slattery or any other light-heavyweight who knows what it is all about for wanting to take a hand in the eliminations. Some of the middleweights, fellows like Mickey Walker and Ace Hudkins, probably could whip a few of the alleged heavyweight contenders.

OTHERS READY

If this hankering for higher things continues to spread in the 175-pound division there is no telling where it may end. Loughran is just about ready to surrender his title to concentrate on heavyweight activities. If Slattery follows him into the realm of the big boys Leo Lomski, James J. Braddock and a few more may go along.

This Slattery-Delaney fight has been cooking for almost four years. It has been off again and on again so often that even the statisticians have lost the count. To make certain that they don't drop out of line again each has posted a $2500 forfeit with the boxing commission.

It was late in 1924 that Slattery and Delaney first met in the ring. Jimmy won the decision, the affair being limited to six rounds because the Buffalo boxer was under the age limit. Early in 1925 they did it all over again and once more the decision went to Slattery.

There are no indications that Delaney has improved recently and several that Slattery has, so Jimmy is the favorite to win.

Occidental in 43-32 Victory Over La Verne

Occidental College's ambitious basketballers advanced another notch toward the Southern Conference title last night by defeating the LaVerne quintet, 43 to 32, after a rough game played at the Tigers' gym.

The contest was a rough-and-tumble affair, with Ted Ellsworth being ejected early on four fouls. Waybright, Leopard forward, chalked up 14 of his team's digits for high-point honors. Elliott, with 11 markers, and Beebe, with 10 points, led the Tiger scoring.

Oxy took a commanding lead in the first half, which ended with Coach Kienholz's athletes in front, 22-11, and held the Leopards even in the final period. The win was the Tigers' second conference victory. LaVerne last Monday upset Whittier, who tied with Oxy for the title last year.

Line-ups:

Occidental (43)		LaVerne (32)
Ketcherside (4)	F.	Cross (7)
Elliott (11)	F.	Waybright (14)
Ortiz (2)	C.	Thompson (4)
Ellsworth (3)	G.	Shirk (4)
Beebe (10)	G.	Vahlman

SCORE BY HALVES

Occidental	22	21—43
LaVerne	11	21—32

Referee, Occidental; Dressler, forward; Baird (4), center; Murrary (2) and McAlister (2), guards.

LaVerne: Rudbell (1) and Stutzman (1), forwards; Leonard (1), center; Root (2), guard.

MEYERS, CORBETT DRAW

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 12. (AP)—Young Corbett III, Fresno welterweight, and Pete Meyers of San Francisco, fought ten rounds last night to a draw.

WALKER READY FOR TITLE GO

CHICAGO, Jan. 12.—Mickey Walker, the world's middleweight champion, has notified Paul Prehn, president of the National Boxing Association, that he will defend his 160-pound honors against any opponent whom Prehn selects.

Prehn lost no time in notifying Walker he must meet Ace Hudkins within sixty days or the N.B.A. would forfeit his title. Promoters in several States are bidding for the fight.

Walker and Hudkins met in Chicago in the rain last summer and Mickey was given the decision.

Jack Kearns, Walker's manager, is in Los Angeles but has announced his willingness to talk terms with any promoter who can put a good guarantee on the line for Walker's services.

A RAINBOW ROUND MY SHOULDER

Bert Colima is the middleweight champion of Mexico. Here is the proof. He won it by defeating Tommy White in Mexico City before 25,000 people last year. The belt is made of rich ribbon interwoven with purest gold. Colima boxes Walcott Langford in the Olympic Tuesday night.

SONNENBERG'S RISE PROVES TUNNEY HAD CORRECT IDEA

BY WALTER ECKERSALL

CHICAGO, Jan. 12.—When Gene Tunney was training for his championship fight with Jack Dempsey in Chicago in September of 1926 he made the statement that sometime in the near future a college man would be the heavyweight champion of the world. Gene went on further to state that former college athletes will be the champions in the various lines of professional athletic endeavor.

GUS SONNENBERG

Tunney asserted the day of the crude athlete is past, according to Tunney, the man who makes the grade in professional sports must be smart. He must have some sort of an education. He must know how to co-ordinate and when to avoid running into danger. Self-control, the faculty of knowing when to hit and when to step away are given by Tunney as two of his greatest assets.

That Tunney has the proper slant on the situation may be gathered from the fact that college men have proven the attractions in professional football. Paddy Driscoll, Red Grange and Bennie Friedman have proven the drawing cards and each has performed the expected feats on the chalk-lined fields.

BEAT CHAMPION

The most recent product of the college ranks to ascend to a professional title is Gus Sonnenberg, a former football player at Dartmouth, who won the world's heavyweight wrestling championship from Ed (Strangler) Lewis in Boston recently. For years Lewis has been recognized as the king of the heavyweights. A few years ago, Wayne Munn, another college athlete, who played football at Nebraska, won the title from Lewis in Kansas City. Munn used his football tactics on the champion and in an interesting mix-up on the ropes, Munn secured a standing crotch hold and tossed Lewis out of the ring. Ed was unable to come back for the next fall and forfeited his world's title to the former Nebraska football player.

After winning the world's championship, Munn was defeated by Stanislaus Zbyszko in Philadelphia. The veteran Pole in turn lost the title to Joe Stecher. After a few months of dickering, Lewis and Stecher were matched to meet in a finish bout for the world's title in St. Louis. Lewis won back his title by taking the first and third falls. Stecher won the second.

Although Lewis has been accused of engaging in set-up matches, he has been the best showman in the history of the sport. In numbers of cases Ed could have tossed his opponent twice in five minutes. Instead, he gave the spectators their money's worth. He permitted inferior opponents to toss him out of the ring or flop him about the canvas as if he were a novice. After the bouts had gone a certain length of time, Lewis went to work and ended the contests.

Lewis, however, underrated Sonnenberg, who is considered one of the best linemen in Dartmouth football history. Gus was discovered by Wallie McCormack, a former Dartmouth football player and coach. Gus was urged to come to Chicago by Tom Heneage, a Dartmouth alumnus. At that time, Sonnenberg had proved to be one of the sensations of Michigan high school football. He played with Muskegon. He was a splendid kicker and blocker. He was smart and knew the fine points of the game.

GREAT PLAYER

Men who played with and against Sonnenberg have repeatedly said he was one of the most determined warriors they had ever seen. He carried out his blocks. He was a vicious tackler who brought his opponents to the ground with a thud. He always carried out his assignments, offensively and defensively.

The experience of the football field has helped him to win the highest honors on the professional mat. In his match with Lewis, the former Dartmouth football player was determined. He started on the aggressive and never once let up. It was his ability to break stiff arms on the gridiron that enabled Sonnenberg to crash through Lewis's defense, pick him up in football fashion and toss him for the first fall of the contest. It was the same tactics which enabled Sonnenberg to toss Lewis out of the ring for the deciding fall.

Although Lewis assumed his customary tactics of butting and elbowing Sonnenberg gave the champion just as good as he received. Gus asked for no quarter and refused to give Lewis amity when Ed relaxed in his goat-getting tactics. It was a case of the survival of the fittest with Sonnenberg, who is known as one of the gamest football players who ever wore the green of Dartmouth, coming out on top.

Although the world's heavyweight wrestling champion, Sonnenberg will continue to play professional football. Gus is of the opinion the football game owes him something and he will now capitalize his football prowess with the added honor of being the wor'd's heavyweight wrestling champion.

Among the boxing heavyweights who are clamoring for honors is Les Marriner, former University of Illinois football player. Although inexperienced, Marriner is looked upon as a prospect who may develop in the next two years. With Sonnenberg on the top of the wrestling pack and Marriner a heavyweight boxing prospect, predictions of Tunney may turn out to be true as the years roll by.

MIDWICK TO STAGE JUNIOR TENNIS PLAY

Junior tennis tournament for boys and girls 15 years and under is scheduled for the Midwick Country Club to start the 26th inst., according to Walter Westbrook, tennis pro of the Midwick club.

Four events are carded, all singles; boys, 15 years and under; girls, 15 years and under; boys, 13 years and under; and girls, 13 years and under. Players may enter in only one class. All entries must be mailed to Walter Westbrook, Midwick Country Club, Monterey Park, Cal. The entrance fee is $1.

Border Races to Continue

SAN DIEGO, Jan. 12. (AP)—The race meeting of the Tia Juana Jockey Club across the border will continue. Racing will be held tomorrow.

Representatives of the Thoroughbred Horsemen's Association and directors of the Tia Juana Jockey Club came to an agreement on the differences over the feed problem for horses late this afternoon at a conference which followed the regular program of eight events.

Jockey Club officials agreed to the demand of horsemen that they be allowed to purchase feed at any point they pleased.

SONNENBERG TO RISK CROWN IN ST. LOUIS

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 12. (AP) — Gus Sonnenberg, who bethroned Ed "Strangler" Lewis as the heavyweight wrestling champion in Boston a week ago, has agreed to defend his title in St. Louis the 24th inst. against an opponent yet to be selected, Tom Packs, local wrestling promoter, announced. Packs said he expects to choose Sonnenberg's opponent within the next day or two.

CAULIFLOWER ALLEY NOTES

A gala night next Tuesday at Jack Doyle's Olympic Auditorium unless one of those pesky substitutes intervenes. No less a personage than Bert Colima, upholstered mitt artist from the wide-awake fanbourg of Whittier, will take on Mars Walcott Langford (same name of Sam's, but oh, so different,) for a ten-round assault, with malice prepense glittering in both their eyes. Walcott (a gemmen of color,) and Colima, have measured gloves on two occasions, the Senegambian winning on a foul, and Whittier's darling being awarded a verdict—so the count is even steven. In Tuesday's brawl, Bert will center his efforts in giving the lie to his ribbers that he is getting very much "Rid" Broad in his underpinnings. He openly declares that he never thinks of doddered legs when he sings that famous song, "And That's My Weakness Now."

Standing over him while working at the Main Street Athletic Club, is that hard-boiled duenna, "Dutch" Meyers (known as the one who never takes a chance,) and "Dutch" is rumbling, "Just watch Bert this time." As for Marcus Langford, he has been tough tomatoes ever since he beat "Tuffy" Griffith in the semi-wind-up of the Hudkins-Walker Chicago scrap. Black Hollywood will be on hand to see one of their pet, who will be tendered a banquet at the famous Apex Club on Ebony Broadway in case he shoots a Jacob's ladder under Whittier's gift to the boxing world. A packed house is expected to witness what promises to be a behemoth of a struggle.

Jack Grace, famous globe trotter and undoubtedly the best posted man in the world today on Fistiana's diary, grows eloquent every time he slants back to the marvelous two bouts between Abe Attell and Owen Moran in San Francisco many years ago. In all his wide experience, Grace declares he has never seen two clever set-tos and better exhibitions of the Marquis of Queensberry rules. The first clash as Jack remembers it, came off in 1908 and was refereed by Jim Jeffries. One hour before the frazas Owen toted about a pound of superfluous flesh. In a maddened desire to take it off he stretched the scales until he almost fell exhausted, but he beat Shylock's portion and scaled in O.K.

Abie had an awning shade the better of it until about the twelfth round—then Moran got his bearings, and from that time to the last round, evened matters, although Grace thinks to this day that Owen had the advantage. Again they met—this time in 1909—in a scheduled twenty-three-round tilt. Grace trained Moran at San Rafael. The battle was a crackerjack. The foxy Attell seemed to be able to elude Moran's straight lefts, at times they threw their arms aside and tore into each other, slugging away for dear life, toe to toe. Grace declares it was the cleverest give-and-take battle he had ever seen and was worth walking miles for ere. Both bouts occupy a sweet place in his memory.

Morrie Cohan, who is Fistiana's gift to Pasadena, has always boasted with full bellows, that his four-year promotional twist at the boxing game in our dear suburb has been singularly free from objectionable features of any kind. However, some malicious imp jumped into the breach about a week or so ago and when the melee was over, the script looked as if a maddened bull had charged into a Y.W.C.A. sanctum and spread the dear sisters all over the spotless floor. In the luckless moment twelve amazons from the Lone Star State sallied up to the ticket window and bought a row of seats next the ring. In another luckless moment Steve Nyland, the "dis-dem-dere" referee, happened to officiate inside the iron posts.

In a final luckless moment, Steve old boy, gave a decision that didn't please the twelve Hoover votes from Texas, and as he jauntily jumped over the ropes, the hundred of Texas's fair daughters set loose a "Dutch" Myers lefts clear from her high heels that landed like a Sunday, on Nyland's mush. Mrs. Nyland vows she wouldn't play the innocent bystander," so she did a leaping tuna onto her dear hubby's assailant. History here grows strangely warped, for some one beat Mrs. Nyland to the punch by the fractional part of a second, and a Texas daughter gets the credit.

Then came the "slaughter of the innocents" with shoes of bobbed hair flying at a tangent to every point of a crazed compass. Morrie Cohan called on one of his cops to do the Achilles, but he snapped back, "What in the hell do you want me to jump into that seething furnace for?" The arena's log for that night reads as follows: "Mrs. Nyland—a mouse under one eye and part of a frog under the other. Papa Nyland—a cushion punctured coco and several missing gold-filled molars—Pasadena's fair name besmirched by twelve female left-handed Democrats from the mighty Lone Star State, and Morrie Cohan rid of insurance." "Hell hath no fury like a female fan under a bum decision."

Paul Mullen will spread the goods now. He has just acquired the "Tulsa Thunderbolt" Bob Dawson, champion of the Southwest, a formidable heavyweight that has never been licked. Bob tips the beam at about 195 pounds and stands six foot three. Paul has selected Bob's training camp in the Arroyo Seco Canyon, and will put his charges under a hard grind at once. Dawson is ready to meet and heavyweight on the Coast and will be in trim for ring action in a short time.

Lee Houck, a sure-fire lightweight around Los Angeles some few years ago, was a visitor at the Manhattan and Main Street last Tuesday. Lee is now in the movies in the technical department. He was on the lookout for a pair of good scrappers to play parts in a new talkie production called "Speak Easies," featuring Paul Page, a well-known New York stage actor.

CHICAGO NEGRO IS FOE AGAIN

Rivals Meet for Third Time in Feature Bout

Popular Mexican After New Fortune in Ring

Sullivan to Battle Evans in Semi-Wind-up

BY KAY OWE

Bert Colima, maker of one fortune in the ring, takes his first step Tuesday night at the Olympic to try to make another one. His first earnings have been swept away and he has never been able to save since then. The Mexican, who has fought more than 100 main events for Promoter Jack Doyle in ten years, hopes to make 1929 his biggest year.

"I'm going to try to make $100,000 this year," says the Mexican idol.

Colima is slated to box Wolcott Langford, the hard-socking negro from Chicago. This is the third meeting. Langford was declared winner on a foul once and Colima took a kayo decision at Tia Juana in a fight filled with knockdowns and a double knockout.

TWO CHOICES

"There are two men I want to fight this year," Colima said. "They are Mickey Walker and Ace Hudkins. I've never thought either could beat me under fair circumstances. Walker took advantage of a cut over one of my eyes to win. Hudkins made me make 150 pounds and keep down for two days. Ace also used the illegal kidney punch."

Colima has been up and down many times as a fighter. But he has held a strange grip on the fight fans of Los Angeles. He has yet failed to pack the gallery sections with his country men.

The greatest tribute to Colima is that Mexican mothers often take their entire families of small children to see him fight. To the people of Little Mexico, Colima is an idol they have held up to their children as an example.

There has always been sentiment and color around Bert. He is a strange character. As a fighter he has disputed almost every fault laid at his door.

DISPROVES CRITICS

They said he couldn't take a punch in the stomach. Yet Colima has taken them buried to the elbows. They said his jaw was glassed. But he comes back and seems to be cast iron. They said he lacked a heart. One can name fifty fights in which Colima stood terrific punishment.

Colima is a superb boxer. He is a sharp-shooter and a hitter. If he had learned the knack of infighting, Bert would have been a champion, most folks believe.

Langford is a fair boxer and a hard hitter. The negro claims that Colima's handlers cheated him out of a knockout at Tia Juana.

"Whaw 'at Mexikin waw colder'n 'an a ice pick, but den dey ring dat bell," says Langford. The round did save Colima from being counted out.

THE PRELIMS

Charley Sullivan and Huerta Evans make a classy looking semi-wind-up for the Colima-Langford bout. They fought a great fight once before. Sullivan was given the decision. The winner may box Kid Francis on the 29th inst. if Earl Mastro isn't ready by that time.

The rest of the card features heavyweights and middles. Young Firpo makes his debut. He hails from Idaho. Firpo draws Marvin Rife as an opponent.

Dynamite Jackson and Walter Hoffman box one of the fours. They weigh 190. The opening bout is between Jack McKnight and Ewell Paul.

WYOMING SCORES WIN

LARAMIE (Wyo.) Jan. 12. (AP)—The Wyoming Cowboys, last year's champions of the eastern division of the Rocky Mountain Conference, opened their conference basketball season last night by defeating Denver University, 31 to 28.

Chats on FISH & GAME

By S. B. MARX GREENE
Former Executive Officer
California Fish and Game Commission

(Mr. Greene's articles will appear weekly in this paper. He will answer questions on any fish and game topic. Address him care of Sports Editor, this paper. The reply will be either direct or in this column.)

SARDINE SUPPLY

One of the most interesting phases of conservation work is the question of the continuance of the supply of any given species of birds, animals, or fish, and the steps which should be taken to insure that the supply is not depleted.

My remarks this week are directed particularly to commercial varieties of fish, but I believe the subject is of interest alike to sportsmen, commercial fishing interests and the people of the State at large.

It is a commonly accepted idea, and seems to be the law of nature, that a given species in its natural state reproduces itself in sufficient quantities to offset the ravages of nature caused either by the elements or by the predatory instincts of other species inhabiting the same localities. Nature, however, cannot always extend the reproduction theory sufficiently to offset the extra amount which is taken by man unless if is aided in its operations by other factors.

THE EARLY DAYS

To be specific—fish cannery men who have been in the business for years have recently told me the following interesting story. Many years ago when the sardine industry first commenced in Southern California it was a difficult matter to catch sufficient sardines to keep one or two canneries in operation. It is true that at that time they did not have the large fishing boats or the better class of gear and nets which they now possess, and the fishing operations were carried along in a more or less crude manner.

However, it has been a very noticeable fact that as the barracuda, yellow-tail, albacore and other larger fish have been subjected to overfishing and their abundance decreased, the supply of sardines has been on the continual increase. The reason is simple. These larger fish feed to a very great extent on the sardines, and one fisherman stated as his opinion that all of the sardine canneries in California, which combined take about 200,000 tons of sardines annually, do not take one-fifth of the amount of sardines which is annually eaten by other fish.

It is a well-known fact that the seals alone consume annually thousands of tons of sardines.

Another interesting item is the probable effect of the new mackerel canning industry in California on the supply of sardines. This industry is new this year but probably 25,000 tons of mackerel will be caught and canned. Each of these mackerel, when cleaned for canning is found to contain anywhere from two to six sardines up to three and four inches in length. It is said that a mackerel consumes weekly its own weight in other species of fish. If, therefore, 25,000 tons of mackerel are taken for canning each year, it will probably save many times that amount of sardines.

FARTHER OUT

As the fishing operations on sardines increased during recent years in Southern California and a greater supply has been needed for canning operations, the purse-seine boats have had to go further and further from shore to get an adequate supply. Ocean currents and the migratory characteristics of sardines are no doubt a factor, but it is also the opinion of certain canners in the industry that by the taking of the predatory mackerel, sardines will again become more abundant close to shore and fishing operations made that much more economical.

It will be interesting to make a study to determine how the operations of man affect the supply of a given species as compared with the loss from natural enemies in the sea.

The following are some of the questions asked last week:

Question: Can I obtain a lease on one of the kelp beds bordering our coast?

Answer: Yes, the law permits the Fish and Game Commission to lease such beds in an area not to exceed twelve square miles. It can only be done, however, after advertising for bids.

Q.: What is the law in regard to a "cane gun"?

A.: It is illegal to have one in possession. A "cane gun" is a firearm manufactured so as to look like an ordinary walking stick.

Q.: What protection is given to a person who wishes to cultivate oysters in State waters?

A.: Any one may lay down and plant oysters in any of the bays, rivers or public waters of the State and, thereupon, such person has the ownership of and exclusive rights to take them up and carry them away. The land must be staked or fenced in order to obtain such exclusive use and occupation and a description of the land must be filed in the County Recorder's office. Any other person thereafter entering upon such land is guilty of a misdemeanor. The land must also be posted with a sign not less than six feet in length and one foot in width on which are painted in black letters on white background the words "oyster beds." The law, however, does not apply to tide lands which have been sold to private parties.

Q.: Where is District 24?

A.: It includes all of the waters in that portion of Ras Lakes south of Fin Dome and all waters flowing into that portion of Ras Lakes and all land lying within the drainage area of the waters of the lakes; all waters in all lakes within the Sixty Lake Basin; and all waters flowing into said lakes. It also includes all waters flowing from said lakes in the South Fork of Woodse Creek and all lands lying within the Sixty Lake Basin. The whole district is within the county of Fresno.

I regret to say that it is a most inaccurate description and there has been a great deal of trouble about the boundaries of the district. Efforts have been made to post them, but without great success.

The district is closed to angling because it is used by the State for spawning purposes. An effort should be made at this session of the Legislature to rectify the boundaries.

Q.: What is the law on possession of ducks immediately after the close of the open season? The State law allows ducks to be kept for five days, but the Federal law permits possession for ten days. What I wish to know is whether I can keep ducks ten days or only five days.

A.: It is true that Federal regulation No. 4 authorizes possession of lawfully killed ducks for the first ten days next succeeding the open season, but there is a provision in this regulation that no ducks shall be possessed in any State at a time when such State prohibits the possession thereof. Section 626½ of the California Penal Code prohibits the possession of ducks between January 16 and September 30, both dates inclusive, but Section 630a permits the possession during the first five days after the close of the open season of not more than one daily bag limit of ducks which had been killed during the open season. Thus, one person is permitted to have in his possession not more than twenty-five lawfully killed ducks during the period from January 16 to midnight on January 20.

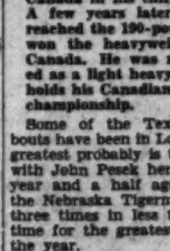
JONES OUT TO CAPTURE TITLE

Lanky Paul Campaigning for Match With Champion

Texas Matman in Best Shape of Wrestling Career

Hook-Scissors King Builds Up Weight to 208

Paul Jones, who tamed Dick Daviscourt, the rough, man-mauling Kansan, in a finish mat battle at the Olympic last Wednesday night, stated yesterday he is just starting on the biggest year of wrestling he has ever had since he took up the game as a profession about six years ago.



PAUL JONES

Several months ago Jones was ready to retire from the game. Today his chances of being the next world's wrestling champion are considered on a par with those of several of the outstanding stars of the country, according to mat experts who watched him dispose of the powerful Kansan.

The Texan has already started on one of the toughest training grinds he has ever scheduled in the hopes of being the one to land the match with "Dynamite" Gus Sonnenberg, the new mat king of the world, when the latter defends his title here next month.

Jones is only 26 years of age, but in the ten years that he has been on the mat, both as an amateur and as a pro, he has learned enough about the game to rate as a veteran.

Jones started his wrestling career in 1918 while going to school in Lincoln, Neb. He weighed 135 pounds at the time. Before he graduated from high school, four years later, he had reached the middleweight class, but he never lost a match in all that time.

When Jones started out as a professional he was heavy enough to land in the light-heavyweight division. He won the light-heavyweight title of Canada in his third pro match. A few years later, when he reached the 190-pound mark, he won the heavyweight title of Canada. He was never defeated as a light heavy, and he still holds his Canadian heavyweight championship.

Some of the Texan's greatest bouts have been in Los Angeles. His greatest probably is the one he had with John Pesek here more than a year and a half ago. He pinned the Nebraska Tigerman two out of three times in less than an hour's time for the greatest mat upset of the year.

For all of his matches here, Jones's weight has always been 200 or less. Last Wednesday, for the first time, it was 208. Within the next week or ten days he hopes to bring it up to 210 or more. With the added weight, and the increased strength and resistance he hopes to develop Jones, mat experts declare, will become the greatest young heavyweight wrestler in the game. Jones, they say, has all the qualifications of a champion, and would prove very popular with the fans in all parts of the country as the titleholder.

Whittier Wins From Caltech

WHITTIER, Jan. 12. (Exclusive) The Whittier College casaba tossers defeated the Caltech team here tonight by 34 to 18 margin. The Poet players came from behind in the last half after trailing the Engineers in the opening chapter. With the score 10 to 9 in favor of Caltech the Poets turned on full steam in the second half and scored 14 points before the Engineers could figure out how to stop them. The Poets gathered in 25 points in the last session to Caltech's 8. The Poet freshmen defeated the Surety Bank team, 18 to 15.

DRESHAR WILL LEAD CARNEGIE TECH TEAM

PITTSBURGH, Jan. 12. (AP)—John Dreshar of Mars, Pa., was appointed captain of the 1929 Carnegie Tech football team at the annual banquet of the squad tonight. Dreshar, who was selected by the coaches, is a guard and also plays center. He is a junior and succeeds Howard Harpster, who was an almost unanimous all-American selection last season.

GILL AND SHERIDAN TO TANGLE

Middleweight Fight Headlines Legion Friday Night

Eddie Gill, a young man who likes his business of punching and "Poison" Hamer, another other fistic gentleman who has the same ideas, will battle in Hollywood fight parlors tonight. These two scrappers have been matched by Manager Tom Gallery and other things being equal their meeting Friday night will slug it out for the right to meet Bert Colima for what amounts to the Coast middleweight championship.

Sheridan has made a big hit with Hollywood fans with his hitting ability in his matches at the Film City Arena and will enter the ring a slight favorite over Mond Eddie. Gill in his last start at Hollywood Stadium thrashed Tom Howe in a bout that is listed as one of the toughest contests staged at the stadium in many months.

Jackie Mandell and Joe Tusillino, two bantamweights, will mix in a six-round semi-wind-up, sponsored by the Legion matchmakers. The two little fellows may prove interesting as they both have a reputation for throwing plenty of gloves wherever they appear.

The special event brings Tusillino, former Pasadena amateur welterweight champion, against Tony Bevo, a local youngster. Tusillino has been in two pro starts at the Hollywood Arena by the knockout route.

Al Andrade and Tommy Gordon, two middleweights, will mix it in a six-round bout that will probably end in a knockout. Both have made short work of Leonard Bennett in their initial start here two weeks ago.

The opening fight on the program finds Frankie Alamillo and Leonard Bennett down to four rounds. They are lightweights.

TEN-MAN TEAM TO BE ADOPTED

NEW YORK, Jan. 12. (Exclusive) John J. McGraw, well-known pilot of the Giants, admitted today that acceptance of the ten-man basketball arrangement was a concession to the growing public frenzy for the game.

"The idea has a number of good points," admitted McGraw, "but with the added power it would give to the offense is not the most appealing."

The Giants' leader confessed that he thinks the slugging game of today and the scientific game of yesterday, he emphatically prefers the latter. "And the customers don't

Baseball Experts Pick Cubs to Cop National Flag; Hornsby Tells of First Experiences in Big League

Addition of Hornsby Makes Chicago Favorite

Cards and Pirates Sure to Finish in Top Four

Phils Rated Most Improved Squad in Circuit

CHICAGO, Jan. 12. (Exclusive)—In making their National League forecasts for 1929 baseball writers throughout the country have picked the Chicago Cubs to win the pennant now that Rogers Hornsby has signed with the North Siders. Most of the sharps put the New York Giants in second place, Pittsburgh third and the St. Louis Cardinals fourth. Another heart-breaking four-cornered race is predicted with Pittsburgh and the Cardinals stronger than last season and the Giant youngsters in better shape for the hard fight ahead.

JOE McCARTHY

St. Louis will be a factor, though Rhem will be missed, the experts say. Hallahan, who hurled sensational ball in the Texas League, ought to make the grade for the Cards this year. The revamped infield of Bottomley, Selph, Gelbert and Frisch is a mixture of brilliant veterans and dashing youngsters. The Cardinal outfield will not change much from last year.

A good deal of favorable mention is accorded the Phillies in the winter prognostications. The Phils, in the opinion of the majority of the sharps, are the most improved team in the race and yet they have had a hard job getting out of the cellar because the Phils's pitchers have not reached their peak as yet.

Over a year ago the Phils had been bolstered in almost every spot, especially in the outfield. The Boston Braves are not rated highly and most sharps think the best the Brooklyn Dodgers will get is sixth place again with the Cincinnati Reds in fifth.

BASEBALL CLUB OWNERS CRY FOR GOOD YOUNG BACKSTOPS

If Fred (Windy) Windsor wants to make himself some money he'll cease his search for the "future heavyweight champion" and start looking for some good young catchers. For good young backstops are the crying need of the baseball club owners these days. It seems that they're just not to be had and anyone who digs up a nifty looking catching prospect is just about in a position to name his own price. Both Marty Krug and Bill Lane were scouting for a young catcher on their trip back East but came back convinced that it was a hopeless task. The Angels have Dallas Warren, a good young prospect, but are not going to let go of either Truck Hannah or Gus Sandberg until they can be sure of obtaining someone just as good as these two vets. For the same reason old "Tham" Agnew is again going to assist Johnny Bassler with the backstopping duties for the Hollywood Stars during the coming season.

THIRD-BASE STARS SHIFTED

Traynor and Bluege to Be Tried at Shortstop in Coming Year by Pirates and Senators

BY GEORGE MORIARTY,
Big League Umpire

(Written exclusively for "The Times" and the North American Newspaper Alliance.)
(Copyright, 1929, by North American Newspaper Alliance.)

NEW YORK, Jan. 12.—If plans materialize, baseball fans will see a rare experiment in the coming major league campaigns. Two great third basemen will be shifted to shortstop. They are Ossie Bluege, Washington, and Pie Traynor, Pittsburgh.

Anything can happen in baseball but this will probably be the first time two established stars have been shifted from third to the varied and whirlwind shortstop territory. the question is: Can it be done successfully?

"PIE" TRAYNOR

At the recent American League meeting Clark Griffith told me that Manager Walter Johnson planned on playing Bluege at short. A few days later, by way of confirmation, Washington traded five players to the Boston Red Sox for Third Baseman Buddy Meyer.

The result of shifting these two players will mean much toward the success or failure of the Washington and Pittsburgh clubs. Traynor faces nothing less than the Herculean task of making the Pittsburgh fans forget the departed Glenn Wright when the latter was at his best, and Bluege must exhibit a standard that will rank with Roger Peckinpaugh's artistic brand when Peckinpaugh and Stanley Harris out-doubleplayed the other major-league keystone partners.

With the top-notch Sparky Adams at second base some of Traynor's troubles can be quickly effaced, but eventually a shortstop learns that it is a case of every man for himself at that dizzy spot. Bluege, originally a shortstop, has a difficult job. Both Traynor and Bluege move fast and with little effort and have rifle-like arms.

The experiment will be watched with unusual interest. As much as I would like to see both players come through, I am a bit doubtful. They have the toughest assignments this year.

When a man plays third base six or seven years he acquires what may be termed third-base feet and habits, which almost defy a making-over process. Do you recall that First Baseman George Kelly of Cincinnati was billed to take Roush's place in center field a few years ago? Kelly, who was fast and had a great arm, failed as a fly chaser because he had first-base characteristics.

And now, strangely enough, as Washington and Pittsburgh are planning these shifts, Cleveland presents a decided contrast. Manager Peckinpaugh, formerly a great shortstop, intends to shift Joe Sewell from shortstop to third. This is an admission that the terrific grind at short has become a bit too exacting for Sewell, who has played the position for eight years. This is the easier switch of the two and it should cut Sewell's difficulties in half. There is not so much ground to cover at third and fewer double plays to complete.

Third base is the bomb section of the diamond because many of the chances are of the explosive order, while at shortstop the player faces a mixed assortment throughout the game.

An apt illustration of the difficulties at shortstop is offered by the shaky and none-too-confident Sam Johnson, ebony-hued player who was unexpectedly asked to play shortstop in an exciting game between two colored teams. A large side bet only added to Sam's conception of shortstop requirements. As he reluctantly shambled out to his position the second baseman heard him talking to himself:

"Feet, don't stumble! Arm, don't miss yo' mark! And brain, please don't fail me!"

Orange Relays to Open Local Track Season

Ushering in the Southern California 1929 track season, the Sixth National Orange Show Relay Carnival at San Bernardino is scheduled for February 16. As this will be the first big meet of the year a record entry list is expected.

Eleven events are carded, eight for high-school athletes and three for junior college and university and college freshmen.

Cups will be awarded to teams taking first, second and third places in the meet. Medals are to be given members of each winning relay team.

The meet is to be held on the San Bernardino Junior College track, which is being reconditioned, and experts expect several meet records to go by the boards.

The list of events follows:

HIGH SCHOOL EVENTS

440-yard relay, four men, open.
440-yard relay, four men, novice.
Medley relay, open.
One-mile relay, four men, open.
One-mile relay, four men, novice.

ROGERS FAILED TO MAKE IMPRESSION ON HUGGINS

"Might Learn to Play Some Day, Kid," Said Cardinal Manager at End of Rajah's First Season

(Rogers Hornsby is one of baseball's famous figures. Next season he will be seen in a Chicago Cubs uniform, at second base. His salary, it is said, will exceed $50,000 a year. Hornsby writes here, for the first time, his own story of his remarkable climb from the sandlots to big-league stardom. The story following is the fourth of the series.)

BY ROGERS HORNSBY

(Written exclusively for "The Times" and The North American Newspaper Alliance)
(Copyright, 1929, by The North American Newspaper Alliance)

CHICAGO, Jan. 12.—Only a young ball player with ambition can realize the thrill one gets out of a chance to play in the big leagues.

When the manager of the Dennison club in Texas handed me a railroad ticket and told me I had been sold to the St. Louis Cardinals I was so excited I could not sleep.

ROGERS HORNSBY

My dreams were coming true. I was to go into the big show and perhaps be famous some day like Ty Cobb and Hans Wagner.

It didn't take me any time to pack my things. I was ready for the train hours before it arrived. I never will forget that long ride to St. Louis.

I pictured what it would be like in the big city and in the big league. I wondered if I might have a chance to meet Ty Cobb and some of the other stars. I saw myself getting into the game and perhaps hitting a home run with the bases filled.

I thought about the chance to make big money and wear swell clothes. I figured that maybe some day I could get more than $3000 a season playing ball, and then I could buy a nice little home for my mother and make her proud of me.

I can't say I slept much on my ride to St. Louis. In the first place I wasn't used to sleeping on trains, and in the second place I was too excited. I thought out everything carefully and determined to make good. I wished I was bigger and heavier and older. I weighed only 130—my weight now is 178. It required all the courage I had to prepare myself to join that club of big-leaguers.

SYMPATHY FOR ROOKIES

Miller Huggins, present manager of the New York Yankees, managed the Cadinals then. I wondered what kind of a fellow he would be—if he would be rough with me and call me down if I didn't do everything correctly right from the start.

When I think of all the worrying I did I feel a warm sympathy for anybody going into the big leagues for his first trial. I know just what he is thinking about and how gratifying it is to get a word of encouragement from the manager now and then.

Although I felt shaky in the knees I tried not to show it when I reported to Huggins. I introduced myself. He gave me a quick up-and-down. I thought he showed disappointment and he didn't seem greatly interested. Things were awfully cold. Huggins introduced me to a few of the regular players. They scarcely noticed me.

But I was going to make them notice me before the remaining few weeks of the season were over. Huggins had the trainer get me a uniform. It was miles too big. I felt awfully small and awkward in it. I wished I could fill it.

And then I looked at Huggins and saw what a little fellow he was and how, regardless of that, he had made himself famous as a player. I was a lot taller than he, but I didn't weigh much more.

My first day with the team Huggins sent me to work out at shortstop for a part of the practice. After I had handled a couple of ground balls I forgot my nervousness. I went after everything on each side of me and thought I did surprisingly well. I knew I had a good arm.

"ALL RIGHT," SAID HUG.

"All right, kid, that's enough," said Huggins finally, and that was all he did say. I wished he would say something else, either good or bad about me. But he just seemed to forget I was there.

It was about that way the rest of the season. I got into a few games. I hit the ball pretty well. But no one seemed to notice me. I admit I was discouraged. One day in the hotel lobby in Chicago I overheard a remark by a reporter traveling with us. He was talking with a Chicago reporter.

"We've got a great-looking prospect in a young fellow named Hornsby," he said. That was the first good word I had heard.

When the season ended Huggins came to me.

"Well, kid, you look as if you might learn to play ball some day," he remarked, casually. "I wish you were bigger."

I returned to Texas somewhat discouraged.

BOXING PAYS ILLINOIS STATE OVER $500,000

CHICAGO, Jan. 12. (AP)—Professional boxing has netted the State of Illinois $508,363 since it became legalized in June, 1926, Paul Prehn, chairman of the State Athletic Commission, has announced. More than a million spectators have watched the bouts, and more than 5000 boxers have participated in Illinois rings since that time, Prehn reported.

SHIKAT BEATS BROWNING

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 12. (AP)—Dick Shikat, claimant of the German heavyweight wrestling title, defeated Jim Browning of Los Angeles last night. He used a bar arm lock and body block. The end came after fifty-two minutes of fast milling.

PARAGRAPHS from a Baseball Statistician's SCRAP BOOK by Leo Moriarty

More than twenty years ago Walter McCredie had a player on his pennant-winning Portland ball club named Mitchell. This young man was the home-run king of the Pacific Coast League with a total of six for the season. In recent years players have been known to make more than six homers in a single seven-game series. Bert Ellison batted out ten home runs in one series a few seasons ago.

TONY LAZZERI

Tony Lazzeri of the New York Yankees, while playing in the Coast League in 1925, poled ten times as many home runs as Mitchell was credited with hammering out in 1906.

In the eleven years that Salt Lake was represented in the Pacific Coast League a player from that club led the circuit in home runs eight times. A member of either a Salt Lake or Portland team topped the home-run hitters twelve successive seasons from 1916 to 1927.

Smead Jolley is the third San Francisco player to carry off the home-run honors during the past twenty-five seasons, "Ping" Bodie and "Biff" Schaller were the other two players.

The Coast League's leading home-run hitters for the past twenty-five seasons follow:

Season	Player and club	Total

During the first week of the Pacific Coast League season of 1916, the Salt Lake and Oakland clubs engaged in a nine-inning tilt which lasted two hours and forty-nine minutes. This contest ran more than one hour over the ordinary time limit for nine innings and probably was the slowest game ever played in the circuit. Each club used four pitchers and between them they issued a total of twenty bases on balls.

The New York Yankees for six successive seasons have led all the American League clubs in home runs. The team from the big city has proved the best home-run hitting aggregation for thirteen out of the past fifteen seasons. The Yankees established the league home-run record at 158 in 1927. The team missed that mark by twenty-five in 1928.

The following figures show why the modern game means bigger and better business for manufacturers of baseballs:

One of the most memorable of all major-league ball games was played on October 2, 1908. Addie Joss, pitching for Cleveland, defeated Chicago, 1 to 0. Joss not only shut out Chicago without a hit, but he did not allow one of his opponents to reach first base. Ed Walsh, one of the greatest pitchers of all time, was on the firing line for Chicago and fanned fifteen batsmen and allowed only five Cleveland players to reach first base. Twice "Larruping" Larry Jajoie went out on three strikes.

The California League in 1901 was made up of four clubs, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Oakland and Sacramento. The season started the latter part of March and did not close until December. San Francisco won the pennant with Los Angeles taking second-place honors. Dougherty led the circuit in batting with a .331 mark and only four other players finished above .300. McPartlin, after playing through the eastern league schedule, came to the Coast and chalked up ten victories out of eleven starts.

Babe Ruth has led his league in runs scored for three successive years and has taken the run-scoring honors eight out of the past ten seasons. He set up the American League record for most tallies with 177 in 1921. He scored 163 times last season.

Following are listed the leading run-scorers of the American League for the past twenty-nine seasons:

Wade Killefer, president of the Mission club, established a record for the American League while playing with Washington on August 27, 1910, when in one game he sacrificed four times. Killefer's sacrifice record later was equaled by John J. Barry, Boston, and Ray Chapman, Cleveland. (Cy) Seymour, Cincinnati, and Jake Daubert, Brooklyn, are the National League players credited with sacrificing four times in a single contest.

Venice Swim Stars at Work

The practice season has commenced for the Venice Plunge Swimming Association water polo team. Coach Frank Rivas has arranged for contests with Fullerton High School, the Pacific Coast Club of Long Beach, the Hollywood Athletic Club and other league and non-league rivals.

Rivas wants his team to be in perfect trim for the season's opening matches early in February. The Venetians, who have legitimate designs on the Southern California A.A.U. title, will play in Division A of the league, in company with the Los Angeles and Hollywood Athletic Clubs, the University of Southern California, the Pacific Coast Club and the Pasadena Athletic and Country Club.

One of the early season advantages claimed by Rivas for his polo-ists is a large squad. As many as twenty-five candidates for the team have turned out for the semi-weekly practices. Competition such as this turnout engenders gives Rivas encouragement for his title aspirations.

SKI SLIDE BROTHERS WILL TANGLE TODAY

CHICAGO, Jan. 12. (AP) — The Haugens and the Halls will continue their rivalry on the ski slides tomorrow when the Norge Ski Club of Chicago holds its annual championship meet.

For several years, the Hall brothers of Detroit, Clarence and Carl, have been rivals of the Haugen Brothers, Lars and Anders of Minnesota. They have entered tomorrow's meet.

George Kotlarek, 15-year-old ski-riding phenomenon from Duluth, Minn., also is in the competition.

Two other games are on tap, Fremont traveling out to Garfield, while the Harding Warriors invade Belmont.

BUD NASH

Coach Ross Bowen, Fairfax mentor, has, in the opinion of many, the best team in the circuit and are strong favorites to defeat the Rough Riders. The Fairfax five, although pretty light for a Class A team, makes up in speed what it lacks in weight. The team is practically the same as last year's lightweight line-up. Ray Harris, who holds down one of the forward positions, captained the lightweights last season. Dick Bergner is stationed at the other forward while his brother Hunter Bergner plays center. Gaudio and Capt. Wilton (Red) Morgan start at the guard positions.

Nash's outfit is given a chance to upset the Colonials due to their strong showing against Belmont. During the Christmas vacation, Bud kept the boys together, drilling them three times a week. They also had several practice games, among them being San Pedro High, in the Bay League. The Rough Riders trimmed the Pirates handily.

Capt. Bill Jesse, at center, does most of the shooting for the Rough Riders having copped high honors in almost every game to date. Slutsky, Rostagno and Bilkki handle the forward positions while Lewis (King) Solomon, Sternberg and Peres work at guard.

Belmont enters the Harding fracas favorites over the Warriors but the edge is very slight. Harding was hard hit at the beginning of the season, losing a couple of regulars via the ineligible route. The Warriors have recovered, however, and are in full stride at present and have been pointing for the Fairfax game.

In the other game on tap Coach Irvin Tanner's Fremont cagers are heavy favorites to win from the Garfield quintet. Fremont's team is pretty small but possess some very capable basket shooters. Frealy and Burge are the high scoring artists for the Pathfinders.

Mohrman of Garfield is the outstanding player on the President five. He starred on last year's lightweight team and does most of the shooting this year. If Fremont can bottle him up, the game is as good as won.

TEN-MAN TEAM IDEA CERTAIN TO BE ADOPTED, SAYS M'GRAW

Only those who are familiar with Mr. McGraw's deep and abiding love for the more beautiful and finer things in this life, can appreciate the great emotional travail that has been engendered by his compulsory surrender to a commercialized civilization.

Mr. McGraw feels that in time both the big leagues will be compelled to accept the ten-man proposition. This year the National was agreeable, but the American wasn't. Within three years it will be in the rule books, Mr. McGraw predicts.

CHECKERS

BY JOHN DOUGHERTY

January 13, 1929

Chess and checker headquarters, 912 Union League Building, corner of Second and Hill streets. All chess a d checker players invited to join.

All communications intended for this department should be addressed to John Dougherty, 4026 Dalton avenue, Los Angeles, Cal.

AMONG THE FANS

All checker players in the city, (outside players also especially invited) are requested to meet at the local clubrooms of the Chess and Checker Club next Wednesday evening (January 16) at 7:30 p.m.

The clubrooms are in Room 912, Union League Building. The object of the meeting is to discuss the best way to create a greater interest in the game and the matter of the next State tournament will also probably be discussed.

The local club has large airy rooms and should be supported by the local players. The due are only $12 per year, payable quarterly in advance. There is no initiation fee. Just pay your $3 and you are a member in good standing for three months, then another $3 is due for the next three months, and so on—"just one continuous round of pleasure."

The clubrooms are centrally located, the officers accommodating and congenial, and the members are up to you. Now if you are interested in the game, do your part by joining the club and keeping up your dues. We must not expect others to keep a clubroom going just so we can drop in when the notion strikes us—we should all do our "bit."

It might also be well to have one or two nights a week agreed on when the players would meet in the clubrooms, then one would be reasonably certain to find games on those nights.

Think this over and be on hand next Wednesday evening with whatever suggestions you think would be for the best.

If you want to see excitement,
If you want to feel a thrill,
Come up to our clubrooms,
At the corner of Second and Hill.

There you will see the experts
Playing their favorite game;
Perhaps you're not an expert,
But come up just the same.

There you will meet good fellows
Who will greet you with a smile;
There you will meet the kind of friends
That makes one's life worth while.

L. A. Frank G. Farmer of Glendale and Dana L. Teague of Santa Paula have each sent in $1 for State Association dues.

The Kansas players gathered at Wichita last Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday to hold their State tournament. The result will be available later.

BEARS BOAST HONOR STUDENT IN LINE-UP

BERKELEY, Jan. 12. (Exclusive) For the second successive year the University of California basketball varsity can boast of an honor student on its line-up. Paul "Dutch" Clymer, letter man and guard on the varsity, is a member of Phi Beta Kappa, national scholastic honor society and pioneer fraternity of the United States. Last year Basil Peterson, veteran center, was the squad's Phi Beta representative.

Pasadena $4000 Open Last on Southland Midwinter Golf Card

HAGEN ENTERS BOURNE EVENT

More Than 200 Entrants in Crown City Play

Eighteen-Hole Qualifying Round on Tuesday

Professionals and Ranking Amateurs Compete

Walter Hagen and his internationally famous golfing band, busy at Riviera this week, will ring down the West Coast competitive golf program in the first annual $4000 Pasadena open championship, scheduled for the new Pasadena municipal layout in the Arroyo Seco, next Tuesday and Wednesday.

Arthur K. Bourne and John Eagle, popular Southern California sportsmen, have donated the purse for Pasadena's maiden effort in the line of open golf championships and have also waived entry and gallery fees. With more than 200 leading professional and amateur golfers already enrolled, including Hagen, Leo Diegel, Horton Smith, Bill Mehlhorn, Bobby Cruickshank, Cyril Walker, Tommy Armour, Johnny Rogers and other noted golfers, Pasadena city officials have made arrangements to care for record galleries, expected to witness the two-day golf-fest as guest of Messrs. Bourne and Eagle.

All entrants in the Pasadena championship will qualify eighteen holes next Tuesday. Only the low sixty-four scorers and ties will be permitted to take part in the real thirty - six - hole money drive, Wednesday, the day following. Qualifying scores will not count in the tournament. The winner will receive $1000 at the end of his successful two-lap journey around the championship Pasadena public course. There will be nineteen additional cash prizes, making it possible for one-third of the field to finish in the money.

The Pasadena championship will be open to all professionals and ranking amateurs. Entries may still be field with the Pasadena Chamber of Commerce, Colorado 6136 of direct with Jack Malloy, tournament chief Colorado 6125.

REDLANDS SCORES WIN OVER POMONA CAGERS

REDLANDS, Jan. 12. — Redlands sophomore team romped all over the Pomona sophs in the opening game of the C. B. L. today by a score of 22 to 11. Redlands was in the lead all the way.

Bill Boone was the shining star for the locals for his drive broke up the passing attacks of Pomona and started many for Redlands. Bauer also showed a fine bit of playing for the Terriers.

The line-up:

Pomona.		Redlands.
Charles (1)	F.	Bauer (7)
Waller (6)	F.	Sanders (6)
Cansiner (1)	C.	Krenkler (4)
Wade (1)	G.	Boone (4)
Beckl	G.	Gallette (1)

YOU TAKE ONE AND I'LL TAKE ONE

So say Billy Burke, on the extreme left, and Henry Ciuci, center, as Wirt G. Bowman, president of the Agua Caliente Golf Club, divides the $500 first place purse between the two famous pros who tied for first place in the $1000 Agua Caliente open last week. Bowman is making plans for a $35,000 open next year, the largest golf purse ever offered.

METZGER RECALLS DRAMATIC FINISHES IN GOLF CLASSICS

BY SOL METZGER

Over the long pull of a seventy-two hole journey, such as the United States open golf championship, the shots we longest remember are those tell-tale miracles at or near the finish which, seemingly, decide victory and defeat. In 1927 Tommy Armour's birdie 3 on the last, long, uphill hole at Oakmont that earned him the right to play-off with Harry Cooper the next day stands out as just such a never-to-be-forgotten highlight. And who can forget the last two holes at Olympia Fields last June when Bobby Jones, one stroke down to Johnny Farrell, shot both in birdies only to find that Johnny was a product of the same testing school?

But other shots all along the tolling journey of an open title event loom as of the same import when one views such an affair in retrospect. They have been found to count as heavily in the ultimate score as the final barrages. The latter assume undue importance solely because they come at the end when nerves are taut and excitement at fever heat. Here you imagine that on each flash of mashie blade, each swing of driver, each delicate touch of putter to ball, rest the rich plum of victory. You forget that just this same agony of importance was attached to each and every shot played during the two days of struggle up to this climax.

Winning golf, in other words, is not all finish. There is just as much of a race to be run at each hole preceding the final ones. The contestant has to save his strokes on No. 1 as adroitly and as skillfully as upon No. 72. A careless putt in the beginning will do more to lose a skilled golfer his chances than one at the end, for its effect here is decidedly more damaging. The unfortunate who missed at the start is frequently thrown off his game beyond recovery. All of which is convincing proof that a medal winner must be able to concentrate on every detail of the near 300 shots he plays or his count is too high.

A great many golf championships have been lost on the first few holes. Nervousness at the start, inability to conquer or a throbbing heart that plays havoc with nerves, lack of the power to force the brain to command ere one is warmed to battle has wrecked many a star golfer's hopes. But you don't hear about this side of golf.

Take Bobby Jones, for example on the first hole at Olympia Fields last June when he was paired with Johnny Farrell, the man looked upon as his toughest opponent. Both got off with fine drives and Johnny laid his wood second on the first green. Two magnificent shots placed him in the ideal position on this 530-yard, par 5, No. 1 hole. Johnny knew he would start with a birdie. That gave him confidence. Bobby then played his second; a weak effort that was partly shanked and by dint of fortune came to rest on top of a mound beyond a deep sand trap instead of in it.

It was no neat place to be. A par 5 might result and again it might not. But Jones was able to concentrate upon the task at hand. Instead of figuring this or that catastrophe he took a firm stance, chose an iron and smashed down into the ball. It arose high, dropped short of the pin and came to rest six feet from the flag.

Farrell got his easy birdie 4. So did Bobby, for down went that six-footer. It was a great recovery and also a tough break for Johnny, for to this day it was the one shot of their long battle that prevented Farrell from winning hands down. Instead of having a lead at the start, Farrell was on even terms with the man he had to beat. All that day he was off his game, worried and unsettled. Only by dint of great determination the next day was he able to break down the lead he had given Jones and force him into a play by tying him with his final putt.

DUCK SEASON ENDS TUESDAY

Next Tuesday will result in the last of the hunting seasons of California for the 1928-29 season closing, when after sundown of the 15th inst., duck hunting will be just another thing of the past, it was announced yesterday by Pete Pejerson, hunting and fishing authority of the B. H. Dyas Company stores, Los Angeles, and Hollywood.

With the closing of the season on ducks there will be no other fish or game season for the sportsmen until May 1, when the trout season opens. Steelhead trout fishing is now open in the tidewaters of districts 2 and 3. This includes the mouths of the Ventura and Santa Ynez rivers.

However, it is declared by the other outdoor authorities at Dyas's that plenty of outdoor pastimes remain for the sportsmen who will find time heavy on their hands until the trout season does open. There are such sports as hiking, motoring, camping and winter sports, the Dyas experts point out.

Bill Carlson, manager of boats, camping, beach and winter sports equipment at Dyas's, left yesterday on extended trout tour of the country, both to make purchases and to study outdoor pastimes in other parts of the United States. Carlson's first stop will be at Yosemite, where he will observe and participate in the winter carnival there in view of holding a winter sports carnival somewhere in Southern California during the early part of 1930, sponsored by the B. H. Dyas Company.

Carlson in his buying trip will touch at San Francisco, Chicago, New York and other large eastern cities. At New York he will attend the annual motorboat show. Carlson has planned to be back in Los Angeles some time in February.

HONORS FOR FAIR LOCAL GOLF STARS

Mrs. Pressler, Mrs. Lifur Both Listed in First Ten of National Ranking

What with all-American teams in everything from football to checkers, the all-American reading public is fairly well weary of the subject. Yet Southern California golf fans are rising to acclaim the fact that two of their champion women players have been listed among the first ten ranking feminine golfers of the country.

MRS. HARRY PRESSLER

Mrs. Harry Pressler of the San Gabriel Country Club has been ranked sixth due to her two successive victories in the women's western play, and Mrs. Gregg Lifur of the Riviera Country Club slid under the ropes and landed in tenth place by virtue of her State title and the fact that she qualified in both the western and the national during 1928.

Selections were made by the Metropolitan Golfer, a magazine published and for the most part written in New York. That two far-western women were placed among the first ten is significant of the recognition that is being accorded Southern California as a golfing center.

Leading the list is Glenna Collett, holder of the 1928 national title, who has for several years been a national figure in golf. Maurine Orcott is placed second over Virginia Van Wie because of three outstanding victories in eastern tournaments. Miss Van Wie, who was the runner-up in the national last year, is rated third.

Fourth is Mrs. O. S. Hill, a fairly newcomer to "big-time" golf, but who earned her rating by winning the trans-Mississippi championship in addition to a series of other titles. Virginia Wilson of Chicago is fifth, Mrs. Dorothy Campbell Hurd, seventh, Mrs. Henry Stetson, eighth, and Marian Turpie, ninth.

As the magazine states, the selection of Mrs. Pressler is obvious inasmuch as her ability on the links is conceded without argument by all followers of the sport. Mrs. Lifur wes selected partly for her victory in the California State championship, "a tournament," the magazine remarks, "which is every year becoming increasingly important among the sectional tournaments of the nation," and partly for the "sensational" golf she played over eastern courses last summer.

BEARS, BRUINS TO TANGLE FRIDAY

BERKELEY, Jan. 12. (Exclusive) With the University of California at Los Angeles basketball team to furnish the opposition, California's athletic representatives-at-home are already preparing for the first conference competition here next Friday and Saturday night. The Oakland Auditorium will be the scene of the action. The Golden Bears have appeared strong to date, particularly in their matches with the much reputed University of Kansas quintet.

ARMOUR SETS COURSE MARK TO MAINTAIN LEAD IN OPEN

to qualify for the professional golfers' championship of America. Take it or leave it, but Ed claims the boy will be right up in the money.

MAC SMITH THIRD

Mac Smith, 1928 Los Angeles open champion, is resting easily in third place, after shooting perfect golf, 71-71-142, par figures. Mac will be hard to knock out of that commanding position. Although seven strokes back of Armour, Smith is still a dangerous threat to his brother Scot.

George (Jix) Von Elm came in with 71-73-144 to tie Frank Walsh of Appleton, Wis., who reversed those figures for fourth place. Al Watrous, Detroit professional, had 72-73-145, for fifth place, and Ed Dudley of Hollywood, 74-72-146; Leo Diegel of Agua Caliente, 77-69-146, and Horton Smith of Joplin, Mo., 71-75-146, tied for sixth place.

Diegel, National P.G.A. champion, was one of the three golfers to break par on the course yesterday other than Armour. The other two were Stupple with 33-36-69, and "Lighthorse" Harry Cooper, who finally came to life with 38-35-70.

HAGEN FALTERS

Billy Burke of Port Chester, N. Y., and Bobby Cruickshank, 1927 open champion, registered a pair of 71's yesterday to finish up in the exclusive 148 bracket.

While Armour swept on to new heights, Al Espinosa of Chicago and Walter Hagen of Detroit, who completed his threesome, shuffled off with the also rans. Al, who battled all the way, was out in 36, but took a 41 coming in for a 77. His two-day total is 74-77-151. The "Haig" came back a bit after Friday's disastrous 77, but not enough. His 74 yesterday put him in the same bracket with Espinosa.

Despite the fact that Armour's 67 will stand as a competitive course record at Riviera for some time to come, the hundreds of gallery fans who followed him are still marveling over the fact that Tommy might just as well have had a 63, 64, 65 or 66. He had opportunities for all four scores. Everett Beaver, former president of the Southern California Golf Association, turned to us on the eighteenth green with these words: "You will never see a greater eighteen holes of golf." And the hole-by-hole account will bear that out.

FIRST BIRDIE

Here's the manner in which Tommy did it with Hagen's and Espinosa's scores as a basis for comparison:

Armour was on the long 470-yard first-hole green in two beautifully played strokes and down in two putts for a birdie 4. Hagen also scored a birdie by sinking a ten-foot putt. Espinosa took a 5.

Armour punched two shots straight down the fairway on the second hole to make the green in two and got his par with two putts, as did Hagen and Espinosa.

A three-foot putt which slithered past the cup for a birdie on the third green was the first of a series of such putts that just missed the cup, and cost Armour an all-time record. Hagen started on the down grade on this hole. His second shot found a bunker and he took one over par. All three ran down their two putts.

SECOND BIRDIE

The 345-yard fourth hole, which caused considerable trouble yesterday, was no bugaboo to this trio. All three were on the green in one and took two putts for pars.

Armour got his second birdie by sinking a 30-footer after getting on the 430-yard fifth green in two. The other two took pars.

Armour was well below the pin on the sixth. He missed a 30-foot putt by scant inches. Espinosa played practically the same shot and missed. They took 3's. Hagen, who hooked his tee shot, was partially stymied by a tree, chipped back onto the fairway, and was down in 4.

For the third time Armour missed a birdie by a hairsbreadth. This time on the 400-yard par 4 seventh hole. His twenty-five-foot putt hung on the very edge of the cup. Hagen and Espinosa were satisfied with pars.

OUT IN 33

Tommy played a beautiful iron second on the 390-yard eighth green. His shot was 180 yards and stopped three feet from the pin. Just as Armour, who is very nervous, swung his club to putt, a dog barked, and Tommy's putt rimmed the cup. Hagen again found trouble when he sliced his tee shot onto a steep bank. "The Haig" played a pretty shot, however, and took a 5. Espinosa got his 4.

Coming to the ninth green, Armour laid on iron shot three feet from the pin. Again he missed his putt by a bare inch after Espinosa and Hagen had sunk their putts for 5's. He was out in 33 strokes, two under par.

Armour and Espinosa were on the tenth green in two and down in two putts for par 6's. Hagen took a 5.

Tommy and Espinosa drove the twelfth green. Armour's twenty-foot curly putt was three feet short and he got a 4. Espinosa also got a 4, while Hagen scored a birdie.

HARD-LUCK HOLE

The thirteenth spelled hard luck for Armour, who was on the green in two, but missed another birdie when a 35-foot putt grazed the cup and slid 1½ feet past. Espinosa got a 5 after playing two great shots out of a ditch. Hagen also scored a 4. A wood, an iron, and two putts.

On the short 176-yard fourteenth, Armour laid his tee shot 3 feet from the pin. Espinosa was over, but laid his chip shot dead. Armour sunk his putt for a birdie 2. Hagen and Espinosa took par 3's.

Armour put his ball on the fifteenth green with a long No. 2 iron. He placed a stiff uphill putt alongside the pin to get his par. Espinosa and Hagen also laid tough putts stiff for pars.

Armour was again on the green in 1 on the short 140-yard sixteenth. Tommy's 7-foot putt was dropped for a birdie. Hagen also drove the green and sunk a 6-footer for a birdie 2. Espinosa drove into a trap, was over the green on his explosion, missed coming back, was on the green in 4 and took two putts for a fatal 6.

Tommy chipped pin high on the seventeenth and sunk a ten-foot putt for a birdie. Hagen and Espinosa played safe and took 5s.

With a par for a 66 on the eighteenth, the battlin' Scot was on the green with a wood second. He had a twenty-foot putt for a birdie, but hit it a bit stiff and the ball rolled three feet past the pin. He missed it coming back and took a 5. Score, 33-34—67.

The card:

Par (Out)	544	343	444—35
Armour	444	333	444—33

Plenty of thrills are promised for the final thirty-six holes of play today. The first threesome gets away at 8 o'clock with the first feature threesome, composed of Horton Smith, MacDonald Smith and Charley Seaver to tee off at 9:05. Tommy Armour, Al Watrous and George Von Elm get off at 9:35, while Walter Hagen, T. H. Cotton and Leo Diegel get away at 10:05. The final eighteen holes will start shortly after noon.

Par 71---Just Try and Do It

Only eleven golfers managed to equal or better par figures for the Riviera Country Club's troublesome eighteen holes yesterday. Of that number, only four were able to get under evens, attesting to the difficulty of the truly championship course. The four were Tommy Armour, Leo Diegel, Bob Stupple and Harry Cooper. Their cards:

Par, out	544	343	444—36
Armour	444	333	444—33
Diegel	544	334	444—35
Stupple	543	343	344—33
Cooper	544	343	444—35
Par, in	454	434	354—36—71

Affairs of the Week

By Juana Neal Levy

While in many of the eastern metropolises and even smaller cities June is elected by brides-elect as the season of the year for their weddings, mostly I presume from the fact that June is the month when roses bloom in profusion, still in Southern California where we have roses in evidence all the year round, there isn't any season more popular as a month for weddings.

To-wit, however, a number of popular Los Angeles "brides-to-be" chose Christmas time for their nuptials and there were some real lovely brides during the Yuletide season.

Among them was Miss Helen Jessie Broughall, talented daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John J. Broughall, formerly of Salt Lake City, who chose Saturday, December 22, as the date for her wedding with Stephen Eugene Metcalf, son of Dr. and Mrs. John E. Metcalf of Berkeley. The ceremony took place at 8:30 p.m. in St. John's Church with Dr. George Davidson officiating at the betrothal ceremony at the chancel rail, while Rt. Rev. Bishop William Bertrand Stevens read the marriage service at the altar, which was brightly lighted my myriads of tall cathedral candelabra.

Miss Frances Palmer Tomlinson came down from San Francisco to assist as maid of honor, while other attendants included Miss Eleanor Connell, Mrs. Harrison Willis Watkins, Mrs. Peter James Pierce and Miss Catherine Connell, little Jaimee Lawslie, son of Mr. and Mrs. James Lawshe, carrying the ring, and Nellie Louise Jennings, daughter of Mrs. Nellie Jennings of Glendale, was the dainty flower girl.

Leonard Calvert Bowie served Mr. Metcalf as best man and Baron Stephen de Hospodar, Raymond Hurley, Cornelius Rossner and Harrison Willis Watkins ushered.

The Yuletide motif was stressed in the decorations of the church, great wreaths of English holly and festoons of greens and berries predominating, while tall palms banked a luxuriant arrangement of brilliant scarlet poinsettias near the parapet which was banked in ferns, holly berries and stevia. Tall cathedral candelabra lined the aisles, while the pew posts were topped with bows of broad white satin ribbons. Preceding the ceremony Dr. Rolland Diggle gave a musical program and Mrs. James Peter Pierce, sorority sister of the bride, sang.

Immediately after the ceremony there was a reception at the home of the bride's parents in South Berendo avenue after which Mr. and Mrs. Metcalf left for a wedding trip and after their return will make their home here.

Mrs. Metcalf is an alumnae of The Bishop's School at La Jolla, later going to Stanford where she was graduated with highest honors. Later she attended the University of Lyons, France, where she was also graduated. She is president of the alumnus of the Bishop's School and is affiliated with Alpha Phi Sorority.

Thursday, December 27, was chosen by Miss Muriel Kenealy, attractive daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Francis Kenealy of West Twenty-fourth street, for her wedding with Allan Henderson Turney of Calgary, Can., the ceremony taking place at 4 p.m. at the family home with Rt. Rev. Bishop John J. Cantwell officiating.

Given in marriage by her father the bride was assisted by her two sisters as matron and maid of honor, Mrs. Howard Traunweiser (Helenita Kenealy) and Miss Alicia Kenealy, the former wearing yellow taffeta and carrying an arm shower of Columbia roses, while the latter wore a pale orchid taffeta frock and carried butterfly rosebuds.

Renee Besse of Calgary served Mr. Turney as best man and the ushers were Leighton Dudley and Edward Dillon, cousin of the bride.

A supper for the bridal party and guests followed the ceremony, Mrs. Kenealy receiving her guests in a gown of black Chantilly lace over flesh satin.

Mr. and Mrs. Turney left immediately after the reception for an extended wedding trip and after their return February 1, will make their home in Calgary, where they have a host of friends, as Mrs. Turney has visited there with her sister, Mrs. Traunweiser.

Mrs. Traunweiser came from Calgary to visit with her parents and many friends of the Southland, and also to assist at her sister's wedding.

The same evening in St. John's Church, Miss Helen Faye Rogers, attractive daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Alfred Rogers of 2180 West Twenty-first street, became the bride of Albert Arnold Binney, the ceremony taking place at 8:30 p.m. with Dr. George Davidson officiating. Given in marriage by her father the bride was assisted by Miss Virginia Brown as maid of honor in bouffant frock of yellow chiffon edged in gold and carrying yellow roses, lilies of the valley and maidenhair ferns, while Misses Helen Herzog, Mary Lee Koster, Mary Edna Cates, Catherine Morrison, Mary Stuart and Jean Symington were bridesmaids, all gowned alike in three shades of green chiffon, and carrying yellow roses in a paler shade, while on their heads they all wore maline bands clasped with dainty rhinestone buckles. Alfred Rogers served as best man and James Rogers, John Gray, Thomas Koster, John Hadley, Earl Gardner and Robert Williams were ushers.

A reception at the home of the bride's parents followed the ceremony after which Mr. and Mrs. Kinney left for a motor trip through the north. After February 15 they will be at home to their many friends here at 150 North Van Ness avenue.

Mrs. Binney attended Girls' Collegiate in Glendora and Mills College, while Mr. Binney claims Manitoba University at Winnipeg as his alma mater, and is affiliated there with Zeta Psi Fraternity. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Mc-

Another attractive bride of Christmas week was Miss Elizabeth Wenona Elliot, elder daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Howard Fletcher Elliot (Eva Prewitt) of South Oxford avenue, her marriage to William Herbert Woods Evans, son of the late Mrs. Charles Stephens of London, Eng., taking place in St. John's Church, the ceremony being read by Dr. George Davidson at 8:30 p.m. Friday, December 28.

The church was beautifully decorated with a profusion of white blossoms and ferns and the altar was brilliantly illuminated with tall cathedral candelabra.

Mr. Elliot gave his daughter in marriage and a reception and wedding supper followed at the Elliot home, after which Mr. and Mrs. Evans left for their honeymoon. On their return they will make their home in Ventura.

Miss Millicent Elliot, younger sister of the bride, was maid of honor in frock of orchid tulle and silver bodice, carrying roses and sweet peas to match and wearing a large hat of orchid tulle.

The DETAILS COUNT

THE difference between a piece of jewelry that obtains admiration at a glance and the one which is casually passed by, lies chiefly in the fact that in the admired piece, the details have been worked out. It is our policy both in the remodeling of old jewel pieces and creating the new, to build a very definite standard—not to a price. Upon investigation you will find the best costs but little more than the ordinary.

WEDDING EVENT OF HOLIDAYS

Couple to Reside in Minneapolis

[Lansing Brown]

Mrs. Edwin S. Sater

THE marriage of Miss Dorothy Machomich, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Machomich to Edwin S. Sater of Minneapolis, was solemnized the morning after Christmas Day, the ceremony taking place at the home of the bride's parents in Highland avenue, with Rev. James Leishman of First Presbyterian Church in Pasadena, officiating, in the presence of relatives and a few close friends only.

Mrs. Sater was graduated from University of Southern California and is a member of Pi Beta Phi Sorority, while Mr. Sater claims University of Minnesota as his alma mater, and is affiliated with Phi Delta Chi Fraternity.

After a wedding trip, Mr. and Mrs. Sater will make their future home in Minneapolis.

Diversions of Society

Brown in blue taffeta and Miss Eleanor Stimson in pink taffeta were bridesmaids, carrying roses and sweet peas and wearing small hats of tulle in harmonizing colors.

Douglas Graham of Pasadena served Mr. Evans as best man, while Gerald Grove, an old friend of Mr. Evans from England, now making his home in Hollywood; William McCarthy and Thomas Stobart Elliot were ushers.

Mrs. Evans's mother, formerly Miss Eva Prewitt, was one of the most popular belles of Southern California, and they have a host of friends in Los Angeles, Hollywood and Pasadena.

Mrs. Evans was graduated from Mariborough School and later from the University of California at Los Angeles and is a member of the Kappa Kappa Gamma Sorority, while Mr. Evans was graduated from the Dartmouth Royal Naval Academy in England and has come to make his home in Southern California. He is nephew of A. R. Bishop of Plymouth Boulevard, here.

A wedding of much interest to Southern Californians was that of Saturday, December 29, when at high noon Miss Alice Bunch, daughter of Mrs. William Henry Bunch, formerly of Vincennes, Ind., became the bride of Chaffee Earl, son of the late Edwin Tobias Earl and the late Mrs. William Eric Fowler, the ceremony taking place in the lovely chapel of St John's Church with Dr. George Davidson officiating.

The chapel was decorated with a profusion of ferns and greenery while tall baskets of peach colored blossoms were arranged in the chancel and lighted by cathedral candles.

The bride, given in marriage by her brother, J. Danner Bunch, was assisted by Mrs. Raymond Pilson (Emily Earl,) sister of the bridegroom, as matron of honor in gown of pastel green chiffon with hat to match and carrying peach colored Ophelia rosebuds, while Miss Anne Thompson, cousin of Mr. Earl; Miss Catherine Cuddy, Miss Elizabeth McArthur and Miss Kathleen Fitz were bridesmaids, wearing gowns of peach chiffon with hats to match and carrying peach rosebuds and ferns.

Alban Miley served Mr. Earl as best man, and the ushers included John Bunch, brother of the bride; Raymond Pilson, Laurence Smith and Jarvis Earl.

A wedding breakfast at the Arcady in Wilshire Boulevard followed the ceremony, after which Mr. and Mrs. Earl left for a brief wedding trip and have returned and are at home at the Earl residence, 2421 Wilshire Boulevard.

Later in the year they are planning to leave for the East, where Mr. Earl will complete his studies at Harvard University and Mrs. Earl will continue her study of the violin in Boston, at the New England Conservatory of Music.

Wintering Here

Among the delightful visitors to the Southland this winter is Mrs. John W. Dwight of Washington, D. C., who came out in December for a visit with her mother, Mrs. Emeline Childs, of West Adams street, and sister, Mrs. Frank Silas Hicks. Mrs. Dwight, who will be remembered here as Miss Emily Childs, is domiciled at the Women's Athletic Club in South Flower street and her stay here is indefinite. With Mrs. Hicks, Mrs. Dwight motored down for several days' visit to Palm Springs, returning to Los Angeles Friday morning.

Luncheon Party

In honor of Mrs. Godfrey Holterhoff, who has just come back from an eighteen months' trip abroad, and Mrs. Frank Baldwin of Washington, D. C., who arrived just before Christmas for an extended visit with her sister, Mrs. George P. Griffith of Orchard avenue, Mrs. Russell McDonnell Taylor is entertaining Wednesday afternoon with a luncheon at her home in Berkeley Square.

Those included will be Mrs. Holterhoff, Mrs. Baldwin, Mrs. George P. Griffith, Mrs. Daniel Murphy, Miss Sue Sinnot, Mrs. Ernest Albert Bryant, Mrs. Hancock Banning, Mrs. Joseph Francis Sartori, Mrs. Paul Howard, Mrs. Frederick Smith and Mrs. Secondo Guasti.

Mrs. Taylor has but just returned from a two months' visit in the East, where she went with Mr. Taylor to visit with her son, Clarke Keely, who is a student at Boston Tech and who, having only ten days' holidays, could not come to California for the Yuletide season.

Mrs. Taylor visited in New York and Boston and with Mr. Keely went up to Lake Placid for the winter sports and Christmas festivities.

Announce Betrothal

Announcement of the engagement of Miss Lida Florence Creamer, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Michael Salathiel Creamer of 831 Third avenue, to Franklin Lee Payer was made yesterday afternoon at a tea at the Women's Athletic Club. The tea was given by the Creamers in honor of Mr. Payer's mother, Mrs. Harry Franklin, of Cleveland.

Miss Creamer wore a frock of shell pink moire. She was graduated

Mrs. Ligon Briggs Ard

Mr. and Mrs. Ligon Briggs Ard, whose wedding was an event of December 31 at Mission Inn, Riverside, have returned from their honeymoon and are at home to their friends at 5170 Edgewood Place.

Mrs. Ard was formerly Miss Grace Inman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles T. Inman of 456 South Van Ness avenue, and the announcement of the wedding comes as a great surprise to their many friends. Mrs. Ard attended University of Southern California and is a prominent member of the Junior Ebell while Mr. Ard was graduated from the Naval Academy at Annapolis class of 1913. About twenty-five relatives and intimate friends motored down to Mission Inn for the ceremony and wedding breakfast which followed.

Dance-Buffet Supper

Very successful was the dance and buffet supper given recently at the Sea Breeze Beach Club by the Southern California College Club.

SOUTHERN LUNCHEON HONOREE

Affair Will be Event of Friday

[Witzel studios]

Miss Milton N. Stannard

ONE of the delightful affairs which has come to be an annual event to which many social leaders look forward, will be the southern luncheon given Friday afternoon at the Ambassador, under the direction of the United Daughters of the Confederacy, with a local chapter as hostess, this year being the Woodrow Wilson Chapter, and Mrs. J. William Barnes is general chairman of the afternoon.

Among those who will be especially honored is Mrs. Milton N. Stannard, State president; Mrs. Hughes Garr, recording State secretary; Mrs. F. B. Harrington, State historian, and Mrs. E. F. Scattergood, State registrar. Quite a number of Daughters from other near-by towns are making reservations and will bring guests. Mrs. Nancy Rice Anderson has the entertainment feature in charge and there also will be an all-negro orchestra which will furnish the music, supplying the characteristic southern atmosphere for which these affairs have become famous.

The ballroom and supper rooms were gayly decorated with the red and gold colors of the university, the same color scheme being also carried out in the flowers, which were arranged charmingly throughout the rooms. Entertainment and music were provided by Robert Ball and Harold Grayson with his orchestra.

Miss Silvia Beecher and Leslie Fenton were guests of honor at the affair, to which were bidden Misses Annette Belmont, Susan Duvitt, Doris Van Vine, Mary Bluett, Ruth Lane, Doris Levy, Ruth Gordon, Esther Newman, Carmel McKem, Josephine Munkel, Louise Barnhart, Dorothy Hays, Eliza Howards, Bobbylee Helm, Gladys Hill, Belle Newman, Elsie Stanahan, Manon Morris, Willmetta Wright, Lora Baker, Doris Crook Johnson, Dorothey Moore, Jean Leslie, Cornelia Verplank, Louise Albertson, Margaret McLarnan, Dorothy Hinderer, Frieda Cady, Lucille Taylor, Ruth Melloc, Christine Martin; and Robert Randall, Kenneth Faulkner, Mulvey White, Sam Newman, Jack McFadden, Albert Behrent, Gordon Pace, Rene Belle, Gene Curry, Ralph Flynn, James Hartwell, Hodge Dolle, John Crane, Arthur Nelson, Don Rice, Langdon Scott, Harvey Gray, Howard Horton, Donal Capito, Charles Henchey, Gene Dorsey, Byron Albertson, Bud Drumm, Francis Shellenberger, William Johnson, Stanley Weston, Douglas Miller and William Ivans.

Return From East

Mr. and Mrs. James McCarthy Rounds, whose marriage took place November 21 at St. John's Church, have returned from a trip East, by way of the Panama Canal on the steamship Virginia. They are now in their home at 614 1-4 South Detroit street. Mrs. Rounds, formerly Miss Edna Louise Ruwe, is being entertained with a variety of charming affairs by her many friends. Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Teschke of 1500 Ogden Drive entertained with a reception in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Rounds, and Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Evans, Sunday, December 30. A lovely bridge-luncheon was given by Mrs. George Rourke, at her home, 356 South Rexford Drive, Beverly Hills, Wednesday, the 9th inst.; while the home of Mr. and Mrs. Glen Tremaine at 575 North Lillian Way, was the scene of a bridge-dinner Friday, the 11th inst.

At Home

A charming at home was given Saturday, the 5th inst., by Mrs. E. A. Hackett, her daughter, Miss Catherine Hackett, and sons, Edward and Wayne Hackett, for about 300 guests, including friends of Mrs. Hackett and the three younger members of the family. In the evening a dinner party was given by Mrs. Hackett for those assisting at the afternoon affair.

Miss Martha Hackett, Mrs. Hackett's stepdaughter, a missionary on leave of absence from China, was one of the guests.

The living-room was decorated in spring flowers, roses and greenery, the hall in the holiday colors, and the dining-room appointments in a color scheme of green and white. Those assisting Mrs. Hackett were: Dr. and Mrs. Herbert Booth Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Fred London, Dr. and Mrs. E. F. Boyd, Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Evans, Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Nott, Mrs. H. T. Patterson, Mrs. Murray Harris, Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Meyer, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Merrill, Miss Martha Hackett, Miss Dorothy Trask, Miss Frances Moore, Miss Margaret McGarry, Miss Mary Alice Johnson, Miss Katherine Schell, Mrs. Charles W. Evans, Mr. and Mrs. Howell Dyson, and the Messrs. Edmond Miner, Robert G. Freeman, Paul Newell and John Edward Johnson.

Dinner-Dance

One of the delightful dinner-dances of the winter season was given in honor of Mrs. O. G. Singer by Mrs. Minnie L. Leonard of 1743 West Ninth street, recently, at the Roosevelt Hotel in Hollywood.

Guests of the evening included: Mr. and Mrs. John Gates, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. William Traig, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Burke, Mr. and Mrs. Louis Johnson, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Rice, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Dunnigan, Mr. and Mrs. G. C. Waters and Henry S. Woolner.

Burks-Mulford

The marriage of Miss Andrea Burks, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Dana Burks of Los Angeles and Palm Springs, to John Willits Mulford of Detroit, was solemnized Saturday the 4th inst., at the Desert Inn, Palm Springs. The reception room of the inn, reserved for the ceremony, was beautifully decorated with roses and potted palms.

Miss Virginia Burks was maid of honor, Mrs. Charles H. Parks of Palo Alto, matron of honor, and Miss Dorothy Burks, bridesmaid. All three are sisters of the bride, and wore moire dresses in pastel shades and carried bouquets of roses and sweet peas.

Frederick Hart of Detroit was best man, and the ushers were Frederick Colby of Detroit, John Jenness Newcomb of Detroit, James Oxnard of New York, and Jesse C. Burks of Long Beach.

A reception and dinner followed the ceremony. After a four months' honeymoon tour Mr. and Mrs. Mulford will make their home in Detroit, where the former is prominent in the publishing business.

Phi Sigma Sigma Betrothals

The announcement of the engagement of Miss Dorothy Grace Yanow to Dr. Gilbert B. Tepper of Chicago, made Sunday afternoon, the 6th inst., at a tea dansant given at the home of Miss Gladys Mallinson by the alumni association, came as a complete surprise to the members and friends of Phi Sigma Sigma Sorority. The betrothal was announced when a fifteen-pound basket of candy arrived at the affair.

Miss Yanow is president of the sorority, and returned Sunday morning from the fifteenth annual convention of Phi Sigma Sigma at Pittsburgh. Dr. Tepper was graduated from the University of Illinois and was a physician in Chisago. The engagement was announced to eastern friends as Miss Yahow stopped in Chicago on her way back from the convention.

The romance began while Dr. Tepper was serving his interneship here in Los Angeles. The wedding will take place in June, and after a wedding trip, Dr. Tepper will return to Los Angeles with the bride to make their home here.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Neworth announced the engagement of their daughter, Sylvia Selma, to Samuel Horwitz, the 1st inst., Miss Neworth was a student of the University of California in Los Angeles, and a member of Phi Sigma Sigma Sorority. The wedding will take place in September.

At the Maryland

Miss Helen Douglas Robinson of Washington, D. C., daughter of Theodore Douglas Robinson, assistant Secretary of the Navy, is enjoying several weeks at the Hotel Maryland in Pasadena. Miss Robinson will be extensively entertained by local friends during her visit. Her brother, Douglas Robinson, is staying at the Pasadena Athletic and Country Club.

Friends Entertain

Many delightful affairs are being given in honor of Miss Carrie Belle Janes, principal of the Misses Janes' School at 6541 Hollywood Boulevard, and Miss Mary Grace Janes, who recently returned from a four months' European trip. Miss Eleanor B. Hill of Observatory avenue gave a luncheon at the Pig 'n Whistle, followed by a theater party, Sunday, the 6th inst., the Misses Janes were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. John Nelson of Hollywood at a welcome home dinner party. Mr. and Mrs. Charles Owen will entertain in their honor at their home in Beverly Hills next week.

Dinner-Dance Club

Members of the Terrace Club will hold their formal opening dance the 18th inst., at 8 p.m. in the new Terrace Room of the Beverly Hills Hotel. The newly organized club will meet fortnightly for dinner and dancing, and will be limited to 300 members. It is being sponsored by the following patrons and patronesses: Mr. and Mrs. John G. Blystone, Mr. and Mrs. Theodore R. Cadwalader, Mr. and Mrs. George B. Hull, Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Mullen, Mr and Mrs Guy G. Woodin, Mr. and Mrs. Eugene D. Bottler, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Raymond S. Elliott, Mr. and Mrs Frank B. Matthiessen, Mr. and Mrs. John R. Scantlin and Mrs. Ruth Mattinson.

Fete Bride-elect

Mrs. Eleanor Lamb Rogers and Miss Lucille Nichols were co-hostesses at a smart bridge-luncheon Wednesday honoring Miss Dolores Whiffen, who is to become the bride of William Wallace Baxter the latter part of the month. The luncheon was held at the home of Mrs. Rogers's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas R. Lamb in Beverly Hills.

Guests invited include Mrs. Clarold Magenheimer, Miss Virginia Laswell, Miss Mayre Benninger, Miss Zella Ingreham, Mrs. Charlton Ames, Miss Louise Crabtree, Miss Helen Heath, Mrs. Thomas Cannon, Mrs. Frank Forbes, Mrs. Lee Bering and Mrs. Howard Hayden.

Another delightful affair will be given for Miss Whiffen, Wednesday, by Mrs. Garold Magenheimer at her home in the Andalusia Apartments, Hollywood. Later in the month, Miss May Seagraves of Santa Monica, will entertain for the bride-elect with a bridge-luncheon.

The marriage of Miss Whiffen and Mr. Baxter is to take place shortly at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Calvin U. Whiffen, in Santa Monica. The ceremony will be very quietly celebrated, with only the two immediate families present. There will be no attendants, owing to its informality. Miss Whiffen is a Marlborough girl, while Mr. Baxter, who is the son of Mrs. Merrill Clancy of Brentwood, attended the University of Chicago.

Church Ceremony

Very charming was the wedding of Miss Marian Vinciont, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Vinciont, who became the bride of Antoine Massimino of Hollywood last week in St. Peter's Church. Members of the two families and a few intimate friends were present at the ceremony. The bride, lovely in a gown of lace with veil of tulle fastened by a coronet, carried a bouquet of small yellow rose buds and lilies of the valley. She was given in marriage by her father.

She was assisted by Miss Lina Massimino as maid of honor and Miss Mary Tarino and Miss Catherine Lupini, bridesmaids. Victor Lupini was best man, and Secondino Aglietti and Bernard Massimino, ushers. Roman Massimino was ring bearer, with little Yvonne Belleverge and Mamie Cherio, flower girls.

Following the ceremony a wedding breakfast was served to 100 guests at the Cafe de France.

Theater Party

Entertaining Thursday evening Mr. and Mrs. Horace Moorehead of Hollywood were hosts to several friends at a dinner and theater party, honoring Miss Thelma Jordan of Washington, D. C. The dinner was given at the Nikabob, and was a delightful affair. The table was beautifully decorated with white and yellow roses, and the guests were Misses Geraldine Murfee, Norma Griswold, Pauline Cameron, and Messrs. H. Louis Perrot, Ralph Conoley and James H. Harvey.

Honors Artist

Mrs. Jack Zeiter of 6516 Barton avenue, gave a luncheon yesterday at the Hollywood Roosevelt Hotel, in honor of Miss Lillian Dayton, who recently won the Henry Huntington art prize and has done portraits of several prominent people of Los Angeles. Mrs. Zeiter is planning a number of afternoon teas, honoring Miss Dayton.

At the Beach

A midwinter open-air swimming party was given Sunday, the 6th inst., by Mr. and Mrs. Charles Underwood of Hollywood, at the El Verde Lodge in Bouquet Canyon. Supper was served, after the swim, before the open fireplace of the lounge-room of the lodge. Dancing followed. The guests were: Messrs. and Mmes. Leon Burgess, Lewis Crestfall, Nelson Shumaker, Daniel J. Kirkham; Misses Florette Sherwood, Joyce Brooks, Jean Morgan, Angela Irving and Charlotte Kellogg and Messrs. George L. Hempstead, Carlton Winterbottom, Clyde Mayfair, Edgar Mackay and Victor Boyd.

Luncheon Party

Miss Gwendoline Ellsworth was hostess last week at a luncheon at the Nikabob, in honor of Miss Katherine Merrill. The guests were: Miss Julie Paddock, Miss Helen Griffith Cooke, Miss Lucille Maddern, Miss Margaret Paige, Miss Grace Armstrong, Miss Ann Woods and Miss Gertrude McCormack.

Luncheon Bridge

A delightful luncheon and bridge was given by Miss Elsie Craig at the Sea Breeze Beach Club last week, honoring her sister, Miss Roberta Craig of Tempe, Ariz. A large bowl of deep red roses ornamented the table, and novel bridge favors added to the interest of the affair. Those present included: Miss Elizabeth Smith, Miss Elizabeth Steel, Miss Helen Johnston, Miss Helen Brown, Miss Marian Wilson, Miss Castella Fisher, Miss Zella Amman and Miss Estelle Clayton.

Honor Visitors

Capt. and Mrs. Percy O. Holms and little daughter Luli of Guadalajara, Mex., arrived yesterday for a three weeks' visit in Los Angeles. The former is British Consul in the Mexican city, and is coming to help promote the Aztec Art Center as a base for all the United States. The new studio at 672 South Lafayette Park Place is to be the setting for a reception this afternoon honoring the visitors.

Entertains at Tea

Mrs. Frieda Mueller Sterling was hostess last Sunday at an afternoon tea given in the Gaylord in honor of Miss Bathie Stuart of New Zealand, who is passing the winter in California. After showing motion pictures of Maori life, Miss Stuart gave a program of folk songs and dances in native costume. Musical numbers were also given by Miss Erna Cavelle, dramatic soprano, with Mrs. Margaret Wilson Schreiner as accompanist.

Gamma Phi Beta

A bridge benefit was held yesterday afternoon by the Mothers' Club of Gamma Phi Beta in the home of Mrs. R. D. Burnham, 3129 Durand Drive. Fifty tables were arranged. Assisting Mrs. Burnham were Mrs. John Harrah, Mrs. T. L. Berry and Mrs. Louis Schirm.

Mrs. Clarence Boyle will be hostess at a bridge-luncheon for the January meeting of the Los Angeles Alumnae Chapter, the 26th inst., at her home, 746 North Orange Grove avenue. Assisting hostesses will be Miss Hazel Plate, Miss Georgia Money, Miss Verda Luce and Mrs. Schanks.

Mediterranean Trip

Mrs. John E. Shirk, who makes her home for the greater part of the year with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. S. Edward Swayne of Richmond, Ind., at the Hotel Maryland, Pasadena, sailed on the S.S. Adriatic from New York the 10th inst., for a tour of the Mediterranean.

Morning Musicale

Many parties are being arranged to enjoy the fourth morning musicale of the series being given at the Biltmore. The concert will be held Monday morning, the 28th inst. and will present Geraldine Farrar in her first salon recital of the West. The programs are given in the Sala de Oro of the hotel and followed by luncheons. As this is one of the few times Miss Farrar has appeared here, much interest has been created and in addition to the long list of subscribers to the season, many additional groups are being formed to enjoy the event.

Among those who are planning to attend are Mrs. Hancock Banning, Mrs. Arthur Alexander, Mrs. Carrie Jacobs Bond, Mrs. Fred H. Bixby, Mrs. James R. Brem, Mrs. Alphonzo Bell, Mrs. Albert C. Billicke, Mrs. John Bullock, Mrs. B. A. Brennan, Mrs. J. Edgar Brown, Mrs. Ernest Albert Bryant, Mrs. J. W. Connelly, Mrs. Chester Wallace Brown, Mrs. R. D. Shepherd, Mrs. E. E. Dinner Hosts

Mr. and Mrs. Hubert Eaton entertained with a dinner party at their home on Los Feliz Heights Thursday for Mr. and Mrs. P. M. Henry of Kansas City, who are house guests of Mr. and Mrs. Roy Munger of San Marino.

A number of delightful affairs have been planned for them during their stay in California.

Visiting Here

Mrs. H. B. Criswell of Dallas, Tex., is visiting Mrs. Ivy Mae Travis and Mrs. H. H. Grott at their home here. Mrs. Criswell has just finished a tour of California and the Northwest and is soon returning to her southern home.

At Del Monte

A number of prominent Southern Californians have been enjoying a delightful sojourn at Del Monte among them being Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Johnston and Mr. and Mrs. Otto Boos of Hollywood, Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Emery, Mr. and Mrs. George E. Higgins and William Thompson of Pasadena, Norman R. McKee of Glendale, Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Morley of Hollywood, Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Martin and Mr. and Mrs L. M. Willis of Los Angeles.

Junior League Activities

Of much interest to the younger set of Los Angeles and Pasadena is the approaching regional conference of the Junior League, to which both chapters are anticipating taking an active interest, the conference opening February 5 and as this will be the first public appearance of the latter chapter it is the earnest wish and desire of the officers and directors as well as of the conference committee to measure up to their responsibilities as hostesses. There will be meetings and luncheons, as well as many delightful trips arranged for the visitors and as Pasadena is to be hostess to four delegates from each league many plans are being made for making this a banner conference.

The work of the Junior Leagues of the country form a great part in the activities of the younger social set, the country being divided into seven regions, each holding a yearly conference to discuss Junior League matters and solve problems. The West and Honolulu form the seventh region in which there are chapters at Boise City, Honolulu, Los Angeles, Pasadena, Portland, Santa Barbara, Seattle, San Francisco, Spokane and Tacoma.

Each region has its director, assistant director and chairman of arts and interests, Mrs. Horace Van Sicklen of San Francisco being the director of Region 7, with Mrs. C. C. Corse of Tacoma, assistant and Mrs. Horace Gill chairman of arts and interests.

Coming this year as special delegates will be Mrs. Foskett Brown of Nashville, Tenn., the national president of the Associated Junior Leagues of America and Miss Forsyth Patterson of Pittsburgh, field secretary.

The conference will be held in Pasadena while the Los Angeles chapter has invited the delegates to pass Thursday February 7, with them, and after seeing the gift shop on West Sixth street, there will be a luncheon and children's play and later a buffet high tea.

As the Pasadena League is to be the hostess, it has chosen Mrs. Leet Bissell as chairman, assisted by Miss Janet Cristy, Mrs. Herbert Allen and Mrs. Walter Young, while Mrs. Kennedy Hamill is in charge of billeting the delegates assisted by Mrs. Alfred Wright and Mrs. William Hale.

Luncheons and dinners will be under the supervision of Mrs. Francis Baer, assisted by Mrs. William Bucklin and Mrs. John Barber while Mrs. Robert Stephenson assisted by Miss Catherine Ware will direct transportation.

A condensed program of the conference includes meeting the delegates at Glendale February 5, taking them to the Junior League clubroom to register and meet the various hostesses. A luncheon will follow at the Flintridge Club, an open meeting with speakers and a group meeting afterwards. Dinner will follow at the Annandale Club after which there will be a Junior League entertainment and private presentation of a motion picture. Wednesday there will be an open forum meeting at 10 a.m. at the Huntington, with luncheon there followed by a business meeting for voting delegates, and a visit to the Huntington Museum. Miss Averic Allen, president of the Pasadena Junior League, is giving a tea at the Valley Hunt Club, followed by a dinner with hostesses.

Visiting Here

Assistant City Engineer of Minneapolis, Minn., Ellis Dutton and his wife are guests at the home of their son, Roy Dutton here. Last Sunday, Mr. and Mrs. Dutton celebrated their forty-third wedding anniversary and among the guests were Mrs. Hazlett and Benjamin H. Durham, who assisted in the bridal entourage at the wedding and are passing the winter in Southern California.

In the North

Former Senator Frank P. Flint and Mrs. Flint of Flintridge are passing a few days at the Fairmont Hotel in San Francisco before continuing their journey to Seattle from where they will sail for Honolulu aboard the S.S. President Cleveland and at that point join the steamer President Polk, on a tour around the world.

Mr. and Mrs. Allen H. Rountree are other prominent Angelenos who are enjoying a visit in San Francisco registered at the Fairmont while in the northern city.

College Benefit

The Hanna College Club will give a benefit dramatic recital by Zoe Ballard Shively at Barker's Auditorium the 18th inst., the proceeds to be devoted to the scholarship fund. The affair will take place at 2 p.m. and will be followed by numerous tea parties at which members of the club will entertain guests.

Birthday Celebration

An enjoyable birthday celebration featured the bridge luncheon given recently in the Egyptian room of the Sea Breeze Club, Santa Monica when Miss Phyllis Holden entertained a group of friends. A large cake with candles centered the table and dainty corsages marked the covers for Miss Mary Sue Walker, Miss Olivia Redwine, Miss Bernice Kiarquist, Miss Bette Harris, Miss Betty Collier, Miss Constance Maslen, Miss Hazel Schindheim, Miss Annette Padway, Miss Margaret Barker, Miss Muriel Binford and the hostess.

Campus Notes at U.C.L.A.

Many social affairs were given during the holidays by the various campus organizations, including dances, open houses and banquets.

Pi Beta Phi Sorority gave a preinitiation dance at the Pacific Coast Club in honor of the girls who were initiated the following day. A banquet at the Mary Louise Tea Room followed the initiation ceremony, after which the girls celebrated their annual Christmas party at the chapter house. The new members are Miss Naida Owen, Miss Pearl Nemechech, Miss Janet King, Miss Charlotte Angier and Miss Ruby Rence.

A semiformal dance was given by the Delta Tau Delta Fraternity New Year's Eve, at the Westward Ho Country Club, for members and friends. Breakfast was served New Year's morning, with Richard Callahan, president of the organization, presiding.

An early party of the season was a dance sponsored by members of Alpha Chi Omega, at the chapter house, which was decorated in the holiday colors. Programs and favors carried out the Christmas motif.

A benefit bazaar at University of Southern California chapter house of Phi Mu afforded the members of the local chapter and alumnae with a chance to do their bit toward charity during the holidays. The sorority initiated the Misses Louise Langston, Helene Swallow, Grace Heitz and Catherine Minnock and active members were later honorees at a dance given by pledges, Saturday night at the Elks' Club.

A formal dance by pledges of Alpha Gamma Delta was an enjoyable affair at the home of Miss Alice Bohan, cleverly carrying out the Christmas spirit in decorations and favors.

A charming affair of recent date was the banquet in honor of the fathers and pledges and members of Alpha Omicron Pi. The centerpiece was a tiny, gaily illumined Christmas tree. Gifts later were distributed to the guests.

Pledges of Sigma Kappa Sorority presented the active members with a dance at the home of Miss Alice Witcher, Beverly Hills. Miss Sallie Jane Wolcott assisted.

Coming as a surprise were announcements of weddings. Beta Theta Pi Fraternity announced that one of its alumni members, Stanley MacCaulay, was married New Year's Day to Miss Virginia Adkins, also an alumna of the University.

Miss Marjorie Shupe, a pledge of Chi Omega, was wed December 17 to Jerry Lowe.

All-Souls Church in Alhambra was the scene of the wedding of Miss Gwendolyn McNeil of Sigma Kappa Sorority to James Reese of Kappa Sigma Fraternity.

One of the pleasant surprises was

Mrs. Douglas C. Mackenzie

The marriage of Miss Ruth Lorraine Rowlands, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Rowlands of Long Beach, to Douglas C. Mackenzie, was solemnized December 28, the ceremony being performed in the Little Church of the Flowers, Glendale, by Rev. S. G. Livingston of South Pasadena. Miss Velma Devins of Long Beach was maid of honor and little Genevieve Gladys McCan, niece of the bride, flower girl. Oliver M. Hooppr served as best man and Frank Ridley of Phoenix, and Lee Hooper of this city ushered.

After a honeymoon in the north Mr. and Mrs. Mackenzie will return to Pasadena, where they will make their home.

Mr. Mackenzie, son of Mrs. James Z. Ferguson of Pasadena, is an alumnus of Bucknell University, Pennsylvania, and California Institute of Technology, class of 1922. He is a member of Sigma Alpha Epsilon Fraternity.

Chi Omega announces the engagement of Miss Elinor Martin to Louis Mudge. Mr. Mudge, an alumnus of the University of Southern California, is affiliated with Sigma Alpha Epsilon.

A formal buffet dance at the home of Jocelyn Baker, brought together members of Kappa Alpha Theta. The house was attractively decorated in seasonal colors and flowers.

Southern Luncheon

The southern luncheon which has come to be an annual event to which many social leaders look forward with happy anticipation and which this year is to be next Friday instead of Saturday, as heretofore, promises to break all records for attendance. The luncheon is given under the direction of the United Daughters of the Confederacy, a local chapter being hostess in turn. The Woodrow Wilson chapter is hostess this year, Mrs. J. William Barnes, president, chairman of all committees.

Each year there are more and more of the northern admirers of Gen. Lee and Gen. Jackson, in whose honor these luncheons are given, in attendance, and this year the number of distinguished visitors from north and south is expected to be greater than ever before, as well as several hundred of the United Daughters of the Confederacy.

Among the State officials of the organization will be Mrs. M. L. Stannard, State president; Mrs. Hughes Garr, recording secretary; Mrs. F. B. Harrington, State historian, and Mrs. E. F. Scattergood, State registrar. Quite a number of Daughters from other near-by towns are making reservations and will bring friends.

Mrs. Nancy Rice Anderson, dramatic artist, has the entertainment feature in hand and there will be an all-negro orchestra furnishing the music supplying the characteristic southern atmosphere for which these occasions have become noted.

Betrothal Luncheon

At a luncheon party given in the Kappa Alpha Theta lodge at the University of Minnesota, Miss Aileen M. Powers, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George A. Powers of Minneapolis, announced her engagement to Harold W. Dougher of Los Angeles. The wedding will be solemnized in Minneapolis in June, and following a wedding journey they will make their home in Los Angeles.

Miss Powers, after two years at the University of Minnesota, affiliated with the local chapter of Kappa Alpha Theta at the University of Southern California. She is also a member of Zeta Phi Eta, national dramatic sorority, and took part in numerous student-play productions here. Mr. Dougher graduated from University of Southern California, '28, is a member of Gamma Epsilon and Alpha Kappa Psi fraternities, and was prominent in student activities.

During her student days at the university, Miss Powers was chosen for the leading feminine role in the motion-picture production, written and filmed on the Minnesota campus.

Mr. Dougher is at present agency supervisor for the John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Company for Southern California.

ATTRACTIVE SOUTHLAND VISITOR

Returns to New York in February

Mrs. Glen N. W. McNaughton

AMONG the attractive visitors to the Southland this winter is Mrs. Glen N. W. McNaughton of New York City who, with their young son Lane McNaughton, is visiting at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. John W. Lane, 1926 Washington Way, Venice.

Mrs. McNaughton and her son left New York City aboard the Dixie, December 18, coming to Los Angeles by way of New Orleans, and are planning to leave for their eastern home early in February. As Miss Evelyn Lane, Mrs. McNaughton had a host of friends here where she was active in musical as well as social circles.

Her marriage to the prominent New York attorney took place in St. Paul, Minn, five and a half years ago.

Gaggs-Smith

Miss Alice Kathleen Gaggs, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Carter Gaggs of South Normandie, formerly of Chicago and Cleveland, was united in marriage to Dr. Charles Adna Smith, son of Mrs. Charles Adna Smith and the late Dr. Charles Adna Smith of Texarkana, Tex., in the Church of Our Savior, San Gabriel, the 2nd inst.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. Dean William Carson Shaw at 8:30 p.m. before several hundred guests.

The bride was lovely in her bridal gown of ivory satin with a court train hanging from her shoulders. Her veil, an heirloom of rose point antique with cap from which draped rose point lace and tulle, caught with orange blossoms. She carried a shower bouquet of bride's roses, gardenias and lilies of the valley tied with streamers of tulle.

Miss Mabel Singer of Sierra Madre in a Nile green bouffant tulle gown with a wreath of silver leaves in her hair, and carrying a sheaf of pink radiance roses, with Mrs. Harold Urkuhart Gaggs in yellow satin bouffant gown with silver wreath in her hair and carrying a sheaf of yellow roses and orchid larkspur, were attendants.

Little Virginia Gaggs (niece of the bride) and Geraldine Lackey in pink chiffon frocks with tiny wreaths of leaves in their hair, were flower girls. They carried baskets of Cecile Brunner roses hung from their arms with large bows of tulle and scattered roses in the path of the bridal party.

Harold Urquhart Gaggs, brother of the bride, was best man, and Messrs. Alfred Gaggs, George Parker Ryan and Lloyd Brown ushered.

Preceding the ceremony, Archie Ruggles sang, and Mr. Richardson was at the organ playing the wedding march.

The church was beautifully decorated in Christmas greens and poinsettias while the altar was banked in all white flowers and green.

Following the ceremony a reception and buffet wedding supper was served at the home of W. Claude Davis, 41 East Grand View, Sierra Madre.

Assisting in receiving at the home were Mrs. William Carter Gaggs in a creation of Peking blue chiffon trimmed in silver, and Mrs. Charles Adna Smith in a cream lace imported gown

Out-of-town guests here for the wedding were Miss Dorothy Ewing of Spokane, Mrs. John Edmond Ryley of Jackson, Tenn., and Mrs. Edward Gibson Gibbons of Memphis, Tenn.

The bridal trip includes a visit to New Orleans, San Antonio and other southern cities before Dr. and Mrs. Smith reach their new home in Texarkana.

Church Ceremony

The marriage of Miss Ida E. Archey, daughter of Mrs. Ida L. Archey, to Mr. John E. Allenbach, son of John S. Allenbach, was solemnized in St. Paul's Cathedral on December 28.

The bride was lovely in a gown of taffeta and tulle, with dotted tulle trim, and carried a shower bouquet of roses and lilies of the valley.

Mrs. Arthur E. Archey assisted as matron of honor and wore a green taffeta frock. Miss Lois Goodman, Miss Edith Stienman, Miss Kathleen Westbrook and Miss Margaret Walker in pastel shades of taffeta and carrying orchid and pink sweet peas, were bridesmaids. Little Mildred Manor was flower girl and Buddy Wadsworth was ring bearer.

Franklin Jacobson served as best man, and Walton Blessingham, Raymond Archey, Morton Rose and David Rambo ushered.

After a honeymoon in Santa Barbara, Mr. and Mrs. Allenbach will make their home in South Pasadena.

Bridge Supper

Mr. and Mrs. Homer Joseph Specht entertained with a bridge party and supper at their new Spanish bungalow home in Pere Drive, Beverly Hills, when after the card games a delicious supper was served. Those included were Mr. and Mrs. Rex Price, Mr. and Mrs. Sam Hill, Mr. and Mrs. Wallace Moore, Miss Lottie Cagle, Miss Ruth Short, Joseph Hauser and Christy Specht.

Betrothal Dinner

One of the smart affairs of recent date was the dinner with which Mrs. Alva W. Beach of North Maryland street, Glendale, entertained at the Chevy Chase Golf Club, honoring Miss Angela Copeland, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry T. Copeland of Greenburg, Pa., the occasion serving to announce the betrothal of the honor guest to Walter E. Beach and of Miss Helen Beach to Robert R. Blackburn of Glendale.

The news was told by tiny dolls in the form of place cards bearing the names of the betrothed.

Covers were arranged for fifty guests.

Delightful Affair

Miss Marjorie Howard entertained a coterie of intimate friends Friday evening at her home in Georgina avenue, Santa Monica, the Valentine motif being stressed in the charmingly appointed bridge and dansant. Those included were Miss Wesla Gregg, Miss Aileen Ley, Miss Pauline Wright, Dr. W. R. Wright, Willis Ader, Robert Gramt and Renoids Santa. Bridge honors were captured by Miss Ley and Dr. Wright. Miss Howard returned recently from London, Eng., where she attended college.

Luncheon Bridge

Miss Virginia Tate, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry P. Tate of North Roosevelt avenue, Pasadena, gave an attractively appointed luncheon at the Vista Del Arroyo recently, followed by bridge. The guests, all classmates in the senior class at Westbridge School, and alumnae of the same institution, including Miss Frances Winkler, Miss Marjorie Pattee, Miss Cornelia Fairbanks, Miss Katherine Warren of Honolulu, Miss Betty MacDonald, Miss Frances Coen, Miss Virginia Armstrong, Miss Ruth Hosking, Miss Adrienne Olmstead, Miss Sally Crane, Miss Judith Edwards, Miss Barbara Edwards, Miss Anne Sharp, Miss Mary Ford, Miss Polly Walbeck, Miss Barbara Cheesewright, Miss Margaret Halsted, Miss Marguerite Baker, Miss Mary Olmston, Miss Barbara Davis, Miss Eleanor Egan, Miss Mary Louise Kellogg, Miss Betty Hall, Miss Carol Stevens, Miss Dorothy Spaulding, Miss Nell Barnes, Miss Frances Marriman and the hostess.

Sorority Formal

Members of Kappa Delta Rho Sorority were hostesses at a formal dinner-dance given recently at the Pacific Coast Club at Long Beach, when the guests included Mr. and Mrs. Paul Anderson, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Gillespie, Mr. and Mrs. Mark Barth, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Colf, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Gilbert, Mr. and Mrs. William Layman, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Gutsch, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Winter, Miss Pearl Anderson, Miss Maxine Porter, Miss June Campbell, Miss Elma Davis, Miss Wilma Hershey, Miss Marjorie Bob, Miss Loretta Hogan, Miss Edith Bogich, Miss Marjorie Clark, Miss Helen Reed, Wilbur Kirby, Bud Marsh, Jack Calhoun, William Wallack, Burton McKim, Burton Stevens, Mont McMillan, John Bozinger, George Tivy and Kenneth Cox.

Subdeb Entertains

A delightful affair among the subdeb set was the luncheon with which Miss June Birchard, lovely subdeb daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Birchard, entertained at the Women's Athletic Club. Miss Birchard came home for the holidays from Bishop's School in La Jolla, and among the guests were Miss Audrey Smith, a classmate, and Miss Betty Milliron, Miss Dorothea Pruden, Miss Betty Schofield and Miss Rosemary Parr. After luncheon Miss Birchard took her young guests to a matinee.

Honors Visitor

One of the lovely affairs of recent date was the luncheon with which Mrs. Raymond Huntsberger of South Arden Boulevard enter-bride as maid of honor, while the Misses Bonnie and Bettie Waugh were bridesmaids. They all carried French bouquets of pink sweet peas and roses. Reed Parkin served Mr. Plate as best man and C. W. Butler was bridegroomsman.

The wedding march and incidental music was played very beautifully by Miss Catharine Jackson, harpist. A wedding supper followed the ceremony, after which Mr. and Mrs. Plate left for La Jolla for their honeymoon, lanning to return later and make their home here.

Celebrate Anniversary

Mrs. P. C. Caldwell of Oak Park, Ill., who has passed many winters in Beverly Hills, is a guest of the Beverly Hills Hotel for a month, after which time she plans to leave for the French Riviera by way of the Panama Canal.

Friday evening Mrs. Caldwell entertained members of her family, the occasion celebrating her fortieth wedding anniversary. The day was especially auspicious in that it also was the wedding anniversary of

The prizes at the card games were captured by Mr. Saltsman and Mrs. Nickerson, while that of the best story-teller after supper was awarded Mr. Webber.

Felicitations

Congratulations are being extended Dr. and Mrs. Kenneth Townsend of 1031 North Harper avenue over the arrival December 28 of a tiny son at the Methodist Hospital. Mrs. Townsend, formerly Miss Helen Marie Tobie, is an alumna of University of Southern California, while Dr. Townsend received his degree of medicine at Northwestern University at Evanston, Ill.

Entertain Friends

Mr. and Mrs. James Robert Carmichael of 400 Oak street, San Marino, who recently moved into their new home, took advantage of the holiday season to entertain their many friends at several affairs.

Sunday they held open house and more than 100 guests dropped in. Mrs. Carmichael presided at the tea urns and Mrs. Howard Rathbone assisted her.

A formal housewarming and dance was given New Year's Eve for the younger group, the spacious rooms being artistically decorated with giant poinsettias, holly and mistletoe, and at midnight each guest found noisemakers at his place. A buffet supper was served, followed by a picture of the new home in the making and a new feature reel. Those bidden included Mr. and Mrs.

Going to Honolulu

Mrs. Gladys McDonald Lindley of 927 South Norton avenue will leave the 14th inst. aboard the President Madison for Honolulu, where she will be the house guest of her sister and brother-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Ewald Selph, who make their home in the island city.

Betrothal Announced

Formal announcement of the betrothal of Occidental's one-time Tiger Twister, "Bud" Teachout, and Miss Billie Morrison, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. R. J. Morrison of Santa Monica, was made at the home of the latter Saturday, the 5th inst. As the romance started at Occidental it was fitting that six sorority sisters and six fraternity brothers should be the honor guests. When they entered the dining-room a surprise awaited them, as at each place there was a doll frocked in Elizabethan period holding a parchment scroll on which were written the names of the betrothed.

Those bidden were Miss Vivian Nay, Miss Wanda Arbogast, Miss Frances Nesbitt, Miss Florida Craig, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Sutton, Albert Klein, Harris Hitch, Bronson Buxton and Carlisle Bailey. No date is set as yet for the wedding.

Formal Opening

Hotel Vista Del Arroyo in Pasadena has chosen Wednesday evening, the 16th inst., as the date for its formal opening and ball, a dinner being specially featured.

The Russian motif will be stressed for the after-dinner divertissements in the ballroom, the entertainment to include a celebrated Russian prima donna, Russian music and dancing. Many dinner parties are being arranged preceding the entertainment and ball.

Delightful Outing

An outing of unusual interest was that enjoyed by twenty students at Hollywood School for Girls who, accompanied by Mrs. William Lee Wollette and members of the faculty, motored to Biskra, the new Algerian village on the edge of the desert near Palm Springs. They left the day after New Year's and returned to Hollywood Sunday evening in time for tea.

Dr. Elmora Graham, Miss Sophie Harpe, Miss Eleanor Ginno and Mlle. Durvel of the faculty chaperoned the following group: Miss Katherine Herschel, Miss Barbara Easley, Miss Eileen Dalwig, Miss Elisabeth Shafer, Miss Betty Burton, Miss Sally Kibbey, Miss Nancy Ruff, Miss Helen Schwanee, Miss Berenice Cantrell, Miss Lorraine Larson, Miss Dorothy Kauffman, Miss Betty Miles, Miss Nanette Rosenberg, Miss Betty Sargent, Miss Valentine Black, Miss Nellie Collins, Miss Jan North, Miss Kafwalani McQuire, Miss Marjorie Wright, Miss Helen Daniels and Miss Miriam Flaherty.

Trips to the Salton Sea, the cotton fields and Palm Canyon were enjoyed, and several sketching trips on the desert contributed to the pleasure of the outing.

Silver Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. Louis Evans (Mary Linck) used their silver wedding anniversary as the incentive for an open house with afternoon tea New Year's afternoon and evening at their lovely home in Santa Monica. They were assisted in receiving their guests by their daughters, the Misses Laura Linck and Mary Evans, and son, Louis Evans, Jr., who was home for the holidays from Davis, where he is attending the California State Agricultural College.

Mrs. Paul C. Heydenreich, president of the Matinee Musical Club, and other members in honor of the anniversary presented Mrs. Evans, who is a director of the club, with an exquisite Sterling silver flower basket, engraved "Matinee Musical Club" with the dates, 1904 and 1929.

Gorgeous garden blossoms were used to decorate the rooms with added adornments of holiday suggestions. The Misses Evans presided at the tea table. More than 150 guests attended the open house.

Festival Celebrated

New Year's Eve at Hotel Del Mar was celebrated in festive style. The gayly decorated dining-room was crowded with banquet and smaller tables to accommodate parties large and small. Officers of the California National Guard were present in a party of forty-five and dined and danced merrily. Among those who entertained large parties were Mr. and Mrs. William Taggart, Pasadena; Mr. and Mrs. John Rowe, San Diego; Mr. and Mrs. Luke Kibler, Mr. and Mrs. Harold Clark, Mr. and Mrs. J. J. E. Minot, Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Ellis, Del Mar, whose guests were Dr. and Mrs. John Metcalfe, Alhambra, Mr. and Mrs. Schute, Huntington Beach; Mr. and Mrs. Louis Barber, San Diego; Miss Barbara Walker, J. B. Minor, Los Angeles, and Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Carnahan, Los Angeles, whose guests included Mr. and Mrs. Lee Ravener, Anaheim; Mr. and Mrs. Charles Shoemaker, Hollywood; Mr. and Mrs. Harry McMullin, Mr. and Mrs. Howard Carnahan, Miss Virginia White, Mrs. Frances Osborn, Rath Bush and Bert Hennessey, all of Los Angeles.

Dr. and Mrs. Ralph Hartley of Los Angeles passed the New Year vacation at their home at Del Mar and entertained at Hotel Del Mar on New Year's Eve Dr. and Mrs. J. P. Collins and Dr. and Mrs. Mark Davids of Los Angeles.

Mr. and Mrs. James Ormiston of Denman Island, B. C., annual winter guests at Hotel Del Mar, have arrived for several months. They are accompanied by A. S. Ormiston of Denman Island, B. C., annual winter guests at Hotel Del Mar, to spend several months. They are accompanied by A. S. Ormiston of Kern, Scotland.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Disbrow Baker and Miss Margaret Baker of Pasadena enjoyed several days at Hotel Del Mar recently. Mr. Baker plans to build a summer home at Del Mar.

Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Imler and Mr. and Mrs. Louis Waterfall of Glendale are for a few days at Hotel Del Mar enjoying holiday festivity.

Engagement Announced

The betrothal announcement of Miss Hilda Alice Brooks to Kingsley Nivin was revealed to a group of friends in a very cleverly arranged manner at a bridge-luncheon at the Elite, the 5th inst.

Miss Brooks, a teacher in the Los Angeles city schools for several years, was graduated from the University of California at Los Angeles and has lived in or near Los Angeles most of her life. The New Year's announcement will come as a surprise to her many friends in Southern California. Mr. Nivin is associated with the Texaco Company in Mexico, and met Miss Brooks while she was visiting her sister, Mrs. Ila Brooks McCann, formerly of this city and now living in Mexico City.

Guests at the luncheon were the Misses Mary Ella Brooks, Muriel Bovee, Mildred Umbach, Ruth Irene Wilson, Cathryn Scott, Grace Cameron, Hildra Brandt and Mmes. C. A. Munroe, Dick Morrison, Harry Gilfoy, Reginald Hardy, George Hamlyn and Paul Brooks. After the luncheon bridge was played, the highest score being made by Mrs. C. A. Munroe, to whom a lovely boudoir lamp was presented, after which tea was served. The bride-elect was quizzed as to her future plans but only an intimation of an Easter or late June wedding was indicated.

At Beverly Hills Hotel

Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Mathews of Toronto, Can., and Miss M. P. Eckert, sister of Mrs. Mathews, are again spending the winter at the Beverly Hills Hotel. Mr. Mathews is president of the Mathews Steamship Company of Toronto.

Mrs. Frederick Boger of 5869 Franklin avenue entertained at luncheon Tuesday, the 8th inst. Her guests were Mmes. N. E. Wilson, S. J. McCuen, Clarence O. Miller, A. W. Early and Miss Frances Boger.

Announce Wedding

Mr. and Mrs. A. P. Rosenberg of 513 Rexford Drive, Beverly Hills, announce the marriage of their daughter, Geraldine Phyllis, to Herman Jastro Stern, son of Mrs. Alfred Stern, Saturday, the 19th inst. The ceremony will take place at the home of the bride's parents at 7 p.m., with Rabbi Edgar F. Magnin officiating. Relatives of the bride and bride-groom will be present.

After a motor trip to Santa Barbara, Del Monte and Yosemite Park for winter sports, Mr. Stern will return to Los Angeles with his bride and they will make their home here.

ENGAGEMENT STIRS INTEREST

Tea Serves to Announce Betrothal

Miss Lida Florence Creamer

OF MUCH interest to local society is the announcement made this morning by Dr. and Mrs. Michael Salathiel Creamer of 831 Third avenue, of the engagement of their attractive young daughter Miss Lida Florence Creamer, to Franklin Lee Payer, the news being told to a coterie of friends at a beautifully appointed tea given yesterday by Mrs. Creamer at the Women's Athletic Club, ostensibly in honor of Mr. Payer's mother, Mrs. Harry Franklin of Cleveland, O. No date is set as yet for the wedding.

SOCIAL AFFAIRS of THE NAVY

Interesting news to the service set is the announcement by Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Tidmarsh of "The Highlands," Seattle, of the engagement of their daughter, Miss Phelbe Nell Tidmarsh, to Lieutenant-Commander George Frederick Hussey, Jr., son of G. S. Hussey and the late Kate Hussey (nee Nash, of Brookline, Mass.) Miss Tidmarsh arrived in Long Beach from the north last Sunday and is visiting for a short time as the house-guest of Lieut. and Mrs. P. F. Foster, U.S.S. New Mexico, en route to Arizona. Although no date has been set, the wedding is scheduled as an event of early spring.

In honor of Capt. and Mrs. Orin G. Murfin, U.S.S. West Virginia, who have been feted at a number of parties this season, Lieutenant-Commander and Mrs. M. Gordon Sharrow of the West Virginia were dinner hosts at Pacific Coast Club, Friday night. A vivid color hue of orange and yellow was carried out in roses, marigolds and tall orange tapers appointing the table. Covers were marked for Capt. and Mrs. Murfin, Commander and Mrs. R. A. Theobald, Lieutenant-Commander and Mrs. F. C. Sherman, Lieutenant-Commander and Mrs. H. K. Lewis, Lieut. and Mrs. Robert Briscoe, Miss Winifred Murfin, Lieut. R. D. Smith and the host and hostess.

Mrs. L. C. Bostwick, wife of Rear-Admiral Bostwick, commander of Battleship Division Three, complimented Mrs. L. M. Nulton, wife of Vice-Admiral Nulton, with an attractive luncheon at the club Thursday. Individual corsages of fragrant violets were given as favors to each guest and the luncheon table was decorated with violets, roses and sweet peas. Invitations were issued to Mmes. L. M. Nulton, W. C. Cole, J. W. Greenslade, Sinclair Gannon, W. K. Wortman, Herbert Dumstrey, Walter P. LaPrenz, Norman Gillette, Henry Seiller, E. W. Hansen, J. H. Welbrock, R. M. Doyle, Jr., Alfred Brown, James Crutchfield and S. E. Chapman.

As a welcome to Capt. Lester Dessey, U. S. Marine Corps, who recently returned on board the U.S.S. Maryland, Admiral and Mrs. Sumner E. W. Kittelle entertained at Pacific Coast Club at dinner Saturday night for a group of friends. Bidden for the evening were Capt. and Mrs. Lester Dessez, Rear-Admiral and Mrs. W. C. Cole, Capt. and Mrs. Edward U. Reed, Lieutenant-Commander and Mrs. C. J. Moore, Capt. Victor Kimberley, Mrs. Kamm, Miss Kamm and Kenneth Alexander of Los Angeles.

After stopping at the Blue Lantern in Coronado over the holidays, Mrs. H. O. Roesch, wife of Lieutenant-Commander Roesch, and Mrs. L. Wild, wife of Lieutenant-Commander Wild, U.S.S. Medusa, have returned to Long Beach.

Mrs. Paul G. Haas, wife of Lieut. Haas, U.S.S. Lexington, left Saturday on the S.S. El Salvador to visit friends and relative s in New York and Boston for the next two or three months. The El Salvador will stop en route at Mexico, Cuba and Panama.

Mrs. R. M. Doyle, Jr., wife of Lieutenant-Commander Doyle of the Lexington, who has stopped at the Sovereign this fall, departed Sunday for Miami, Fla., where she will visit her father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Waddell, until spring.

Tuesday Mrs. Raymond Burhen, wife of Lieutenant-Commander Burhen, U.S.S. Pennsylvania, sails on the S.S. Mongolia for two months in New York, via Panama.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Cobbledick of Piedmont, who are visiting in Beverly Hills, passed last week-end in Long Beach as the house guests of Commander and Walter F. La Prenz, U.S.S. Arizona.

The attractive Point Fermin home of Mrs. N. M. Prucht, wife of Capt. Frucht, commanding the U.S.S. Procyon, was the scene of a luncheon and bridge recently when Mrs. Frucht entertained for three wives of officers who are shortly being detached from the Procyon. Those who shared honors were Mrs. Walter Zimmerman, Mrs. R. C. Green and Mrs. M. C. Roberts. Others bidden included Mmes. W. S. Holloway, Arleigh A. Burke, Norman Hoit, Guy Cheatham and L. E. Taskler.

Ensign and Mrs. Howard Yeager, U.S.S. Arizona, were dinner hosts at Pacific Coast Club Friday night to Lieut. and Mrs. M. J. Duncan, Lieut. and Mrs. Carl Espe and Mrs. B. V. Soles.

The third of a series of bridge luncheons with which she is entertaining this season was given at the club by Mrs. J. W. Crandall, wife of Commander Crandall, U.S.S. Idaho, Tuesday afternoon. Her guest list included Mmes. W. C. Asserson, Grafton Beall, C. B. Camerer, D. E. Cochrane, Edward U. Reed, G. S. Arvin, Bruce Canaga, M. M. Prucht, George J. McMillin, J. H. Wellbrock, F. F. Murdoch, W. S. Hullfish, R. B. Crichton, G. B. Vroom, T. S. Enyart, Eric Barr, L. C. Pratt, L. L. Pratt and F. S. Carr.

Mrs. A. J. Spriggs, wife of Lieut. Spriggs, U.S.S. California, was luncheon hostess at the club Tuesday gathering together a group of young Navy matrons who soon will depart for various stations. Deep yellow roses and violets made an attractive centerpiece for the table where covers were marked for Mmes. Claude C. Bloch, Hollis M. Cooley, Calvin T. Durgin, W. W. Wilson, W. I. Causey, Jr., Robert E. Melling, E. F. Helmkamp, A. M. Van Eaton, W. F. Kline, R. D. Calkins, E. W. Hanson, R. S. Berkey and E. T. Hilant.

Members of the Twenty Bridge Club met at Patricia Inn Monday for their first meeting following the holiday with Mrs. A. J. Spriggs and Mrs. G. S. Swanson, wife of Lieut. Swanson, U.S.S. Tennessee, as luncheon hostesses.

Two enjoyable ships' parties of the past week scheduled on the social calendar were a dinner-dance at Pacific Coast Club Wednesday night given by Capt. W. K. Wortman and officers of the U.S.S. Arizona and a similar affair Friday night at which Capt. Orin G. Murfin and officers of the West Virginia were hosts.

Society of Cinemaland

by Myra Nye

While the formal announcement of the engagement of May McAvoy to Maurice Cleary of this city will be made at a tea the latter part of this month when the wedding date will also be made known by her mother, Mrs. Julia A. McAvoy, the interesting romance has been known among intimate friends for more than a fortnight.

Carmel Myers entertained with a shower for Mrs. Stanley Bergerman (Rosabelle Laemmle) previous to her marriage and to this affair came pretty May, wearing a large diamond on her engagement finger. Straightaway Miss Myers proclaimed the engagement at the dinner in Cocoanut Grove, where only girls were present. The tables were decorated with silver candlesticks and yellow candles with white tulle bows adding graceful touches. The favors were tiny brides and grooms. The shower presents were brought in a large basket and the bride opened them at the table when Miss McAvoy was no longer "leading lady" at the affair, but the spotlight of gay attention and banter was turned on the bride-elect. At 11 p.m. the men, who had attended a stag party for Mr. Bergerman, arrived, and dancing was enjoyed in the grove. Among them was Miss McAvoy's fiance.

Cinemalite Bidden

Invitations were issued last week among the cinemalite by Mrs. Ona Brown and Mabel Normand for a birthday bridge-tea next Saturday afternoon from 2 until 6 p.m. to honor Doris Deane Arbuckle on the anniversary of her birth. The affair will be given at the Roosevelt in Hollywood.

Mrs. Niblo Honors Her Husband

In honor of Fred Niblo, whose birthday anniversary was last Sunday, Mrs. Niblo (Enid Benentt) entertained with an informal buffet supper when forty-two of the director's intimate friends were bidden to the Niblo home in Beverly Hills. The evening was spent in playing bridge and billiards. Among the guests, all prominent in Cinemaland, was Herbert Wilcox, an English director recently arrived from London.

Tom Mix's Birthday Party

A surprise party was given Tom Mix at his home in Beverly Hills Saturday a week ago in the evening, when a number of his close friends came in upon the glorified cowboy in his glorified home unexpectedly. Dinner was served the guests and bridge was played. The dining table was adorned with heavy garlands of those light blossoms, orchid pink and white sweet peas. The entire house was filled with flowers where tables and guests were not. The birthday cake was frosted white and bore less than forty candles. In the center of the cake rode a cowboy made of caramel, on a chocolate pony. Individual ice cream was served in the shape of a horse, the jockeys mounted on them wearing bright red caps.

Among those present were Dorothy Dwan, Bebe Daniels, Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Ford, Mr. and Mrs. John Ford, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Sollars and M. A. Hamburger.

Honoring Miss Creelman

James Gleason entertained informally Monday evening in honor of Miss Eileen Creelman of New York City. Those bidden to the charming affair were Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Cruickshank, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Sollars, Mrs. Nina Crollius Gleason of Oakland and Mrs. Henry T. Gleason of San Francisco.

The many friends of Mrs. Gleason (Lucille Webster Gleason) will be happy to learn that she has recovered from her recent illness in San Francisco sufficiently to return home today, although she will not be able to complete her professional engagement in the northern city.

Other affairs honoring Miss Creelman include a week-end party last Sunday at the Malibu Ranch home of Alfred Santell, and a luncheon at the Montmartre Thursday when Nancy Smith was hostess.

Leo Morrison Host

Honoring Mr. and Mrs. Pat Rooney (Marion Bent,) and Pat, III, who have just arrived in Hollywood, Leo Morrison of New York and Hollywood entertained at a dinner and reception at the Hollywood Roosevelt Hotel Monday. Among the guests were: Sophie Tucker, Mr. and Mrs. Gus Edwards, Mr. and Mrs. Bobbie Clark, Mr. and Mrs. Paul McCullough, Mr. and Mrs. Marcel Silver, Mr. and Mrs. Ben Holmes, Carl Laemmle, Jr., Harry Carroll, Nat Goldstone and Julius Bernheim.

May McAvoy

Writers' Club

Sunday nights at the Writers' Club in Hollywood is an evening of quiet pleasure for many of the cinemalite. Among those who were guests last Sunday evening were: Mr. and Mrs. Tom Miranda, Mr. and Mrs. Emmett Flynn, Mr. and Mrs. Fritz Tilden, Mr. and Mrs. Peter B. Milne, Edward Everett Horton and Jack Jevne.

Casting for the next group of one-act plays at the club is now proceeding. Big names will appear on the bill and brilliant evenings are anticipated.

Return

Edyth Flynn celebrated her return to Hollywood from Paris and New York with a home-coming party last night in her new home at the Ruth Manor Apartments.

Following a buffet supper, dancing was enjoyed by the guests. During the evening Miss Flynn entertained her guests with three special songs which she will sing in the screen version of "Broadway," now being produced by Universal.

Among the many guests bidden were Florence Dudley, Ruby McCoy, Baron La Mange, Peggy Eleanor, Senor Carpitte, Grace Elliott and Monte Walters.

Arrivals and Departures

Marquis De La Falaise said farewell to the Marquise (Gloria Swanson) Thursday after a sojourn in Cinemaland over the holidays. He is returning to Europe to resume work as foreign representative for Pathe.

Mr. and Mrs. George Bancroft, George Stone, Charles Farrell, Jack Conway, Harry Rand, Guinn Williams were among the recent visitors at Arrowhead Springs. Last week-end Mrs. Ernest Torrance and Mrs. Jack Conway motored to the mountain resort.

John Davidson, who has been in Gotham for many months, arrived in Cinemaland Monday and has returned to his suite at the Roosevelt.

Robert Armstrong slipped quietly away one day last week for a dual purpose: to shoot ducks and to recuperate from a minor operation. Others who enjoyed hunting parties at the Salton Sea were: Steve Roberts, Charlie La Mont, Jerry Drew and George Coogan.

Dorothy Dwan was in San Francisco last week and is returning to Hollywood tomorrow.

Robert Benchley of New York has made his residence in Hollywood for a time.

Jose Crespo, who came from Spain a few months ago, is destined to remain for a long period, according to professional notices concerning him.

Beryl Roberts has recently come to the Coast to reside.

Will Durant is among the notables recently arrived in Hollywood.

Norma Talmadge, Constance Talmadge and their mother, Mrs. Margaret Talmadge, arrived aboard the Berengaria in New York Thursday from Europe. They will be in Hollywood before the month has passed.

Will Rogers, as everyone knows, is in New York. The item is added not to add knowledge to knowledge but for another negative, not to leave Will out. We like him.

D. W. Griffith, who is in New York, will not return to Hollywood until February.

Bartlett Cormack, writer for Paramount, arrived in Hollywood Thursday from New York.

Dinner Bridge

One of the most charming of the after-holiday affairs was Miss Norma Drew's bridge and dinner party held in her home in Westwood Hills a few days ago.

Table decorations were a miniature lake surrounded with tiny pine trees and a log cabin, a replica of Miss Drew's Lake Arrowhead Lodge. During the dinner Miss Drew extended an invitation to all to spend the week-end the latter part of January.

Following bridge, dancing was enjoyed by the many guests including Mr. and Mrs. M. Sherman, Bert Sixe, Lorraine De Val, Helen White, Dick Wynn, Elsie Allen, Frank Thompson, William K. Vernon and Count Ferdiane De Lissonna.

Bridge Tea

A smart luncheon and bridge was given at the San Vicente Boulevard home of Ann Preston yesterday afternoon followed by tea, which was served at 5 p.m. in the spacious patio. The guests of honor were Miss Preston's mother, Mrs. J. W. McDonald, and her aunt, Mrs. J. Stands Finkenbiner, who recently arrived from New York.

Flowers were arranged throughout the rooms and an eight-piece orchestra furnished music during tea.

Affairs of the Week

Elsie Allen was guest of honor at a dinner-dance given at the Crescent Heights Boulevard home of Sylva Nadina Thursday evening.

Senor Meguino Lopez, Spanish baritone entertained with songs, and Miss Nadina played and sang one of her own compositions, "Symphony of Love," after which Miss Allen gave a dance number for the guests.

Celebrating the completion of her new home in Beverly Hills Miss Bess True was hostess at a combination housewarming and dinner-dance last Tuesday evening.

Following dinner games and dancing were enjoyed by the many guests, Miss True having engaged a Hawaiian orchestra for the occasion.

Mrs. Susan McKinney entertained with a luncheon in honor of her daughter, Miss Grace Elliott, magazine and screen writer, at her home on Lodi Place last Thursday afternoon.

A centerpiece of white roses and ferns with tall green tapirs furnished the table decorations which corresponded with place cards of green and white. After the luncheon games were enjoyed. Twelve guests were bidden.

Wenda McKee, who recently returned from New York, was hostess to a number of friends at her home on Argosy Way in Hollywoodland last Saturday evening.

Miss Marjorie Warfield, who recently returned to Hollywood following a tour as leading lady with Bert Lytell was hostess at a dinner-dance given in her new home on North Stanley avenue the other evening. A red and green color scheme was used in the decorations and a five-piece orchestra furnished dance music.

Kitty Warfield held open house at her new home on Sierra Bonita avenue last Sunday from 2 to 3 p.m., at which time many prominent stage and screen stars dropped in to greet her.

Betty Baker entertained last evening at her charming Lincoln Boulevard home with bridge and a buffet supper. A profusion of varicolored flowers prevailed in the decorations. Following bridge, dancing was enjoyed.

MARKED SOUTHERN ACCENT BRINGS FAME TO ACTRESS

When Charlotte Walker, who plays Mrs. Edgar Rice in "The Trial of Mary Dugan," which opens tomorrow night at Erlanger's Mason Theater, discovers a young player with a strongly marked southern accent, she invariably urges him to cultivate it.

With delightful frankness, Miss Walker declares that she would probably not be an actress today had she not, as a young girl, possessed a speaking voice of unmistakable southern inflections. It was not experience that lifted her to country-wide fame in Winston Churchill's "The Crisis." It was simply her voice, or so she declares now, that was responsible for her acting talents being established beyond dispute.

The young Charlotte was afraid of that part in "The Crisis." Play Virginia Carvel, she who had done nothing but "bits" and who felt shaky, way down inside, every time the argus-eyed monster of an audience turned its gaze on her. The young Charlotte thought she wouldn't try it, thank you.

But James K. Hackett urged her, and Winston Churchill's agent urged her. Since she was southern-bred and the flaming wrongs set forth in "The Crisis" were wrongs that had overshadowed her childhood, Miss Walker found it easy after all to portray the Virginia heroine. She didn't act—she simply lived the part, uttering, in her delicious accents, the sentiments deepest in her heart.

"Who's Who" of the theater tells much of Charlotte Walker's work. Of the longest duration, perhaps, were runs in "The Warrens of Virginia" and "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine," both David Belasco productions. She has been Lady Windermere in "Lady Windermere's Fan" and Mrs. Dane in "Mrs. Dane's Defense," played Ibsen's Nordic heroines, Nora in "The Doll's House" and others.

Among her most interesting and profitable engagements were leads in "Homeward Bound" and "The Plain Woman," both written by her husband, Eugene Walter. At the Booth Theater in New York in 1915 she was Mrs. Guilford in "The Two Virtues;" Nancy Lee in a play of that name at the Harris Theater; Janet in "When a Feller Needs a Friend" at the New Amsterdam; the wife in "Tea for Three" and Catherine Mowbray in a very successful farce, "Call the Doctor," were roles of the succeeding seasons. Last year Miss Walker toured the South in "The Constant Wife," co-starring with Norman Hackett, followed by a similar tour, with Lou Tellegen, making it a trio of principals, in "The Green Hat."

She was born in Galveston, Tex., the daughter of the late Pinckney Walker, at one time British Consul in several southern States.

Brown Praises Human Quality of Sudermann

It is not generally known in this country that the late Hermann Suderman, famous German novelist, came into great prominence first through his playwriting. The noted author, whose books have formed the basis of as many photoplays as any other continental writer, was a dramatist at heart, it seems.

Clarence Brown, who has already picturized one of Sudermann's novels and is about to commence on another, considers the German author one of the best sources of screen material, because of the humanly dramatic quality of his work. "Flesh and the Devil," one of Brown's outstanding successes, was taken from Sudermann's "Es War," and the forthcoming Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production of "Wonder of Women" is adapted from "The Wife of Stephen Tromholt," one of the few of Sudermann's novels never to have been translated into English.

A foreign correspondent of the New York Evening Post writing of Hermann Sudermann, whose death occurred on November 21, says:

"Forty years have passed since Sudermann leaped into fame with the production of his famous drama, 'Dis Ehre,' or 'Honor.' For many years thereafter he dominated the literary life of Germany. His was the genius which first exploited problem plays in this country; and with his first stage success, 'Honor,' he set the entire nation to thinking. His art was the forerunner of naturalism on the stage, which Stanislavsky in Russia and Max Reinhardt in Germany later made the basis of their successes. It was tinged with romantic sentimentalism and had immense popular success."

"What Will 1929 Mean to You?"

What Are Its Possibilities for Yourself in Business, Finance, Love and Marriage?

"'Know thyself' is more imperative now than in the time of Socrates. Each individual is born with definite aptitudes and abilities that require developing. We may ascertain what these are through the ancient science of astrology; then strike out for a definite goal, knowing what we want and how to get it. Desire for success is active in every human being. Many lead discontented, unhappy lives because they do not do the work for which Nature fits them. Lack of self-knowledge causes them to spend years in fruitless effort and vague dreaming.

"I believe that astrology is the best guide for correct and happy living. It explains our individual characteristics, tells us of the most propitious periods for doing a thing and shows us how to meet and conquer the vicissitudes of life."

If you have an important problem which you wish solved, conduct your daily affairs according to the influences indicated for you in your individual horoscope.

Our shrewdest, wealthy investors have learned that what they invest in is not a factory or a plant, but, in the final analysis, IN HUMAN NATURE. Our most progressive financial institutions have learned the same thing.

GET A HOROSCOPE FOR EVERY MAN OR WOMAN IN YOUR FACTORY, OFFICE, OR HOME. You read it and give it to them to read.

The remarkable results achieved thru just KNOWING themselves will be startling and profitable for you.

Financial success, prominence and marital bliss may await you. This special horoscope is not the general delineation usually sent out by so-called astrologists. This horoscope is worked out according to your month, day and year of birth. For instance, a person born October 10, 1890, will receive a different horoscope from a person born October 10, 1891. This horoscope gives you the influence that each of the nine planets had at your birth and how each will affect your life.

What the Press Says of Belle Bart:

"The personal note in 'TODAY IN ASTROLOGY' makes it very popular with our women readers. And, incidentally, it isn't only Mother and the girls who want to read what is written in the stars about them——Father and the boys are just as curious to know what their birthdays will bring in the way of luck and character and career. Some are so impatient to find out that they cannot wait until their birthdays come around—they must have a personal letter from Belle Bart herself."

Bradley King Goes Abroad for First Rest

Bradley King is leaving for Europe during the first week in February when, it is estimated, her work for First National in writing screen story and dialogue for "The Squall" will have been completed and her contract with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer terminated.

As the result of a courtesy agreement between First National and Irving Thalberg Miss King was made available to the Burbank studios up until the conclusion of her two-year nonoptional contract with the M.-G.-M. organization for which she did several outstanding stories during her term of service which followed a successful career with Fox under Sol Wurtzel's supervision.

In five years of intensive activity Miss King has not had a single week's vacation. She was Thomas H. Ince's right bower as author of his productions prior to his death and following the presence of C. Gardner Sullivan and Joseph Franklin Poland. Her vacation abroad will be in the nature of a well-earned rest which will mark the reaching of two long-sought goals—financial and professional.

Miss King wrote "Weary River" for Richard Barthelmess for First National-Vitaphone reproduction as her first assignment after being loaned by M.-G.-M.

James Creelman Signed for Two F.B.O. Stories

James A. Creelman, author and playwright, is the latest recipient of one of F.B.O.'s choice New Year contracts.

William Le Baron, vice-president in charge of F.B.O. production, yesterday announced he had signed Creelman to write two "big-time" original stories to be incorporated in the company's 1929-30 program.

The first will be laid in New York in the first decade of this century—one of the most colorful periods of metropolitan history. The second will concern itself with the dock and harbor district of New York, and is tentatively titled "Wolves of the Waterfront." Both, according to LeBaron, will be in full sound and dialogue, using the RCA Photophone process.

Creelman is the latest addition to F.B.O.'s all-star literary staff under its reorganized policy. The company has discontinued westerns and the cheaper type of product, and is preparing to spend more than twice as much money this year on less than half as many pictures as in any preceding year. Purchase of "Rio Rita," the Ziegfeld stage sensation, is an indication of the new policy.

Creelman will return to New York late this week to begin work on the stories. He made a special trip to Hollywood to discuss them with LeBaron.

Imposing Cast of Principals for Burlesque

"Bare Facts" is the title of the forthcoming burlesque opening at the Follies today. Termed one of the fastest and merriest of shows, "Bare Facts" contains an imposing cast of principals headed by Max Coleman and Billy (Bumps) Mack, said to be two of the best comedians in burlesque.

The show also serves to introduce two more new members to the Follies cast, Louise Kellar, dancing soubrette and Melene Chorka, prima donna, possessor of an unusually beautiful soprano voice of rare quality. Others prominent in the cast are Miss Evelyn Myers, featured soubrette, Bob Burch and Syd Ray.

Conceived and staged by Walter C. Van Horn and Grover Frankie, the entertainment is of the popular revue type and the scenic settings and electrical effects provided are attractive and appropriate.

Leslie Fenton in Talkie Role

There are many actors, at the present time, who are finding their previous stage experience a valuable asset for the talkies. Among the younger screen players is Leslie Fenton, who is best remembered in the starring role of "An American Tragedy" when it played here.

Fenton only recently completed the talking sequences for "Erik the Great" and Universal liked his work so well they immediately engaged him for the role of Scarface Edwards in the stage play "Broadway."

It will be a "Happy New Year" for young Fenton, for in addition to his part in "Broadway" he is to have one of the featured roles in "She Couldn't Stop," featuring Sue Carol, which Lewis Seiler will direct for Fox.

Viola Dana at Home Once More

Viola Dana's fans, who have been wondering what has become of her, will be interested to know that for the past year she has been on the legitimate stage in Providence, R. I., brushing up on her early stage training preparatory to the talking films.

Miss Dana is now back in Hollywood ready for the talkies, and has brought with her the latest etiquette of the spoken drama.

WITHERS AGAIN HERO

Grant Withers handsome leading man now under contract to Warners, will play his second romantic role with Gertrude Olmstead in "The Time, the Place and the Girl," the new Vitaphone feature now being prepared. Grant and Miss Olmstead were the young lovers in "Bringing Up Father" last spring for M.-G.-M. Withers has recently completed the lead opposite Corinne Griffith in "Saturday's Children," at First National, and his future releases also will include "The Greyhound Limited" and "Madonna of Avenue A" for Warner Brothers.

The Elmco Exerciser for Good Health

THE Elmco Exerciser is outstanding among mechanical devices of this type and gives highly satisfactory results. Those who are inclined to stoutness may eliminate superfluous flesh on the hips, arms or legs. Others whose bodies need development will find that the soothing, gentle massage of this exerciser will be highly beneficial.

It is a sturdy, compact unit and requires no anchoring devices whatever, but can be moved readily if desired. This exerciser is out of the experimental stage, for its patented construction has been in successful operation for ten years.

A slight turn of the regulator wheel (without stopping the machine) gives a range of massage from gentle to vigorous motion. Any part of the body may be massaged with this machine. Priced at J. W. Robinson Co. at $219.

WHERE TO GO.

"INSPIRATION" NUDE IMPROPER?

"Times" Art Critic Defends Propriety of Undraped Bronze Statue in State Library at Sacramento, Storm Center of Heated Controversy

BY ARTHUR MILLIER
Art Critic of "The Times"

When Praxiteles, in the fourth century B. C., made a nude Aphrodite for them, the citizens of Cos refused it, choosing instead a draped figure of the goddess which the sculptor had carved as an alternative. Cnidos, just across the water, profiting by the publicity, bought the nude figure which became a storm center of discussion among the philosophers.

"Inspiration"

The news columns during the past month have reported progress of a controversy over the propriety or impropriety of "Inspiration," a bronze statue of a nude woman's figure recently completed by the New York sculptor Edward Field Sanford, Jr., and placed in the California State Library at Sacramento.

A replica of the figure was exhibited in the winter exhibition of the National Academy of Design, New York, where it is reported to have called forth the ire of representatives of the New York Society for the Suppression of Vice and became the target of alleged "art critics" on the score of "indecency."

Officials in Sacramento warmly defend their new decoration. Miss Mabel Gillis declares the statue is beautiful and a wonderful work of art. State Director of Finances Heron so admires "Inspiration" that he has a framed photograph of it on his office wall, while Lyman King, chief of the State Division of Service and Supply has granted the sculptor permission to make two bronze copies of the figure and one wood carving. One of the copies is for the garden of Col. Henry M. Rogers, millionaire oil magnate.

The Sacramento county chapter of the W.C.T.U. is to discuss the "propriety of 'Inspiration' in the State Library" at its January meeting, and Mrs. Maimie Denton, president of the chapter, said during the controversy: "I do not approve of it at all. It is daring and indecently voluptuous and should not be displayed in the State Library or anywhere else. I am no critic of art, but I do think there is a point where art leaves off and vulgarity begins."

One New York critic says: "'Inspiration' is all right. But the inspiration is entirely pathological." "Flagrantly suggestive and daring" says another; "terribly sensuous" says yet another of these gentlemen.

The work about which these epithets fly is a graceful, realistic figure of a young woman wearing a conventional Athenian headdress, gazing at a tiny kewpie-like winged figure held in her left hand from which a long veil with decorative border falls in a curve behind the ankles and is caught up by the right hand. The figure is over life-size.

Looking impartially at the photographs of this work it is hard to see any base for objections on the score of impropriety. Only minds that think the human body itself an indecent thing would seem justified in making such charges against "Inspiration."

The conventional critical attitude of our time, however, toward the question of the nude in art is to quote "Honi soit qui mal y pense," make some passing reference to the mediaeval hatred of the body, pat the Renaissance on the head for releasing it from hideous swaddling-clothes, and point to the Greeks as final justification.

But there is much more under the

STARS' STIPENDS JUMP HURDLES

Number Get Boost in Spite of Apparent Lower Trend

Reported Net of Trio Runs to $200,000 Per Picture

Increases Believed Result of Excellent Vocal Tests

The day of big salaries isn't over in the movies. Three prominent stars' stipends have just taken a jump. They are Jack Gilbert, Corinne Griffith and Richard Barthelmess. New contracts have been signed by all three of them with organizations with which they have been previously associated. They represent increases.

A novel feature of the contracts signed by these stars is that they will not have to make as many pictures per year as heretofore. Two a year will be the probable schedule. The reported returns of all three stars approximate $200,000 per picture. Gilbert's somewhat exceeds the others. His salary under the new arrangement is said to average close to $8000, in contrast to $5000 a week previously. Barthelmess' contract is reputed to yield him both more by the year and by the picture. Corinne Griffith's is approximately the same yearly return but more by the picture. She is making two where she made three or four previously. All three stars will talk in their films and it is said that the increased amounts paid them are largely due to their excellent vocal tests.

Another material increase that has occurred lately is the boosting of the salary of the character actor Alan Hale to almost four times what it was previously. He has scored an enormous success in comedy roles and is said to possess a splendid voice. The contract of Williams Haines received a boost some little time ago.

Demonstrated box-office value is a big factor in the salary advances of the present time, when added to the possession of excellent vocal qualifications. It is generally asserted that the day of huge salaries is over but there can be certain exceptions.

THIRTY-NINE CONTRIBUTE AS AUTHORS

Events and Characters of Six States Touched on in Bent Book

George Payne Bent, former Illinois piano manufacturer, now a resident of Los Angeles, has turned author at 75 years of age. His book, "Four Score and More—Bits of Biography and Humorous History," is but recently off the presses and although he is its chief contributor, there are thirty-eight others whose ages Mr. Bent says range from 60 to 90 years, who aided in the production of the book either by writing chapters or essays in consonance with the tone and structure of the work.

"I have endeavored merely to touch upon the outstanding events and characters of the history of the six States of which this book

Will European Accent Talk Them Out of Career?

FUTURE OF FOREIGN STARS IN BALANCE

Advent of Talkies Gives Rise to Speculation Over Fate of Imported Luminares from Continental Europe

BY EDWIN SCHALLERT

Will the foreign motion-picture star be able to withstand the shock of the talkies? Can European accents be adjusted to fit the requirements of the new dialogue medium? Will there be enough silent pictures made henceforth to afford opportunities to the luminary imported from Germany, France, Russia and other continental lands?

Always in the spotlight since the advent of Vitaphone, Movietone and other synchronizing devices, the future of the celebrity from abroad has assumed constantly varying and more critical aspects. The departure of Pola Negri eight or nine months ago was regarded as a sort of barometer of a changing era. After five years of stardom with the Paramount company, she left for her home in France sans future engagement. No American contract has been signed with her since then. Nor are there prospects of her return to this country.

Rumors lately have centered on Emil Jannings, whose contract with Paramount expires some time this year. He has three more pictures to make for the organization, including the one on which he is now working. Jannings is Europe's greatest favorite, and his films, with the possible exception of "The Patriot," have enjoyed a great vogue in America. It is said that he may go back to Germany upon the expiration of his contract.

OTHERS AFFECTED

There have been other rumored departures to foreign shores, affecting such artists as Conrad Veidt, Victor Varconi, F. W. Murnau, the director, and others. A list of those who have left includes numerous lesser lights, though the American future of such prominents as Lars Hansen, Victor Sjastrom, the Swedish director, Ludwig Berger, the German director, and others might seem in doubt.

On the other hand, there have been semblances of a new foreign invasion. One star, the Frenchman, Maurice Chevalier, has been brought over to this country, especially for the talkies. He is a Parisian music-hall star, and is to sing and do dialogue in the production, "The Innocents of Paris." Also groomed for stardom is the Russian, Olga Baclanova. She, too, is gifted with a singing voice, and has acquired quite a remarkable mastery of English.

Lily Damita, French, has been brought to this country since the synchronization of pictures. Other newer arrivals include Paul Lukas, the Hungarian, Camilla Horn, German; Robert Castle, Austrian, not to speak of a host of Latin-Americans, whose knowledge of our lan-

NEED OF MOSES SEEN IN TALKIES

Sound Pictures Criticised for Shortcomings to Date

German Director May Guide Them Out of Wilderness

High Hopes Held for Team of Reinhardt and Gish

BY HARRY CARR

What the talkies need is a Moses to lead them out of the wilderness.

And it is not impossible that the Moses may be Herr Max Reinhardt who has come over to direct Lillian Gish.

What impresses me about the talkies is that no one knows what they are all about. Are they to be stage plays plastered onto a screen with all the stage dialogue? Or are they to be motion pictures with an occasional outburst into conversation? Or just a slamming door or the moo of a cow or the tick of a clock for punctuation?

The nearest that anybody has come to the solution of the mystery is the Fox company which made "In Old Arizona." Even that stirring and interesting picture had its shortcomings.

COMPLAINT REGISTERED

One jarring complaint to be made against it was this:

You witnessed a herd of cattle bellowing and mooing and shuffling their hoofs on the gravel river bed. Then you switched to three men watching them. What became of the bellows? They were apparently as near the cattle as we of the audience, yet the cattle noises were abruptly turned off. When you were switched back again to the cattle, you no longer believed the sounds of the herd.

Nevertheless, that is the nearest any producer has come to a real talking picture.

"The Barker" and "Mother Knows Best" were advertised heavily as talkies; and everything about them was good except the talking part. Both would have been better as silent pictures.

The truth is that the whole motion-picture business has been too long keyed in to silent pictures. You might as well ask Thomas A. Edison to begin manufacturing stick candy.

They will never amount to much until some one great genius comes to the front to do for the talkies what D. W. Griffith did for the silent drama.

It might well be that this Moses is Reinhardt.

His has been the redominant mind in modern theatricals. He has, in a single generation, changed the art of the spoken stage.

His great German stage productions have been distinguished for their pictorial quality. He knows the power of the spoken word as few stage directors have ever known it. Also he knows the human eye and its appeal.

Reinhardt is still a comparatively young man with an elastic, fluid mind.

In Lillian Gish he has material to his hand.

To me, she has always seemed the most finished artiste the screen has ever known. And I think she will be a great deal better when she talks than when she acts in silence.

ASSET IN COMMON

Both Reinhardt and Miss Gish have one asset in common than has been a deterrant; now becomes an asset.

They are not too strongly tied to what motion picture call "entertainment"—sure-fire hokum to electrify the cash customers.

When pictures talk and this talk has to be translated into a dozen languages, they will find that the same stuff will not get over.

For instance, it would be utterly impossible to find German dialogue that would not take the starch out of Clara Bow's "The Fleet's In." Her actions in that delightful, impudent comedy are fitted to American slang and American colloquialism.

Whoever is to make something real and important and lasting out of talking pictures will, of necessity, have an international type of mind.

If Reinhardt fails to lead them out of the wilderness, it will be a world-wide disappointment.

VAN LOON REVIEWS NOVEL

Widely Translated Book by Writer of Holland Held to be Story of Progress

BY HENDRIK WILLEM VAN LOON
Author of "The Story of Mankind," "Man the Miracle Maker," etc.

THE REBEL GENERATION. By Jo Van Ammers-Kuller. E. P. Dutton & Co., New York.

There have been periods in the history of the human race when mankind gally shouted "Yea!" to every problem of existence. There have been periods when mankind meekly whispered "Nay!" to the slightest suggestion of change.

During the era that followed the Congress of Vienna any expression of opinion was thought to be in questionable tastes. A mere negative nod of the head was deemed sufficient for all minor purposes of life. As for the major ones, they were left to the discretion of the Rev. Clergy and the head-of-the-house, and when father and the Domine had spoken, there was no further argument.

For women were merely biological necessities and children existed to practice the fifth commandment.

The ancestral pictures were sold for old junk. The ancestral palaces were turned into grocery stores. Joy and laughter were banished from the streets. And high above this dismal picture there arose the image of a new deity—the invincible God of Respectability.

STORY OF PROGRESS

The history of America during the last three centuries is the story of a small group of intrepid pioneers who boldly trekked into the wilderness to struggle with the forces of nature and make a happier home for those who came after.

They were brave men and women and we are happy to honor their valiant memories.

In the Low Countries there was no wilderness in the physical sense of the word, but the spiritual morass was so vast and so impenetrable that none but the most courageous ventured forth from the narrow beaten track, and that none but the hardiest survived to tell the tale.

"The Rebel Generation," by Mrs. Van Ammers-Kuller, is the chronicle of one of these pilgrims of social progress. It is a "human document" poured into the form of a novel, a novel which consists of a long series of human documents. It is the valedictory of an era that is slowly coming to its most welcome end. The storm of abuse which greeted its appearance shows that much still remains to be done. But the cheers of approbation that sped the volume along into an unprecedented number of editions and made the author one of the best-known writers of her day was proof that her heroine had not worked in vain.

It is often said that European books can never be entirely popular in America because "conditions are too absolutely different."

A pious wish! But those who are able to read between the lines will be less hopeful.

For here, within the pages of this book, but for the mercy of God, we walk ourselves.

OPERA SEASON PLANS TAKE SHAPE

Repertoire for Coming Year Announced With Return of Local Executives from Annual New York Pilgrimage

BY ISABEL MORSE JONES

Plans for the new opera season of the Los Angeles Grand Opera Association are brewing. Merle Armitage, manager. Gaetano Merola, general director, and Gurney Newlin, president of the association, have returned from their annual pilgrimage to New York and the air is rife with speculation.

To set at rest the question of repertoire which is always the first burning desire of those who care, there will be nine operas chosen from the following: "Aida," "Tannhauser," "Barber of Seville," "Il Trovatore," "Pagliacci," "Cavalleria," "Masked Ball," "Lakme," "Hansel and Gretal," "Coq d'Or," "Martha" and "Manon."

It is too early for the announcements of the stars who are to sing in these operas, but with the operas in mind and the roster of stars available it should not be hard for the clever to connect the two more or less accurately.

INTERCHANGE CHORUSES

The chorus is to be recruited in a slightly different manner this season as forty singers are to be trained here and forty in San Francisco. The two cities will then interchange. M. Reidel, assistant conductor of the Metropolitan Opera Company of New York, will come here to train the chorus.

Mr. Armitage came back to Los Angeles after having heard and seen many of the New York performances, convinced that Los Angeles and San Francisco are particularly fortunate in having opera of such relatively high standard. He believes this is largely due to the freshness of voices and enthusiasm of spirit of the young singers who comprise our western choruses and of those who take the minor roles. Many of these young aspirants for fame are eager for more opportunity beyond that afforded them by the nine performances in the fall and have appealed to the various music and operatic powers for opera to be given during the winter season with resident singers.

It is obvious that there are many fine voices in the city and there are coaches and conductors able and willing to undertake the training. What seems to be lack-

Supercritical Theater Goers Asserted Here

"I don't believe," states Phil Morris, whose role as Oswald Alving in Henrik Ibsen's play "Ghosts," now playing at the Egan Theater, has been much commented on in Los Angeles, "that there exists in the United States a more difficult to please, super-critical theater audience than that found in Los Angeles.

"This is undoubtedly brought about by the fact that so many Los Angeles residents are either in the acting profession or have close relatives or friends who are. They are acquainted with the best standards of the acting profession, and are capable of judging a play, and those taking part in it, from a more exacting basis than anywhere else.

"I prefer this type of audience above others. I feel that when I give a good performance it will be appreciated, and consequently, as try to do my very best."

Prize Winners Will be Named

Mrs. Julio Endelman, president of the Cadman Creative Club, announces that the winners of the recent literary and musical contest will be named at the meeting in the Ambassador tomorrow evening. Reports from the various judges throughout the United States have been received by Myra Cain Grant, contest chairman.

Sarah Padden Will Star at Theater Mart

Sarah Padden has added her allegiance to the Theater Mart—it's getting to be the thing among the stage and screen folks. She will star in a one-act play, "The Godsend," beginning the 15th inst, when five short plays will be presented by Alice Pike Barney, sponsor of the theater, and Eleanor Lawson.

Eleanor Lawson, former New York actress, now assisting Mrs. Barney, wrote "The Godsend," and Miss Padden is charmed with her role.

The other plays to be presented at the same time are "The Woman Plays," by Alice Pike Barney, author of several long plays to be produced later; "A Pair of Jacks," with Arthur Clayton as author and actor; "Comin' Th'oo," by Margaret Wright of New York, and "Dinner for Two," contributed by Phillip Hubbard, an English actor now in well as other members of the cast, Hollywood.

Lark Ellen Will Appear in North

Ellen Beach Yaw left last Thursday for Vancouver, British Columbia, where she will appear in concert, under the auspices of the Greater Vancouver Choir on Tuesday evening, the 8th inst.

Her accompanist for the occasion will be Miss Anna Dall, Seattle pianist, who accompanied the California coloratura at her Paris concert during her recent European tour.

MEXICAN BAND TO PLAY HERE

National Aggregation of Musicians to Make First Visit to California

The Banda de Policia of Mexico City is preparing to come to Los Angeles on a good-will tour. It will be the first visit of this famous band to California and the tour is to start with an official concert attended by the social, political and financial leaders of this city and Mexico in the great ballroom of the Biltmore, the Salle d'Oro.

The visit of this band, which is not a Mexican police band as the name implies, but the official band of the country, is being arranged by Pablo Sanchez of this city, who has been working for many months to make proper arrangements to complete bookings for a splendid tour of Mexico's typical band.

The music to be played by the Mexican Police Band is to be entirely Mexican. The band consists of a hundred musicians, all of whom are graduates of the conservatory of music, are led by Velino M. Preza, who is also a composer. On a tour in the Eastern States five years ago the band gained eulogies of praise from American band leaders.

As the Mexican custom is, the band will be surrounded with brilliant social and official activity while here and the event promises to be unusually colorful and interesting to Californians.

TO GIVE LECTURE SERIES

Alexander Stewart, lecturer in choral, orchestral conducting and church music at the University of Southern California College of Music, will be one of the staff of lecturers in the leadership training school to be held at the First Baptist Church in Los Angeles the last two weeks in January under the auspices of the department of Christian education of the Baptist denomination. Mr. Stewart will give a series of six lectures and demonstrations in "The Use of Music in Religious Education."

Third Concert to be Offered

Glendale Symphony Orchestra, under Modest Altschuler, will offer what is probably its most pretentious program to date under the title of "The Concert of the Nations" for its third concert of the season.

The program will be made up of symphonies of a national character, culminating in the now famous "America" of Ernest Bloch. For the latter presentation Mr. Altschuler is enlarging his orchestra and making other special preparations. It is expected that Mrs. J. J. Carter of Hollywood Bowl fame will make some explanatory introductory remarks concerning the new opus and its composer.

The concert will be given Monday evening, the 21st inst., in the auditorium of the Union High School, East Broadway, Glendale.

SUPPORT PROBABLY TO BE MAINTAINED

The rumor of the continued support of the Philharmonic Orchestra by W. A. Clark, Jr., which gained credence this week is neither affirmed nor denied by the authorities, but it is generally understood in music circles that the orchestra is to go on benefiting by the same unprecedented generosity as heretofore.

MUSIC and Musicians

RUSSIAN TO STUDY THE SOUND-FILM

Modest Altschuler Will Synchronize for New Development

Inspiration Pictures, Inc., is proud over the acquisition of Modest Altschuler, he being the first symphony conductor of international achievement to have lent his support to the speaking film. Altschuler's work with such famous dancers as Pavlova, Duncan, Mordkin, Maude Allan, his affiliations with Al Woods and John Tyler, producers, are proof that he knows the requirements of the stage.

"Moreover, Mr. Altschuler has made a close study of the sound-film, which stands midway between the so-called legitimate drama and the silent film. Music for the speaking film offers new possibilities and difficulties which have not been solved. Music for the sound film must be treated like a photographer would use light and color. In addition to this new science of synchronization, imaginativeness is more needed than ever, and Altschuler does combine these faculties.

Altschuler has had extensive experience with making music for the film. His orchestration for the "Sea Hawk" of Frank Lloyd furnished the principal talking-point at the First National convention in New Orleans, where it caused an unprecedented stir, when directed by Mr. Altschuler.

For several years connected with the Moscow Opera, Altschuler was engaged by the Ben Griet Players soon after his arrival. He wrote and directed incidental music for that famous troupe during three seasons. Another film success of Altschuler's was his adaptation of Humperdinck's "Miracle" music when that great Reinhardt spectacle was filmed under the management of Al Woods, eminent New York producer.

GUIBERSON RECITAL

Interest has been shown in the debut recital to be given January 18, by Richard Guiberson, Los Angeles baritone.

MID-TERM UNDER WAY AT STUDIO

Earle Wallace

Another of Earle Wallace's dance teams who are making a big success on the local stage is Ben Armand and Jack Sherlin, who are dancing in "Revelations of 1929" at the Broadway Palace. Armand and Sherlin are doing tap and eccentric dance specialties in this musical revue. They received all their training at the Earle Wallace Studio of Dancing.

Earle Wallace was one of the first dance schools in the West to teach tap dancing. Many of the leading dance teams in vaudeville, when filling local engagements, go to Wallace for new dance routine and steps for their acts.

COACHES FORMER STUDENTS

Kathryn Wentz, Los Angeles vocal instructor, is coaching several of her former students, who are now professional singers.

ITALY'S SINGING IDOL IS DEAD

Mattia Battistini Greatly Loved by All Europe, is Mourned by All Nations

The following tribute to the late Mattia Battistini, the much loved Italian baritone, whose fame reached America without avail as he could never bring himself to cross the water, was written by a gifted Los Angeles amateur, Miss Bernadine Murphy.

MATTIA BATTISTINI

Those who knew him weep—those who heard him weep—and let those who have not heard him weep, for this privilege can never be theirs.

Mattia Battistini was born in Rome in 1857. At the age of 21 the opportunity that every young singer dreams of came his way. The baritone who was to sing the principal role at the Costanzi Opera was taken suddenly ill the day of the performance. Battistini saw his chance and he told me with youthful pride how after singing a few phrases he was engaged by the manager.

From that unexpected debut until the last, he has been Italy's singing idol and greatest baritone. He was not only adored in Italy, for he was known and loved in Spain, Portugal, London, Stockholm, Berlin, Vienna, Paris and in the grand old days, in St. Petersburg.

In 1923 I had the privilege of meeting him. It was in Rome at the studio of his accompanist, Signorina Stame. No Caesar was ever more imposing. There he stood erect as a general at almost 70. But years cannot harm a great artist.

Battistini spoke most languages but no English—he did not have to, for his winning smile made him understood to all.

Little did I dream that two years later I would be spending a winter in Rome and going to that studio daily. Rarely an afternoon passed that the Maestro did not come and literally sing for hours. I weep when I think of those golden hours.

The death of Mattia Battistini is one of the great losses of the country and everyone who can should feel it an honor to pay tribute to him at the little chapel near his villa at Rieti, just outside of Rome.

CHOIR TO ASSIST ORCHESTRA

Brahms Third Symphony Scheduled

Georg Schneevoigt

The Smallman A Cappella Choir will appear with the Philharmonic Orchestra of Los Angeles, Georg Schneevoigt conductor, at the seventh symphony pair Thursday evening and Friday afternoon at the Philharmonic Auditorium in two numbers—Bach, "Sing Ye to the Lord," and Handel, "Hallelujah" from "The Messiah." The program will open with overture to "Oberon" by Weber and close with the Brahms Symphony No. 3 in F Major.

Department of Music Presents Prominent Trio

The California String Trio, which is to be presented by the music department of Occidental College in Alumni Hall on Wednesday evening, is composed of Axel Simonsen, 'cellist; Leon Goldwasser, violinist, and Homer Grunn, pianist.

Axel Simonsen, as violoncello solo artist, ensemble and orchestra player and teacher, figures among those prominently identified with the musical development of Los Angeles. He has made many concert appearances here and for two seasons was assisting soloist with Mme. Nellie Melba. He recently spent two years in Paris, acquainting himself with the modern French school.

As a composer, Homer Grunn has done much to develop an authentic idiom in American music. As a pianist he has won distinction on the concert platform.

Leon Goldwasser, distinguished concert violinist, is a pupil of the famous Leopold Auer.

A unique feature of the Occidental music course this year is found in the fact that the series of four concerts are given free to the students of the college through the generous patronage of James G. Warren and several members of the faculty.

STAFF PROMINENT IN MUSICAL ACTIVITIES

SUTRO-SEYLER TEACHERS APPEAR ON PROGRAMS OF CURRENT SEASON

The Sutro-Seyler Studio of Music and Dance, 1417 West Boulevard, is open continuously during the year, under the supervision of Ellabelle Sutro. The school is modeled after the manner of the Curtis Institute of Philadelphia. Members of its faculty who are prominent in current programs are Henry Svedrofsky, conductor of the Strauss concert by the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra, Ilya Bronson, solo 'cellist, conducting his symphony club of 100 members on the 11th inst. Florence Russell, soprano, has appeared with the Los Angeles Grand Opera Company; Purcell Mayer, violinist, appearing regularly on National Broadcast programs.

School of Stage Dancing Plans Active Season

The Professional School of Stage Dancing, 829½ South Hill street, will open to the Los Angeles public this week. Every possible convenience has been installed, including hot and cold showers and large, airy practice rooms. The floor space is said to be the largest occupied by any school of its kind in Los Angeles.

NAT KING

Nat King, well-known teacher, will be associated with the Professional School of Stage Dancing and also in charge of buck-and-wing waltz clog, soft shoe and eccentric dancing. He will be assisted by an efficient group of instructors. Ballet, acrobatic and ballroom dancing will also be taught. Class and private lessons will continue in session all day and evenings.

The Parks Theatrical Enterprises will have offices in conjunction with the school. Mr. Parks has established a reputation for furnishing high-class entertainers for all occasions.

Children's and adults' classes in tap dancing are now forming; the children's beginners class will begin tomorrow at 4 p.m. and adult beginners class will begin Tuesday evening at 7 p.m. All classes will be under the direction of Nat King.

CALIFORNIAN TO SING RECITAL

W. Richard Guiberson

Endowed with a baritone voice and a musical personality of dramatic flair, W. Richard Guiberson, California baritone, will make his Los Angeles debut in concert recital Tuesday evening at the Philharmonic Auditorium under L. E. Behymer's management.

Guiberson has chosen an exceptional program for his concert. He will sing rarely heard French and German songs, besides interesting English and Italian groups. Among his numbers will be a new song by Mrs. M. Hennion Robinson, "Love's Trilogy," which the Los Angeles composer wrote for the concert and dedicated to him.

GARROWAY COMPOSITIONS

Two of Will Garroway's compositions are meeting with great success. Lawrence Tibbett is singing "April," the new vocal number on his programs, while the piano number "Consolation," is being used by Mr. Garroway.

Belcher Plans New Class in Step Dancing

A beginning class in step dancing for adults will be started at the Ernest Belcher studios. Dancing on Tuesday evenings at 8 o'clock. It will be the first class of the new year in this style of dancing. The next adult class in step dancing is not scheduled until spring.

New School of Stage Training Promises Much

Bud Murray, stage director for the Messrs. Shubert and George White's Scandals for the past twelve years, and known to Californians, mostly for his connection with the production of the "Good News," heads the Bud Murray School for the Stage, which was opened this week at the American Storage Building at 3634 Beverly Boulevard.

Mr. Murray contemplates recruiting units and naming them the Bud Murray California Sunbeams. One unit is now en tour with the Fanchon and Marco circuit, and another atop of the American Storage Building, where Mr. Murray has his "Heavenly Revue."

Mr. Murray states that his teaching is absolutely practical so that when a pupil graduates from his school, he is then ready for the stage.

SPANISH ARTIST CAUGHT IN FILMS

Xavier Cugat, the Spanish violinist and caricaturist who has delighted Southern Californians for several months, has been signed by Pathe to write theme songs, arrange the musical score and design the costumes and settings for a talking picture with a Spanish background.

Cugat is the fashion in the film world and the fact that he is also an excellent musician with a flair for "smart" drawings and a gift of discrimination in line should make him an acquisition to the talking films.

NEW OPERA CLASS BY CASELOTTI

Last Wednesday Guido Caselotti, Los Angeles vocal instructor and opera coach, started a special class for all of his pupils who are taking private lessons, which he terms a demonstration class. In this class the students are collectively instructed, as a demonstration to each other, in their work both in voice production and opera.

Caselotti, who has been in California but three years, numbers twenty years' previous teaching experience in New York City and has given proof of his work here, especially through the operatic careers of both his wife, Maria Caselotti, and his daughter, Louise, both of whom owe their entire training to him.

CALIFORNIA DANCERS

Today five former Southern California dancers, young pupils of the Belcher School of Dancing, are achieving fame in European capitals. They are Beth Beri, Gayety Theater in London; Mildred Burns, prima ballerina in "Topsy and Eva," now having an extended run in London; Georgia Graves, premier danseuse of the Follies Bergere in Paris, and June and John Roper, dancing stars of Haller's Revue in Berlin. Haller is known as the Ziegfeld of Germany.

PUPILS OF MME. MORANDO

One of Mme. Morando's pupils is making a success as the prima donna soprano in the "Mission Play," singing the "La Paloma" and the speaking part as Signora Yorba. Mia Scherr, also a pupil of Mme. Morando, is a success in concert and opera in the eastern cities.

ZOELLNERS PLAY BLOCH

A program filled with interest for the modernist as well as the more conservative lover of music will be presented by the Zoellner Quartet at the Zoellner Conservatory, Wilshire Boulevard, corner Manhattan, in their second concert scheduled for Monday evening.

As a novelty the Francois Gossec (1734-1839) trio has much that is of particular interest. He was the first composer who made an outstanding success with his chamber-music works, his string trios and quartets going through several editions to satisfy the big demand for them. Biographers state Beethoven was influenced by Gossec's style and form of writing.

Sinigaglia, and Bloch, whose symphonic work, "America," was such a recent outstanding success, will give balance to the Zoellner program.

COSTUMING PLAYS IMPORTANT ROLE

Authenticity in costuming and jewelry is one of the interesting and outstanding features in the dance recital to be given by Ruth St. Denis at the Figueroa Playhouse the 20th inst. Miss St. Denis and Mr. Shawn, in connection with their Denishawn Dancers, have always been noted for using real jewelry and authentic costumes which are designed and created by Miss Pearl Wheeler, with the advice of Miss St. Denis. In the six new dance numbers that Miss St. Denis has arranged for her program, never has she been more careful in her selection.

During their oriental tour in the bazzars of India and the shops in Japan and China the natives often gasped in amazement at Miss St. Denis and Miss Wheeler, who so carefully selected materials and gathered old and sometimes apparently worthless jewelry.

In the "Bakawali," a dance from which the costumes and steps were inspired from a description of the old Hindu plays of the beauty and grace of the dancers of Indras court, Miss St. Denis wears a skirt that is fifty yards around. The braid on the skirt and headdress were woven out of native materials. The "Chudda," or head sheet, is a museum piece woven out of selected gold. An interesting feature of the native old Chudda's is that if they are melted one gets back in solid gold more than they paid for the head gear.

LOUISE GUDE STUDIOS

Rose Akerstein, young soprano from the Louise Gude studios, who recently arrived in New York, where she has been sent to continue her studies, sends word that she has been accepted a pupil by Maestro Vilanot, teacher of Elizabeth Rethberg of the Metropolitan. Miss Rethberg herself took Miss Akerstein to the maestro. Nelle Gotheld, dramatic soprano from Miss Gude's studio, is enjoying a large measure of success during the present season.

Raymond Toole, baritone from the studio, has just returned from a two weeks' Orpheum engagement with "The Rangers" in the San Francisco Bay district.

GOOD GIRL ROLES NOW LONG PAST

Doris Kemper, One-Time Ingenue, Fills Rowdy Role in "Front Page"

It is a far cry from the "perfect ingenue type" she was once credited with being to the "Clark-street tart" of "The Front Page," the play at the Belasco Theater—but Doris Kemper bridged the gap in something like two years.

It happened, as so many terribly important things do in theaterland, quite by accident. Miss Kemper landed in New York with rich memories of months spent in countries very different: China, for example, and India. While there she had studied poetry and poise and the drama with no less a personage than Rabindranath Tagore—who conducts, it seems, classes in English as well as Hindustani. She had listened to lectures—"I guess you call them lectures," she said—by Mahatma Gandhi, hailed as a prophet of his people. She had traveled with a theatrical troupe under the management of T. Daniel Frawley, her boon companion being Florence Roberts, who is now with the Duffy Players in this city. By Frawley she had been billed as Dorris Kemper, because Doris spelled with two r's is very British, and the far-flung colonists of the empire like to think of their favorites as very, very British.

Finally she had played the lead in a film produced by Frawley in Calcutta.

Now, however, she was away from all that. She was in New York, among kindred souls. Kindred? Miss Kemper's brow wrinkled at the recollection. It wasn't winter, but it was hard sledding for a while.

Well, she wrote a play. Everybody writes a play. She had, she recalled, an inferiority complex. She didn't quite know what to do with the play, having written it. Then she decided to lick the inferiority complex and sell the play—both together.

She went to Jed Harris—Harris, who had "clicked" with his first big success, "Broadway," on Broadway. "I've got a play," she bristled, "read it!"

Harris wasn't interested in the play. He was interested in the playwright. "Look here!" said he, "you're going to play Pearl in the very next company of 'Broadway' we put together."

That settled it. The next company of "Broadway" came to Los Angeles—and Miss Kemper played Pearl, the girl with the gun that went off, in it.

"That 'typed' me forever, I guess," she said. "Here I am the Molly of 'The Front Page,' and she is really the Pearl of 'Broadway.'

"Perhaps you will be shocked—but I like Molly. We catalogue her, in our passion for pigeon-holding everybody, as 'a bad woman.' We let it go at that. Yet Molly does nothing wrong in the play. True, she is kind to a poor hunted rat of a man, and it is the law which is hunting him; but she is only following the dictates of her heart and her bewildered mind.

"I do not think she is in love with this Earl Williams, who is to be hanged at 7 in the morning. But he has been good to her during their brief association, and she is grateful. When she dies, after his escape from prison, rather than tell where he is hiding, she is just being true to the ideal—or, rather, the idealization—of her which he has expressed."

The bloodcurdling scream which whips off into nothingness as Molly plunges from the press-room window has puzzled many playgoers by its uncanny verisimilitude. The secret of it is Miss Kemper's own.

"I'll tell you what it is," she confided . . . but why spoil a perfectly splendid illusion?

Current Drama

One of the most important events in things dramatic this week is the opening tomorrow night at the Figueroa Playhouse of "The Guardsman," third offering of the Los Angeles Repertory Theater.

Lowell Sherman, suave and skilled actor of the stage, has the Guardsman role, while Doris Lloyd, seen to such good advantage in "Interference," has the leading feminine role.

The first night performance should be the signal for a distinguished gathering of Los Angeles society and for many of those prominent in dramatics and the screen.

To the Mason on the same evening returns "The Trial of Mary Dugan," Bayard Veiller's courtroom drama seen here during the summer months. This is the play during which the curtain never falls, court recess being called instead of intermission between acts.

The Theater Mart offers a new bill starting Wednesday and continuing three nights. Sarah Padden is cast in a leading role in one of the offerings.

Otherwise, the stage calendar reads: Belasco, "Front Page;" Biltmore, "Nineteenth Hole;" Egan, "Ghosts;" El Capitan, "So This Is London;" Hollywood Playhouse, "Daddies;" Lincoln, "The Man Who Came Back;" Music Box, Lupino Lane's Revue; Pasadena Playhouse, "The New Morality;" President, "Take My Advice;" Vine Street, "Her Cardboard Lover;" Orpheum, Will Mahoney, headliner; Hillstreet, Harry Carroll's Revue, and Pantages, "Submarine."

Belasco

One of the most popular shows in town today is "The Front Page," exciting and noisy comedy of newspaper life, at the Belasco. This same play is breaking attendance records in Chicago and New York.

Biltmore

Pleasantly humorous and not without a touch of pathos is the Frank Craven play, "The Nineteenth Hole" at the Biltmore.

Egan

Ibsen's tragedy, "Ghosts" continues at the Egan Theater.

El Capitan

When Edmund Breese was leading man for Mme. Rhea, the celebrated French actress, she presented him with a rabbit's foot for making up. Breese today uses the same rabbit's foot in making up for his original role of Hiram Draper, Sr., in the Henry Duffy Players' production of George M. Cohan's comedy "So This Is London" at El Capitan.

CHARLOTTE MERRIAM, MUSIC BOX REVUE

Hollywood Playhouse

The Lougheeds, juvenile triplets, who appear in "Daddies" with Robert McWade and the Henry Duffy Players at the Hollywood Playhouse, are planning to give a costume party next Thursday. It will be held in their dressing-room at the Playhouse between the matinee and evening performances, and the other children in the comedy, Anita Calfot and Evelyn Mills, will be the guests.

Figueroa Playhouse

Ferenc Molnar's "The Guardsman" opens tomorrow night at the Figueroa Playhouse under the auspices of the Los Angeles Repertory Theater. Lowell Sherman, suave villain of stage and screen, plays the Guardsman role, while Doris Lloyd is seen opposite.

Lincoln

Fare from colored artists at the Lincoln Theater on Central avenue is "The Man Who Came Back."

Mason

"The Trial of Mary Dugan" is to be resumed at the Mason Theater beginning tomorrow night. This is the courtroom drama on which the curtain never goes down during the three acts.

Music Box

Lupino Lane's revue continues its merry way at the Hollywood Music Box. Some new chiffon gowns are to grace chorus girl members of the production this week, it is promised.

Pasadena Playhouse

"The New Morality," an ironical comedy, with Gilmor Brown and Ralph Freud, continues at the Pasadena Community Playhouse.

President

Harrison Ford believes in a business man's holiday. Whenever he has time from his stage and picture engagements the leading man of "Take My Advice," which the Henry Duffy Players are presenting at the President, goes to the theater.

Theater Mart

Five short one-act plays will be presented at the Theater Mart, 605 Juanita avenue, Hollywood, beginning Wednesday night for three nights. Sarah Padden has the lead in one, "The Godsend."

Vine-street

"Her Cardboard Lover," naughty French farce, with Edward Everett Horton and Florence Eldridge, is shortly to close at the Vine-street.

Hillstreet

Harry Carroll and his new revue headlines the Hillstreet show starting today. Included are Vera Marsh, California Collegians, William Demarest, Estelle Collette, Donovan Girls. The photoplay will be "Marked Money," with Junior

CLARA AND CHANEY HEADLINERS

Interesting Contrast in Taste Shows in Movie Vote; Jolson Reigns Now in Sound; Film Endings Evidence Feebleness

BY EDWIN SCHALLERT

NOTHING if not striking in the contrast it presents is the check-up on starry popularity by a leading movie trade journal. Clara Bow leads the girls; Lon Chaney, the men. The preference is for youth among the former, for seasoned maturity among the men. The flapper versus the character actor.

The check-up, printed in the Exhibitors Herald, represents chiefly, it is assumed, small-town opinion. Clara clicks mightily in the provinces. So does Chaney. The latter has outrun Tom Mix a little, who has long been the supreme bucolic idol. Westerns are not as much in favor as heretofore in "the sticks," and this affords double proof of it. Chaney pictures are not the ordinary hero, heroine and villain productions. Many of them have what are virtually unhappy endings.

Clara's pictures are more true to the accepted model. The only marked departure was "Ladies of the Mob" during the past year, and that, I believe, was among Miss Bow's less popular productions. She is apparently most successful with her public in the light farce type of film, despite that she would like to do more dramatic roles.

Colleen Moore, who led for two years in succession, ranked second among the women in the vote, while the top-notch foreign stars were Greta Garbo and Emil Jannings.

TALKIES will be a long time changing the course of stellar hits in the outlying sections. Al Jolson undoubtedly tops every other star in cities where synchronized films are showing. The question is how much of the public going to movies does this represent. Possibly a much greater proportion than would be shown any traditional rather far-flung popularity poll, because the talkie audience is a more concentrated audience.

Jolson's films have been making an enormous amount of money. Even on second runs "The Singing Fool" is reported drawing heavily everywhere. He is easily the present season's big screen sensation.

WITHIN the bounds of this country the potential audience to which synchronized films can play now is estimated at nearly 75 per cent that of silent films. The figure seems high; indeed hardly possible with only 1000 installations of sound equipment in theaters.

Yet it is contended that these theaters are all so large and so strategically located that they can attract fully three-quarters of the movie public, and for some sound productions they are returning money so rapidly that the grosses far surpass the majority of silent films. This is all rather powerfully born out by the revenue of the Warner organization.

A SILENT picture can, of course, still sweep the country. This consideration is sufficient to cause most of the producing companies to plan two versions of their pictures. Undoubtedly there is still a nice slice of profit to be gained in the 15,000 or so theaters that are not equipped for sound, even though a large number of these may be very small houses.

Another year, however; perhaps even another six months, will see most films confined to a single adaptation, either silent or talkie. Only those that appear certain of approval abroad will be made silent after they are made with dialogue.

THE spectacle of people virtually hanging to the rafters of a theater to behold Shakespearean performances is one of the thrills to be remembered out of the 1928-29 stage show season. "Hamlet" drew an overflowing audience last Friday evening, and it was an audience gripped by the spell of classic drama authoritatively presented.

There is a welcome satisfaction in viewing something that is done with positiveness. It is a lesson that the movies at the present time might well take home to themselves. There is a devastating feebleness about the way that so many stories are presented in pictures, and the way that so many portrayals are enacted. It is a feebleness that is deep-rooted because it generally pertains to the picture as a whole. Weak finishes, of which many are seen nowadays, are the most concrete evidence of this fundamental flaw. Most plots manage to blow up in a hectic display of theatrical fireworks, while the audience groans and wonders.

Too much uncertainty in the making of pictures, too many cooks, and too much argument is the cause of most of this weakness. What goes on behind the scenes can't be hidden, even under the mask of what is termed "good hokum." Lack of conviction growing out of the lack of properly invested authority is undoubtedly the root of the evil. Even a bad picture might seem better if you thought that the person who made it really believed it, and wasn't just kidding himself.

NATURAL TYPE ROLE PREFERRED

Every-day Girl Most Fun to Portray, Says Actress in "Submarine"

Whatever a character may be—just as long as it is human and natural — Dorothy Revier enjoys playing it. The role she doesn't like to play is that which is unnatural and strained.

"That is why," she declares, "I enjoyed my part in 'Submarine'—because there are thousands of girls just like the girl in this picture. She did the things—not always good things, either, for she was rather bad—but she did the things that a real woman would do, a woman, I mean, who is not a mere puppet of artificial tendencies."

Dorothy Revier, who was born in San Francisco, gained a very general conception of life from study of people. She is a natural student of human nature and since the poet's contention that such is the proper study of mankind, she doubtless chose the wisest course. Then she became a dancer and after a time a member of a Russian troupe of ballet artists which toured the Pacific Coast, worked in big prologs, etc. Here again Dorothy, while practicing assiduously the different steps and gyrations of the ballet Russe, was able to continue her study of people. Perhaps she already had a premonition that she would sometimes work on the screen.

Eventually she did and finally became a contract player with Columbia Pictures. She pays a charming tribute to Harry Cohn, vice-president in charge of production of that company:

"What little success I may have attained," she says, "I owe to Mr. Harry Cohn; his faith in my ability and his confidence."

And Miss Revier has become popular. She has played in many Columbia Pictures, and in films for First National, Fox and others. She recently completed the role of Lady DeWinters in Douglas Fairbanks's production, "The Iron Mask." Fairbanks's choice of Miss Revier for this important role is evidence of her popularity and ability as well.

The phenomenal success of "Submarine," in which Jack Holt and Ralph Graves play the leading masculine roles, is again evidenced by the fact that it is now playing a return engagement at Pantages Theater—an unprecedented event.

"GAG" MEN MAY TAKE HOPE

New Opportunity for Ludicrous Fun Offered in Sound Film, Says Richard Wallace

"It's one glaring fault," said Richard Wallace, the motion-picture director. "Stage technique won't remedy it, and neither will what we know about movie making."

The man who made "The Shopworn Angel," feature attraction at the Metropolitan now, was discussing the weakness of dialogue in sound pictures. "They got away with it, night after night, in the theater," he continued. "When a line was bad, an actor who was any kind of actor sloughed through it somehow and went on to his next line.

"They got away with it on the screen because the subtitles carried all the important speeches, and if a player made a bad one, nobody ever knew it, anyway.

"But now, with continuous dialogue, a stupid or purposeless remark is about as unostentatious as a house afire. The answer is—what?"

Wallace says the talkie he is most anxious to see is the one with rapid-moving comedy from beginning to end. Himself no tyro at making films of humorous intent—all of his previous efforts, indeed, have been comedies—the director is curious to discover how far apart gags will have to be spaced to register effectively with audiences.

"All the clever ideas which used to be verboten because they needed sound to be expressive will come into their own now," he explained. "Creaking shoes were never funny in the silent movies, but they may be henceforth."

Wallace is at present tackling the not unimposing task of directing Maurice Chevalier, idol of the French stage, in his first American production. This picture, "Innocents of Paris," will be unwound in four versions when all is said and done. Two silent—one for America and one for Europe—and two audible, in which the star will sing.

"Chevalier," added Wallace, with a twinkle, "will not sing the same chansons in the English talkie that he will in the French."

The director describes "The Shopworn Angel" as serio-tragic in theme and content. The story is familiar enough—what story, he asks, is not?—but in his treatment of it he has sought to emphasize the human aspect, penetrating the minds and hearts of a simple, sincere American boy in love with a chorus girl wise beyond her time, and developing them according to his lights.

The contrasting natures of Gary Cooper and Nancy Carroll, who portray the two protagonists of the romance, were amusingly commented upon by Wallace.

"The boy is unquestionably a find for the silent pictures," he said. "He has a charmingly naive manner, all his own, of pantomiming his thoughts. This was his lightest role to date. And he approached it with some misgivings. Often he would finish a piece of 'business'—in the doing of which he had held us all fascinated, so delightfully ingenuous was his way of going about it—and look up to inquire innocently, 'Was it all right?'

"For the talkies, he will have to apply himself to make his voice fit in with each type of character he

Songs of White Way Cabarets Lend Tuneful Note to Sound Film

"The Broadway Melody" Arrives

Next at Grauman's Chinese Theater in Hollywood is to be the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production, "The Broadway Melody," virtually a musical comedy dealing with New York night life put on the screen in sound form. Four theme songs run through the picture. Charles King, Broadway musical comedy favorite, has the leading role. Bessie Love and Anita Page, as sketched above by Times Staff Artist A. L. Ewing, are seen in colorful roles.

Baxter Finds Westerns Not So Unpleasant

For the past six years, Warner Baxter has been valiantly dodging westerns.

He didn't mind donning the spurs and chaps occasionally and galloping through an epic of strong, silent men and the great open spaces, but he found sticking to the saddle permanently a great strain.

For after all, Warner started his professional career as an actor. He was one of the featured players at the old Morosco, that theater which gave Los Angeles theatergoers some of their best dramatic enjoyment a few years ago.

When his contract with Paramount came to an end a few months ago, he chuckled with glee. "No more westerns if I free-lance forever," he swore to himself.

Then he signed to play the role of Allesandro in "Ramona," story of the old Southwest. Well, Alessandro was not a cowboy, but he was an Indian and savored of the great outdoors, which Warner had taken his oath to forsake.

BOOTS, SPURS AGAIN

Next came the role of Cisco Kid in "In Old Arizona," the Fox talking picture at the Criterion. Boots and spurs again. Warner grumbled to himself, but decided that the opportunity was too good to pass up.

And so it has proved.

"In Old Arizona," launched as a two-reeler, based on a O. Henry short story, turned out to be the first Fox all-talking feature picture. It established Warner as an actor in talking pictures, something for which not quite a few in Hollywood would give their best pair of boots.

Fox has given him a contract. He is now playing in "Through Different Eyes," a talking courtroom drama, and it is said that Fox is searching for a new, worthwhile story for him, in which Warner would probably carry the role of French-Canadian with a dialect. Probably more outdoor stuff.

Warner doesn't care. He talks now about doing roles with some character to them. "I don't like these dress-parade affairs," he confesses. "It's much more fun to do a good character role."

He is enthusiastic about talking pictures from the actor's viewpoint.

MORE CONTINUITY

"Some supervisor or cutting-room expert can't step in, as in the old days, and ruin your characterization," he explains. "You can build up continuity of character, without the premonition that it will be cut. You see, it will be practically impossible to cut out dialogue once in and as dialogue and the film are on the same strip, everything stays in.

"Another thing that has happened to me often in silent pictures. In doing a certain scene, in which I was registering indignation, I might say, 'you contemptible cur!' Perhaps when the picture was released the subtitle had me saying, 'I love you dearly.' And the critics would razz me for a bad performance. How would they know that originally I had shown anger?

"They cannot do that in talkies. Once you say something, it's there and no subtitle writer can change it around and ruin your characterization."

One of the reasons why "In Old Arizona" shows such fine continuity, which Warner declares it does, was that the picture was built up from two reels to its final length, not torn down from a twenty-reel production to a twelve.

"We worked toward a certain point, we built as we went along," he said.

DIALECTS USED

"In Old Arizona" is the first talking picture in which dialect is used. This was an experiment. No one knew how the eccentric "mike," bugbear of actors and producers alike, would take to dialect.

Warner has a dialect in his talking sequences. "It seemed as if I were talking and acting on the stage again," he said contentedly. "As a matter of fact, I was about to give up pictures and go back to the stage when this break arrived. Now, I am perfectly happy just as I am."

WHITE SHADOWS DEEPEN

Van Dyke Finds Many of Natives Used in Tahiti Film Now Dead; Vanishing Race, He Says

BY MARQUIS BUSBY

Since W. S. Van Dyke visited Tahiti to film "White Shadows in the South Seas," the white shadows have reached deeper into this romantic, langorous island of the southern waters.

Van Dyke has just returned from his second jaunt to Tahiti after completing the Ramon Novarro picture, "The Pagan." In the short span of a year many of the natives he had used in "White Shadows" had died.

"There had been a bad epidemic of influenza and measles there which worked havoc among the natives," Van Dyke said. "In spite of their glorious physiques these quaint and charming people are not strong constitutionally. They fall easy victims to disease. This is illustrated by the fact that none of the white residents of the island were affected in the least by the epidemic.

VANISHING RACE

"Tahiti represents one of the last picturesque stands of the South Seas, but the gentle Polynesian is a vanishing race. Even in our day it is not improbable that it will disappear entirely.

"Do you remember the pearl diver I used in "White Shadows"? He was a splendid fellow. When I returned to the island he was just a bundle of skin and bones. One of the native girls who played a love scene in the picture had died.

"It isn't much wonder that disease is prevalent on the island. Somewhere on that small island it is raining every moment of the day. Where nature is so profuse with its fruits and flowers there is bound to be much rotting vegetation, and the natives do not know how to take care of themselves, as do the whites. They are like children."

FOLLOW STEAMER

Van Dyke terms his two trips to the South Seas just two trips too many. Yet I'm not sure that he means it. He told with considerable relish how the natives all swarmed down to the steamer when he returned with another company, and how these same hospitable Polynesians piled into tipsy outriggers and followed the outgoing steamer as it passed the reef into the open sea.

Incidentally, this tall, rugged director, suggesting the adventurous explorer, is Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's chief globe trotter. His next trip will be into the African jungles to film "Trader Horn."

Fewer natives were used in "The Pagan" than in "White Shadows," which is having a downtown run at Loew's State Theater this week. Van Dyke had some of his native crew back to handle the lights and the props.

"If the natives enjoy working they put their heart and soul into it," he smiled. "If they don't like the work nothing can force them. Their wants are few, and they don't need money. I think I gave my washwoman about $10 for laundry while I was on the island. When I left she brought me a gift which must have cost more than that. They are generous to a fault."

BREATHLESS WONDER

One of the most interesting experiences of the recent trip was exhibiting "White Shadows" at the little theater in Tahiti. All of the natives who took part in the picture and were still to be found were guests of honor. They stared at themselves in breathless wonder. The film was also exhibited aboard the French gunboat Cassiopee, anchored off Tahiti. One of the spectators at the island showing was Gouveneur Morris, the writer, who has a winter home on Tahiti.

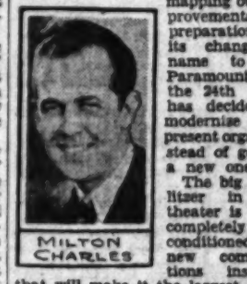
In "The Pagan" company were Ramon Novarro, Renee Adoree, Donald Crisp, Dorothy Janis and a force of technicians. The only set erected on the island was a ship's cabin. Miss Adoree's lodging was used for a scene, and the interiors of actual native houses were used.

Out of the Tahitan music, a combination of missionary hymns and native chants, Novarro wrote a theme song for the picture, which he sings.

'MET' NAME CHANGED TO PARAMOUNT

Rechristening to Occur 24th Inst.; Great Organ Reconditioned

Pipe organs, like violins, improve with age. They get mellow. That's why the Metropolitan Theater, in mapping out improvements in preparation for its change of name to the Paramount on the 24th inst. has decided to modernize its present organ instead of getting a new one.



MILTON CHARLES

The big Wurlitzer in the theater is being completely reconditioned and new combinations installed that will make it the largest organ in Los Angeles, according to the management.

When Milton Charles, the virtuoso who assumes the console after the rechristening of the Sixth and Hill playhouse, rests his hands and feet upon the keys and pedals of the reconstructed organ for the dedication concert, and awakens 800 instruments into life until they throb into the crescendo of a 200-piece symphony orchestra it will be a far cry from the lonely plaint of the tibia plana, carved from the shinbone of a wild ass, which wailed in the ears of scattered desert folks more than 6000 years ago. Yet the one is the direct lineal descendant of the other.

The principle underlying both instruments is the same. Air is set in motion in a pipe or set of pipes and emitted through the palet or lips, which makes the pipe give forth musical sound. This principle is understood by every boy who cuts a twig from a tree, hollows it out, makes a lip and blows into it.

Early organ makers, attempting to

PLANS FOR PREMIERE UNDER WAY

Sid Grauman Prepares for Opening of 'The Broadway Melody'

Gala preparations are well under way for the spectacular premiere with which Sid Grauman will introduce "The Broadway Melody," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's all talking, singing and sound production, scheduled as the next big picture to be given an elaborate showing in Grauman's Chinese Theater.

The spectacular production of New York's Great White Way is to follow "Noah's Ark," Warner Brothers' Vitaphone film, which has its final performances scheduled for Wednesday. The date for the premiere of "The Broadway Melody" has not yet been definitely set, as an interval of a few days probably will be necessary to complete preparations for the elaborate premiere of the new production.

"The Broadway Melody" is the first production to tax to the full extent the entire sound-stage equipment at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios. It is an original story by Edmund Goulding, the playwright, telling the tale of two girls from the "kerosene circuits" who stormed Manhattan's Broadway.

Its scenes are laid amid the glittering surroundings of New York's cabarets and shows. Practically an entire New York musical revue, with galaxies of beautiful girls, is reproduced in the all-synchronized picture. Catchy songs by famous composers are featured in the production.

LENI THRILLER IS INTERESTING

"Last Warning" Mystery Individually Effective

Irving Cummings's Direction Effort Shrewdly Handled

"Synthetic Sin" is Colleen Moore's Best

BY NORBERT LUSK

NEW YORK, Jan. 12.—Some new pictures grace Broadway this week but all are good with exceptions. The one which aroused the greatest expectations was, of course, "The Last Warning" at the Colony because of Paul Leni's dramatic direction of "The Cat and the Canary" and "The Man Who Laughs."

The new picture director strates so strongly his ability to infuse his work with personality that if his name were not off the screen his hand would be apparent to the discerning.

Leni's use of camera angles, of windy corridors and minutest detail is as evident as in his former productions, yet the new picture falls short of all that was hoped for. This is largely due to the unsatisfactory denouement which, though developed with accelerated tempo and crescendo of suspense, is nevertheless unsatisfactory. The spectator is told who the murderer is but so much else is omitted that the revelation scarcely explains. At least one person who sees the picture cannot recall, no matter how hard he tries, just what the murderer was.

EXCELLENT ACTING

However, "The Last Warning" consistently sustains interest and will take a high place among mystery films in spite of the dissatisfaction caused by its denouement. Excellent acting is the rule in this picture, outstanding performances being registered by Montague Love, probably because the atmosphere of madness and mystery is stressed at the expense of subtlety and sincerity.

The introduction of sound, though well planned, adds little to the eeriness nor suspense, the chief drawing power of the film being unfortunately enhanced. The sound is far below the usual quality of other talking pictures, the voices having reverberating and unnatural rather than colloquial tones. "The Last Warning" is especially disappointing as a "tour de force" after the sensational comic flight, but the spectator is prepared for this by one in advising that it is not to be missed.

"Romance of the Underworld" at the Roxy, naturally challenges comparison with "Dressed to Kill," because of Irving Cummings's direction of the former. The material of the current picture is inferior to that of the latter. However, Cummings has displayed much shrewd humor in the romance of the Underworld, which has the equal advantage of good acting, smooth continuity, pungent titles to aid the story and the added value of Jean Arthur in the cast.

Elliott's casual delivery, a repetition of the role he created in several pictures, has been more skillfully and realistically developed. In many of the pictures capturing audiences from start and never letting it go, Elliott was especially successful in the showing of the picture before the afternoon before a capacity audience which responded to his every humorous tactic. Altogether the picture is considered a success, just a shade less delightful than its predecessor.

TITLES AMUSING

"Synthetic Sin" at the Paramount has likewise come in for praise on the score of its Broadway atmosphere, those critics who object to giving the screen adaptation palms of superiority. The titles are attributable to the subtitle writer's crisp, expert direction and a measure of care in the entire production. Many of the comments in response of Monday night audiences to Tom Reed's titles were so often that they too did their part in adding to the merriment that they received the verdict that the best thing in Colleen Moore's best is the titles.

OLD PARTNERSHIP RENEWED

Fitzmaurice Joins Sam Goldwyn Forces as Director of Artists; Has Three Hits in Row

It's going to be a case of "auld acquaintance" as it was when Fitzmaurice two months hence hangs up his hat at United Artists and goes into heavy conference with Sam Goldwyn.

Fitzmaurice yesterday completed at two-year contract as director, his first picture to be made under agreement with Samuel Goldwyn, his old friend and associate.

It was "Fitz" and Sam who gave to the world "The Dark Angel," Vilma Banky's first starring picture, "A Thief in Paradise," with Ronald Colman and Vilma Banky and other films of first rank several years ago.

Two years ago the director went to work for First National. He found time, under an agreement previously arrived at, to do occasional other pictures. One was "A Night of Love," Banky-Colman vehicle for Goldwyn.

The last few months, however, he has been terribly busy at First National. There was "Lilac Time" with Colleen Moore, a great hit.

Then "The Barker," now at the Carthay Circle Theater, and termed another success.

The Fitzmaurice direction of Milton Sills star, was particularly praised. Lately came "The Captive Woman," which gives Dorothy Mackaill the big opportunity of her picture career. This has not yet been released, but it is said to be still another of the "hit" classification.

CONTRACT COMPLETED

Despite these successes, Fitzmaurice is glad his contract is at an end.

"It will be good to be working with my old friend, Sam Goldwyn, again," he said, his black eyes twinkling merrily. "We have a great time. We work out a story, we argue about this and that, then finally we decide what is best and we

INTERNATIONAL ROLE FITTING

Alden Gay in Alienation Tempest

England Barred Actress from Contracts

Now Plays Titled Widow in Cohan Comedy

BY ALMA WHITAKER

Alden Gay is the tall, lithe, aristocratic Lady Amy Duckworth who proves an international social lubricant in "So This Is London!" at the El Capitan Theater.

But she is more than that. Quite innocently, she was a monkey wrench thrown into international dramatic relations just about a year ago—all because she played a French role so excellently for $30 a week at London's Q Theater, which is a firmly established theater mart, upon which our local one was probably modeled. The sum of $30 a week is the flat rate all its actors receive in the cause of art.

You see, Alden went over for a holiday—in the midst of an actor's unemployment problem. Actor's Equity over there had enforced a ruling that no alien should be given a role that an English actor could play as well—outside of stars. The Q manager, unaware, invited Alden to take the role. She should have had a permit—but didn't. And so . .

CONCEDED POINT

"The Ministry of Labor stepped in," explains Alden ruefully. "They let me play the two-weeks' engagement, but denied me the chance to accept three other contracts. I guess they did what they considered right but . . . well, anyway, I naturally conceded their point and came home. I was sorry, because I love England and the English . . just as I do as Lady Duckworth in this play.

"Imagine my embarrassment," she laughed, "when I landed in New York, to be singled out by the reporters above dozens of important people on board—because of this occurrence. I really wasn't vengeful about it, only disappointed. But, oh, the publicity I received. And the result . . . I don't approve of it at all. I think our profession should be open to all.

"The Actors' Equity in this country promptly retaliated with some drastic new by-laws against alien actors in this country. For instance, before they may play a role they must have, before the new ruling, already played 100 weeks in this country. Then there must be a six months' wait between engagements unless another can be obtained right away so that the work is consecutive without break. Oh, there are numerous other points."

STORM STILL RAGES

Although we hadn't heard so much about it out here, the storm raged for weeks back East and still sizzles. So wasn't Alden Gay a suitable person to be chosen for that international role in "So This Is London?"

She is, you know, Mrs. Kenneth Thomson in private life. This case of hers was written into a Peggy Wood story in the Post—where it was stated that Alden had been "deported."

"Of course that wasn't meant to be misleading," explains Alden, "for as a matter of fact, I could have stayed in England as long as I liked. Everyone was quite polite and nice and I left of my own free will. I shall go back some day and I don't want the English to think I caused trouble."

Neighborhood Houses

Figueroa, "Varsity;" Manchester, "Outcast;" "Brotherly Love," Ritz, and "Naughty Baby," Uptown.

Jolson Starts Tears Flowing

No picture ever made has brought more tears to the eyes than the "Singing Fool" with Al Jolson, now playing its fourth record-breaking week at the Tower Theater.

The emotion-stirring situation, are numerous. The most effective, however, are those that show Al Jolson and little David Lee together.

The scenes at the theater where the hero goes on with the show even though his heart is breaking will impress themselves on the mind for years to come.

Josephine Dunn portrays the role of the heartless wife and Betty Bronson is the cigarette girl.

LODER REALIZES DREAM

John Loder, the handsome young English ex-officer brought to Hollywood by Paramount, has achieved one of his lifetime dreams through portraying the part of a westerner in Jack Holt's new Zane Grey picture, "Sunset Pass."

Harry Carroll Revue Moves to Hillstreet

Harry Carroll, $100,000-per-year composer and producer, whose 1928-29 song, dance and fun concoction headlines at the Hillstreet Theater this week, once worked for $18 per week.

As a child interested in music, he was given piano lessons by his mother. Later he was placed under one of Pittsburgh's leading teachers and progressed so rapidly that before he was twelve he was playing music which recitalists term "advanced intermediate" grade.

When little more than a youngster, he went to New York determined to make his own way in the world. His first job was playing a piano in a motion-picture theater, and such in 1910 were not what they are today. His weekly salary was $18.

On this amount, young Carroll kept himself in presentable clothes, but stinted on food and living quarters. He paid $10 for half-hour piano lessons, until the teacher learned what hardships the young student was undergoing to meet the fee. The instructor cut his figure in half, and Harry began to eat regularly.

With Carroll's current revue are William Demarest, Estelle Collette, California Collegians, Vera Marsh, the Donovan Girls and others.

ESTELLE TAYLOR

Estelle Taylor starts work Tuesday on "East is East" opposite Lon Chaney.

Current Films

The new films of the week are two in number.

"The Shopworn Angel," featuring Nancy Carroll and Gary Cooper, a synchronised picture from Paramount studio directed by Richard Wallace, new at the Metropolitan, is one.

"Prep and Pep," a Fox Films release featuring David Rollins and Nancy Drexel, at the Boulevard, is the second new picture of the week. "Prep and Pep" deals with the younger generation and is directed by David Butler.

The first downtown showing of "White Shadows of the South Seas" is occurring at Loew's State Theater, while "The Rescue" with Ronald Colman is held over at United Artists and "Old Arizona" at the Criterion.

"The Barker" continues at the Carthay Circle although the end of its run is near; "Noah's Ark" at the Chinese closes Wednesday; the Tower shows "The Singing Fool" and Warner Brothers Theater announces the final fortnight of "My Man," starring Fannie Brice. At the neighborhood houses are "Brotherly Love," Ritz; "Varsity," Figueroa; "Naughty Baby," Uptown, and "Outcast," Manchester.

Boulevard

A saucy, audacious comedy dealing with the younger generation and its high spirits is "Prep and Pep" at the Boulevard. It is another David Butler-directed film for Fox with David Rollins and Nancy Drexel.

Carthay Circle

With its atmosphere of tawdry and rowdy carnival life, "The Barker" continues to intrigue interest at the Carthay Circle.

Chinese

"Noah's Ark" is to close its run at the Chinese on Wednesday, when the big playhouse will be dark for about a week. "The Broadway Melody" is to follow "Noah," but the premiere date has not been set.

Criterion

Exemplifying all that is new in talking-picture technique, "Old Arizona," a rousing story of the old Southwest with its picturesque natural setting, continues at the Criterion. It is a Fox Movietone film with Edmund Lowe, Warner Baxter and Dorothy Burgess.

Loew's State

The first downtown showing of "White Shadows of the South Seas," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's picture of life in Tahiti, is occurring at Loew's State Theater this week.

Metropolitan

Richard Wallace's directorial effort, "The Shopworn Angel," a Paramount sound picture with Nancy Carroll and Gary Cooper is at the Metropolitan. This will be the last week the Met is known as such. Next week, its name will be changed to the Paramount Theater.

Tower

Still drawing crowds is "The Singing Fool," Al Jolson singing picture for Warner Brothers, at the Tower Theater.

United Artists

Ronald Colman and Lily Damita in "The Rescue," a United Artists production from Joseph Conrad's story, have proved so popular at the United Artists Theater that the picture has been booked for a third week.

Warners

Fannie Brice, who has been breaking records at Warner Brothers Theater in her Vitaphone talking-singing picture "My Man," enters upon her final fortnight today. This period will also mark the last two weeks of Larry Ceballos's stage revue "Orange Grove."

Plays Romantic Role

Lowell Sherman

Who appears in the Los Angeles Repertory Theater production of "The Guardsman" at the Figueroa Playhouse tomorrow night.

But I have a feeling that the day of declaiming Shakespeare has passed and that if it were done colloquially and naturally it would seem much more of a story than it ordinarily does. I don't mean that I'd interlard the lines with any of our snappy, uptodate expressions or refer to Ophelia as 'that little golddigger' but I mean that the lines might be read as if they had been written by Eugene O'Neill or Philip Barry."

Buddy Rogers Film Booked

Charles (Buddy) Rogers in "Varsity," Paramount talking picture, in which he is featured with Mary Brian, is the current attraction at the Figueroa Theater. "Varsity" is a vividly entertaining story of life on the campus, depicting an appealing youthful romance. Monday "Brotherly Love," latest co-starring vehicle for Karl Dane and George K. Arthur, opens a four-day engagement. The new laugh-inducer is the highly gagged story of a Utopian jail, where football replaces the rockpile, and the prisoners fairly fight to keep from getting pardoned.

BILTMORE'S ART EXHIBIT

Large Showing from New York Includes Notable Old and Modern Paintings

BY ARTHUR MILLIER

Once more the Biltmore Salon and the Galleria Real of the hotel becomes a point of attraction for interested throngs who have learned that a great showing of old and modern paintings, especially sent from New York, is to be seen in those readily accessible galleries.

The eighty paintings on exhibition come from the American Art Dealers Associated, a group of firms with headquarters in New York, which has endeavored to supply something for all tastes. Thus the show ranges from Italian Renaissance pictures through eighteenth century English and American portraits to contemporary works, with interspersed examples of nineteenth century American painting. The wall of portraits in the gallery, which attracts crowds of visitors, is more interesting for the personalities of the subjects than for unusual qualities of painting.

The smallest and the largest paintings—Millet's "Surprised Bather" and Jacopo Bassano's "Feast of Dives"—are easily two of the most interesting works to an art critic. It was in such tiny and usually early works as this little 8x10-inch panel that Millet developed his sense of monumental form and simple composition that was later to immortalize his peasants. To some viewers it will only seem an unattractive nude woman about to run into the bushes, but your connoisseur will recognize the tradition of many a "Susanna Surprized by the Elders," that favorite theme of centuries of European painters who made use of the story's plastic possibilities. Always in this theme three movements are combined—the cessation of bathing, the movement away of flight, and the fear-born movement of turning the eyes to watch the elders. Here is an intellectual problem for the artist which must be plastically solved in terms of the human form. I dwell on this because it offers a key to better understanding of plastic traditions in painting and provides an approach to many modern paintings that have discarded any pretense to a literary subject.

HISTORIC CANVAS

The Bassano is a large canvas which has hung for many years on loan at the Metropolitan Museum, from which it was withdrawn for this exhibition. It is said to be a splendid example of this artist, and, in the history of painting, marks the change of interest which began in Venice and culminated in Spain with Velasquez. The painter is working toward realistic light. This prostrate Lazarus, licked by the dog, these people at the table, this standing boy, are actual people such as one sees in Velasquez's "Forge of Vulcan." The long line running straight from the foreshortened Lazarus, at the lower left, to the seated Dives at the upper right, broken abruptly in the center by the boy, is scarcely a great piece of composition. But the forms—so many solos in paint—have grandeur, and the work is beautifully painted and in splendid condition.

Now let us pause a moment at the entrance to the gallery and jump suddenly into the present day. A head of a child, "The Trapper's Daughter," by the American artist George Luks, is surely one of the finest works in the show, a great little Luks. The collector of American painting should not let this remain too long. It will some day adorn a fine collection.

Before entering the main gallery let us try the quiet one to the left. Here we see some Spanish women's portraits by Robert Henri. The vivacity of the drawing and painting we see at a glance, but the color somehow fails to "click." Is it their fault or is it because there is so much unusual color in this little girl in a red coat astride a tiny donkey, who is hung in their midst? What is it that holds one before this latter work which at first seems almost raw in color? It proves to be just this masterly blending of sharp red and grass green. William Glackens, who painted her, studied Renoir long and hard and learned precious secrets from that master of painting. That is how one real artist learns from another. What? You don't like it? Try and return to it a few times.

TWO BY DAVIES

Over the mantel hangs an unusual painting in tender color of young boys and girls on a hilltop. They are curiously unreal—one is not sure whether they went to the hill, were mysteriously born of the hill, or even whether they might not just be some school pupils let out to play on the hill. Something of all three perhaps—which is like the mind of the late Arthur B. Davies, who painted them. One hears a faint echo of the Greek frieze. In the Galleria, as we came past, we saw another strange picture which we must not fail to see again. There seven delicate yet ripe young female figures, the color of dark gold, play in the cold sea's lip at gray dawn. Again the frieze, this time with definitely musical spacing.

But, a moment before leaving this room, what is that bright and massive frame surrounding? Is it a still from "The Ten Commandments"? Ah, a famous name, the envy of the old Royal Academy in its time—Alma Tadema R.A. And what saith he? If we read close we see the title, "Betwixt Fear and Hope." A mild old Greek warrior lies on his couch, drinking rather hard. Of course, he is not really a Greek warrior, he can't fool us that he is aught but a benign old cockney who is posing instead of selling pencils, and he will shortly spend his tuppence for bitters at the "King's Head." Meanwhile he bides his time watching the coyly bashful damsel in the nice new Greek dress who stands in the front of the stage, facing the audience and fingering a bouquet. What fear, what hope, and why betwixt? We have sent a query to our Washington bureau and when the answer comes will be happy to supply this information if a stamped, addressed envelope is inclosed. How times do change!

TOO MANY PEOPLE

This tour of the exhibition is becoming such a chatty affair I fear we never shall get to that row of eighteenth-century portraits. The crowd seems thick around them. Those magic names! Reynolds—his own portrait by himself; Gainsborough, Stuart, Raeburn, they certainly do attract an audience. Suppose we continue our zig-zag course of personal caprice, remarking on the things we really like best. Then, perhaps next week, we can do the proper thing by those serious portraits of Sir Walter Scott and others.

Walter Ufer we have seen before and his picture of horses and people in some Taos street is good Ufer. Daniel Garber is at his decorative best in "Shadows." An old stone house, the usual Garber river, a finely drawn tree and then the pattern of warm light and cool shadow.

Jonas Lie, a snow scene, "Silver Morn," as fine an example of typical American snow painting as you could wish. Painted in delicate tones of blue and white he has yet composed his picture of firm, massive forms.

A marine by Waugh, "To Windward," has more real sea movement than many of his more recent productions where he seeks pattern which often becomes static. Gifford Beal, Ernest Lawson, J. Alden Weir, John La Farge and others that interest us.

And before you leave look at "The Beach," by Maurice Prendergast, and see whether you like his pattern of figures and color spots that weave over the canvas as well as we do. More of this anon.

At Country Club

Paintings by Alice Gibson Hornby are on exhibition in the Sunset Canyon Country Club during January and February. Mrs. Hornby has found time to raise four children and still practice her painting. She was a pupil of the old Los Angeles School of Art and Design. Many of her works are in homes in the San Fernando Valley.

News of the Art World

Many a struggling art dealer thought he had a picture sold when it finally hung on the client's wall. But when Andrew Mellon phones Sir Joseph to come and get the large Cowper Madonna . . . there's a situation for you. In other words the announcements that Mr. Mellon had bought the famous Raphael—and they were long and numerous—were previous. He denies owning it.

Zubiaurres at Museum

Now we have two exhibits of the brilliant contemporary Spanish painters, Ramon and Valentin Zubiaurre. The new one has just opened at the Los Angeles Museum. The show at the Newhouse Galleries was noted last week.

Murals in Pasadena

Four large mural paintings on California themes were installed last week in the new banking room of the First National Bank of Pasadena at Madison and Colorado streets. They are the work of Alson Clark, well-known artist living in Pasadena, and depict "Oil," "Motion Pictures," "Citrus Industry" and "Shipping."

Desert Fabrics

One of the most interesting art exhibits of the moment is the display of women's clothing in Bullock's windows, the fabrics, designs and color-schemes of which were found on the Mojave Desert. There is a field for the artist!

Shell Mosaics

A true artist can make art out of anything. Who would think of very beautiful mosaics made with shells? Mrs. John Jay Chapman, the originator of this new-old art, was inspired to make use of beautiful shells found at Sanibel Island off the coast of Florida. She recalled the frieze of shells and looking-glass in the Nizam Palace at Haiderabad, India, and being a thorough artist, was able to work out some beautiful mosaics set in cement. Her work was placed in the homes of Mrs. W. S. Vanderbilt and Mrs. Stanford White and sponsored by the New York architect, Charles Platt. One of her shell panels has recently been placed in Christ Church, New York. This is exceptionally fine and original decorative art with unusual possibilities for California patios, loggias, etc. A group of these panels are being shown at the Public Library, which we strongly recommend art-lovers to see.

Bischoff at Artland

Franz A. Bischoff is showing some of his latest canvases at Artland this month. His subjects range from north to south on the California seacoast, the high Sierras of California and the mountains in Utah.

World Camera Show

The International Photographic Exhibition, under the auspices of the Los Angeles Camera Pictorialists, is now being shown at the Los Angeles Museum.

PASADENA'S ANNUAL SHOW

PASADENA'S art world is principally peopled by dear old ladies and gentlemen. If there are young Pasadenans interested in art one does not often encounter them in the galleries.

Being still young enough to feel mischievous I cherish a desire to plant a really explosive exhibit of rip-roaring modern art in the center of Pasadena—purely as a Panurgian exploit.

But the Pasadena Art Institute knows its public and so in the current second annual exhibition of paintings by artists of California it has weeded out the pictures that forgot to brush their hair and say "please," and put them aloft in two rooms of their own. Then the politer efforts, like well-disciplined seminary girls, march demurely and quite prettily through the main floor galleries. After a certain age one does not climb many stairs and so is saved the strain of indignation.

However, the level is fairly consistent. If there are not many profound works neither is there a crop of hopelessly ineffectual ones. Downstairs works that especially impress me are Hanson Putthuff's "Rainbow Pool," "Mountain Fastness," by Paul Lauritz (honorable mention;) Herbert Von Blarcom Acker's portrait of a woman in a white smock, and the very quiet but nicely modulated "Yvonne" of Ferdinand Kaufmann that gained the Harold A. Streator Memorial Prize of $500. Mabel Alvarez's "Zinnias and Fruit" (honorable mention;) the gleaming "Gypsy Women," by Millard Sheets, "Lily Pool," by Colin Campbell Cooper, "Navajo Girl" by S. E. Vaughn, "Old Street in Mexico" by Alson Clark, Frank M. Moore's "Spring Mists and Dogwood," an adobe interior with Indians by J. H. Sharp, and Roscoe Shrader's "Pageant of a Mountain Camp" are other good things.

"Evening in Florence" by M. Askinasy, awarded the Mrs. Henry A. Everett Prize of $300, has much charm, building up its design of old houses interestingly and preserving a twilit tone throughout that is flooded with quiet color. Elliot Torry in his portrait of three little girls all dressed alike in white and lavender should be highly commended for the thorough way in which he solved this difficult problem of presentation. It is both original and complete in composition and beautifully painted. Antonin Sterba's "Self Portrait" is a sterling bit of observation well set down. In the hall Mabel Alvarez's "Sisters" is rightly proving one of the most popular works here.

Upstairs the breath of newer conceptions of painting is felt in the fine massing and color of Katherine Skeele's "Taos Indians" and Clarence Hinkle's "Coast Line." Rowena Meeks Abdy's rather posteresque Yosemite picture, Edouard Vysekal's "Mexican Children," Loren Barton's figure-group on a hill, Barse Miller's stirring mountain, a charming figure study by Gertrude C. Orde, are other pictures that stand out. Jeanette Maxfield, Anni Baldaugh, Jane McDuffie Thurston, Mary L. Pottenger, Eleanor Colburn and Charles M. Reiffel should also be mentioned, although Reiffel seems to have missed his customary high mark in this landscape.

As a member of the jury I noticed that two pictures had not appeared when I reviewed the show. One was the splendid large study of an old negro by Einar Hansen, the other an interesting decorative, semiabstract figure composition on plaster. No doubt they will be fitted in somewhere by the time this reaches print. The show is a good one but it could be still better if more of our leading artists sent works. Pasadenans are making a fine effort in the direction of prize money. One could wish the best artists from the north would send work, too.

ALLAN G. CRAM paints California in fiesta mood and exhibits this month at the Kievits Galleries, Pasadena. He shines best in the two large portraits of Santa Barbara ladies in Spanish costume for which he borrows the Spaniards' method of placing the figure against a background of hill and houses, done in bright color. His dominant red is rich and warming. There is an architect somewhere in Mr. Cram, who likes to draw in line and this gives charm to the shapes of the coast mountains in the backgrounds of his pictures of western riders. His pencil drawings will appeal to those who like a brilliant, clean effect, which he gains by contrasting silvery lines in the light with black ones in the shadow. His subjects here are trees, cowboys and buildings. At his best he is bright and clever, but he sometimes gives us little beyond the thin performance of a typical architectural rendering.

"Pastoral Dells and Peaks"

From the painting by Arthur B. Davies in the Dr. Dorothea Moore Collection at California Art Club.

ECHOES OF DREAM WORLD

Davies, Unique American Artist, Represented in Several Local Collections

The late Arthur B. Davies, whose death in Florence, Italy, was reported until two months after it occurred, occupied a unique position in American painting that his works will doubtless be honored and treasured. His special flavor may just now be enjoyed in Los Angeles collections.

In October, William Preston Harrison knowing nothing of Davies's death purchased a fine painting, "Springtime the Dreamer," which he added to his gift collection at the Los Angeles Museum. It is now on exhibition there.

An early local admirer of Davies's work, is Dr. Dorothea Moore, and that portion of her collection which is the principal attraction this month at the California Art Club, includes three paintings by him, which fully reveal his delicate yet rich imagination. The world to Davies was a place of magic. The Sierras evoked half-real pagan creatures, who carried on mysterious rites, befitting their remoteness and grandeur. Two of the Moore pictures follow this vein while the third, "Shore Figures," shows us a dream world, at once spring, a time of spirit of beauty [illegible] through the mind. Several sketches of landscape [illegible] vies's poetic color [illegible] seen.

SUBMARINES were John I. O'Hagan's hotels during the late war. He was in an American undersea boat when it rammed a German of the same species. That service was not over-kind to the breathing apparatus or the ears of its personnel so O'Hagan put in some enforced time painting the desert near Palm Springs with some very genuine results which are now showing at the Kievits Galleries. His desert canvases have some remarkably truthful qualities. He really feels the bigness of the country and gets down the glowing color. In addition to several larger works are a number of small sketches, clear and luminous, that tell us of an artist of real perception and worth whose work is genuine and unhackneyed.

SAY BLUMENSCHEIN and you think of Taos. We seldom see a large group of his paintings here so those at the Stendahl Galleries will be welcomed by a host of admirers. Ernest L. Blumenschein is delighted with the pattern of hills, trees and brush, and his work varies between pleasing decorative patterns of these ingredients, such as "Leaning Tree," "The Great Hunter" and others, and the realism of "Woman in Blue," or the rather obvious and restless decoration of "Fiesta," with its many figures about the old church.

In works like "Pire Mountain" and "First Snow," which last is a gem, we get beautiful clear views of New Mexico by a man who loves the country and knows it. Forms and colors seem to me better used and simpler. In this type of picture he does not yield so much to his disconcerting ability to paint brilliant light or make rug-like patterns. It is also true that pictures like his, to be properly seen, need the wall of a home. How charming "Leaning Tree" could be in the [illegible] The exhibit shows the [illegible]

CLUB PIONEER PAID TRIBUTE

Mrs. Severance Day Held by Friday Group

Dr. E. K. Foster Speaker at Luncheon Meet

Leader Held Up as Advanced Thinker for Time

BY MYRA NYE

"To me her was a means of grace. To know her was a personal benediction."

Thus was Mrs. Caroline Severance described at the Friday Morning Club session when the founder of the club and first president was honored in a peculiarly intimate and loving way. Mrs. E. K. Foster to be chief speaker of the luncheon. A friend and worker of the former woman, she said she could find in no way but in superlatives to describe the remarkable woman and added the above from an English reviewer what she said was so peculiarly applicable to Mme. Severance. As a neighbor and civic worker with Mme. Severance, W. A. Spalding spoke of her as an organizer, leader and moulder of the early life of Los Angeles outside of Jewish Catholic circles. These were, of course, the first to bring culture to the city.

From these two and from Mrs. Mary G. Olson, who has written a brief biography of the club leader, Ms. the following sketch is drawn:

"The woman of the Saveronola type must of countenance," says Mrs. Olson, "who knew and cared nothing for fashion, who was neither witty, brilliant nor rich, who exemplified plain living and right thinking, came to this westernmost frontier (Los Angeles) bringing only beliefs that to say the least were advanced.

ADVANCED THINKER

"She was a Unitarian, an abolitionist, a woman suffragist, a peace advocate, believed in birth control and a single standard of morals, and most shameful of all she tried to get women to give up corsets and had friends who wore bloomers and rode astride." This was in 1885 and as Mrs. Foster said the beliefs and views we take as a matter of course now were extremely unusual at that time.

Mrs. Severance gave a luncheon in honor of Mrs. Booker T. Washington and several members of the Friday Morning Club told Mrs. Foster that the club would go to pieces (to Mrs. Foster) went to the platform. Mme. Severance introduced the teaching of cooking into the public schools, but not without much opposition and agitation. She was a pioneer in the kindergarten movement and here again she had such great opposition that obstacles seemed insurmountable. It was she who sent "Kate Douglas" as she was known here in Los Angeles, Kate Douglas Wiggin, the famous author of later fame and the first kindergartener in the country, to San Francisco, where she finally started a kindergarten on the Barbary Coast.

Where Mme. Severance began to talk about organizing a woman's club in Los Angeles, husbands were indifferent and said that their very busy wives managed, but she persisted with the result that the Friday Morning Club has grown to be a great institution with a membership approaching 3000 and a clubhouse of great value near the very heart of the city where in the newcomer's day were country lanes and a few orange and lemon trees with eucalyptus. A member of a pioneer family earlier even than that of the Severance family by two generations, is the president, Mrs. Sarah Bixby Smith, whose father bought land in the neighborhood of Seventh and Main for a little more than $1 an acre.

ORGANIZED CHURCH

Mr. Spalding told how Mme. Severance organized the first Unitarian church in Los Angeles in her own parlor. Afterward the Unitarians met Sunday nights in Union Hall on Spring street opposite the old Courthouse were the chief social affairs for the whole city, where oyster stew, cake and ice cream were served for "two bits" and the most intellectual people of the West met.

Of the church Kate Douglas Wiggin wrote: "I played the cabinet organ, Mme. Severance sang bass, Mrs. Severance, tenor, and Miss Wiggin, soprano. Mr. Severance took up the collection, and the climate and the weak lungs strong—altogether a fine lot of teamwork." Mortalised in one of her books those Thursday evenings by describing Mrs. Farley's parlor as there presented the "wax figures" some of the leaders of society in Los Angeles. The choir was organized the Amateur Club, which Mr. Spalding said had even more celebrated talent than any dramatic club in Los Angeles today. As a humorous man of those days Mr. Spalding used to write of these activities and in the oldest newspaper in Los Angeles he told the story of the organization of the San Francisco kindergarten by Mrs. Wiggins, the first kindergarten in the United States.

New Year Ushered In

The new year is not so old that the "Aloha 1928" ball of the Shakespeare Club Juniors of Pasadena is not still noteworthy. Given in the clubhouse, it was perhaps the most brilliant affair of the season among the younger women of club circles in the Southland. "Unforgettable moments in Hawaii" was the theme and motif in decorations, music and refreshments. Two hundred were present including prominent men and women of Pasadena who were patrons and chaperons. Miss Tye as social chairman of the juniors was chairman of all arrangements and the dance committee included Miss Alice Kurtz, Mrs. Cyril Cooper, Miss Geraldine Spill, Mrs. Maynard Turner, Miss Bethany Hahn, Mrs. Hall Greaves Armstrong, Miss Margaret Phelps and Miss Louise Harmon. Honored guests were Mr. and Mrs. Arthur J. Wingard, Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Turner, Judge and Mrs. William Spill, Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Pippitt, Mr. and Mrs. Rufus Russell and Mr. and Mrs. John B. McCoy. The feature entertainment was a Hula dance given by Miss Marion Farrar Warren, who was born in Honolulu.

Mrs. Bernice Johnson will conduct the program for the Wednesday Morning Club this week when she will take up current events of the city, State, nation and international affairs. Classes to convene for the morning are, Shakespeare, drama and music. Mrs. S. B. Welcome, a past president, is hostess for the day.

Santa Monica Bay

The second Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra concert sponsored by the Santa Monica Bay Woman's Club will be given Tuesday evening of this week at the Municipal Auditorium, Ocean Park. The next and last concert of the series will be given in March. This year marks the seventh season of these series, which are the enterprise of the club, and the assisting artists are residents of Santa Monica. The artist appearing this week is Alice Muma, who has carried several roles for the Los Angeles Opera Company.

Hollenbeck Ebell

"Home Talent Day" will be enjoyed by the Hollenbeck Ebell Club Wednesday when Mrs. R. E. Dunn, program chairman, will present members of the club among other entertainers. Mrs. W. D. Johnston will direct the chorus in several numbers and the drama section will give "An Afternoon With Edgar A. Guest," Mrs. Dorothy M. Salisbury directing.

Drama, music, business and protective law and current events are the departments that will convene on that day. Thursday the club family gathering will be held in the auditorium of the Benjamin Franklin Library and the social service section will give a bunko party the 23rd inst.

Hanna College Club

Mrs. Ella B. Hanna, president of the Hanna College Club, announces a benefit recital for the scholarship fund Friday at 2:30 p.m. in Barker's Auditorium. Artists who will appear are Zoe Ballard Shively, dramatic reader, and M. Marian Frushone, contralto soloist of Pittsburgh. The memorial of the club and the scholarship fund is known as the D. W. Hanna Loan Fund and is used at the University of California at Los Angeles to assist young women to complete their university courses.

LUNCHEON EVENT SET THURSDAY

Bridge and Fashion Show Feature Program Slated by Musical Club

Mrs. Paul C. Heydenreich, president of the Matinee Musical Club, announces a bridge-luncheon to take place Thursday at the Elks' Temple on Park View street at 12:30 p.m. Cards will be played during the afternoon.

Mrs. Pearl Cole McMullen is chairman for the coming affair. With Mrs. Heydenreich and her committee, she is making plans for a fashion show to be staged at the close of the card game.

Mrs. McMullen will be assisted on her committee by Mmes. William Kirtley Chambers, Robert H. Green, Frank B. Suttle, Dura M. Woodward, Lena Passmore, Mattson A. Morrill and Ruby M. Laube.

Hostesses will be Mmes. Frederick T. Lyon, Florence Hart Allen, Paul Ridley, Clinton F. Dille, Ethelyn Fridley, J. M. LeRoy and Miss Elizabeth Blackburn.

Press Club to Give Program Next Tuesday

The Southern California Woman's Press Club, of which Elsie Noble Caldwell is president, will observe open-day meeting, Tuesday, at 2:30 p.m. at the Friday Morning clubhouse.

A delightful program has been arranged by Ruth McClintock, as chairman for the day. The program will include Mrs. F. O. McColloch, who conducts a column on an evening newspaper. Mrs. McColloch will speak on "Human Interest," and Orlando Northcutt will talk on "Feature Writing." Mr. Northcutt is instructor in journalism, extension department of the University of California at Los Angeles.

The club will also be honored by Miss Toyo Sasabe, young Japanese opera star, who has recently come to Los Angeles to appear in talking pictures. Miss Sasabe has chosen for her subject "Music in Talking Pictures."

Nelle Gothold, chairman of music, will present Miss Fern Staben, whistler-harpist, in a unique program.

Four o'clock tea will be served with Myra Nye and Jean Loughborough at the table.

Two Sketches Will Be Given

Two dramatic sketches and a musical program by Vladimir Lenski, violinist, with Karola Launstach, accompanist, will be featured at the dinner program of the Pleiades Club of Los Angeles tomorrow evening in the Hollywood Conservatory of Music at 5402 Hollywood Boulevard. Guests of honor will be Carl Laemmle, Carl Laemmle, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Sigmund Laemmle of Vienna, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Laemmle, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Laemmle, Miss Beth Laemmle, Mr. and Mrs. Julius Bernheim and Mr. and Mrs. Walter Stern.

FASHION SHOW TO GIVEN

A bridge-luncheon and fashion show is scheduled by the Wa Wan club for Thursday at the Mary Louise Tea Rooms in West Seventh street, to start promptly at noon.

Mrs. Wan's various philanthropies, including disabled veterans aid, settlement work, etc., are to benefit from the proceeds of the luncheon, for which Mrs. Nora L. Burleigh is acting as hostess. The fashion show is to be assisted by Gertrude Carlisle Comer, Wagner, Mme. Ragna Linden, Mme. Walde Bucknam, Mrs. Lelland Atherton Irish, Mrs. Hennion Robinson, Corinne B. Dodge, Mrs. Frank A. Maginnis, Mrs. W. H. Anderson, Margaret Barbrick Purcell and Frances Arnold Greenwood, the president.

During the luncheon hour the newest ideas will be shown by a group of attractive models. Following the luncheon, bridge will be played and a number of smart parties are being arranged.

Mrs. Major Whittingham, chairman of philanthropy for Wa Wan is in charge of the reservations for the affair.

MOTION-PICTURE DAY WILL BE CELEBRATED

Motion-picture day at the Catholic Woman's Club will be held Wednesday at 2 p.m. Col. Jason Jay will be speaker of the day and Joseph Swichard will entertain with readings and recitations. Many motion-picture stars will be present, including "Snookums" Sonny McKeen, one of the club members, who will be presented by Mrs. Carl A. Kupfer, motion-picture chairman. Mrs. J. Q. Adams will be assisted at the tea tables by Mrs. Paul J. McCormick, Mrs. William Malony and Mrs. J. H. Laughlin.

FACULTY MEMBER TO SPEAK BEFORE CLUB

Prof. Carl Knopf of the school of religion, University of Southern California, will be the guest speaker at the meeting of La Camarada Club Wednesday at the home of Mrs. Charles Brown, 2031 Seventh avenue. A group of songs, including prelude from Cycle of Life" (Ronald,) and "Winter Roses" (DeFontenaillef,) will be sung by Mrs. Richard G. Elworthy, vice-president of the Harmonia Club. Mrs. L. L. West and Mrs. Walter Coen will receive with the hostess, Mrs. Brown.

NEW VERSE BOOK PUBLISHED

"This Enchanting Coast" is the title of an attractive book of verse on California themes by Julia Boynton Green, long known as a member of the Southern California Women's Press Club and the winner of the last poetry prize in the last contest of the organization. The book is just off the press of the Times-Mirror Printing and Binding House.

SUCH DAYS AS THESE

Such days as these are joy enough,
Through other joys were scanty.
Your head aches? Stocks are falling? Stuff!
Such days as these are joy enough.
Think how the storms back East play rough
And bleak round hall and shanty!
Such days as these are joy enough,
Though other joys were scanty.

Daughters of the American Revolution will meet Tuesday, at the Alexandria when the regular council meeting, comprising all national and State officers, State chairmen, regents and vice-regents of the Southern District, and presided over by State Vice-Regent Mrs. Emmet H. Wilson will be called to order at 11 a.m. At 1 p.m. the reciprocity luncheon will be given in the ballroom of the Alexandria.

The program during the luncheon will be devoted to Indian welfare. It is the desire of the State regent, Mrs. Theodore Jesse Hoover, State Vice-Regent Mrs. Emmet H. Wilson and State Chairman of Indian Welfare Mrs. W. E. Wright that the interest of Daughters throughout the State be aroused on behalf of native California Indians, as there is said to be dire need for immediate relief.

MARGARET MESSER MORRIS

A short talk on actual existing conditions among the Indians will be given by Mrs. Wright, followed by a program on Indian culture along the lines of music, history, art and literature.

Margaret Messer Morris will sing a group of Charles Wakefield Cadman's Indian songs, including the beautiful "Aria," from the opera "Shanewis." Miss Florence Joy will assist at the piano.

May Montoya—of Pueblo Indian descent—writer, lecturer and member of the Southern California Academy of Science, will address the audience on "Indian Culture." Jeanne L'Strange Cappel—descended from the Chippewa tribe—will tell of Indian legendry. Mrs. Cappel is president of the American Indian Women's History and Art Club.

BONELLI TO BE SPEAKER ON TUESDAY

City Council President to Address Club Women of Highland Park

Public Affairs Day Tuesday at Highland Park Ebell Club will include remarks by William G. Bonelli, president of the Los Angeles City Council, on topics of interest in the Fourteenth District. Mrs. W. P. Duniap, chairman, will introduce the speaker. The address will be preceded by selections by the Franklin High School girls' glee club, of which Miss Philbrook is director.

At 12:30 p.m., Mrs. Clarence Shults, curator of the section, will conduct the lesson on business and protective law, and at 1:30 p.m. T. L. Stearns, curator of the drama section, will introduce the leader, Mrs. W. L. Barber.

At the first meeting of the new year, last Tuesday at 8 Mrs. Carl A. Plath, president, introduced Mrs. Herbert Carr, junior past president, who reviewed five books: "Bambi," by Felix Salten; "Oh, Ranger!" by Albright and Taylor; "Dog Puncher on the Yukon," by Arthur T. Walden; "Fremont," by Allan Nevin; and "California Fairy Tales," by Monica Shannon. A prelude of harp solos by Catherine Jackson was also appreciated. Among her selections were several compositions by her teacher, Enrico Tramonti. Rev. E. E. Clark, a former pastor of the El Monte Presbyterian Church, gave a talk full of valuable information regarding the Bible, before the section. The speaker was introduced by the general curator, Mrs. J. S. Worsley.

Prof. O. J. Holwerda, leader of the English section, continued instruction in better speech.

Wednesday the rambler section, of which Mrs. Samuel Weston Hastings is curator, walked to Roberts Camp.

Club Will Hear International Relations Talk

Mrs. Charles H. Richmond, chairman of international relations for Los Angeles district, California Federation of Women's Clubs, will speak on "Present Development of International Relations," for West Ebell Club members and guests, Tuesday at 2:30 p.m. at the clubhouse. Business meeting will precede the lecture.

The music department, under the direction of Frans Hoffman, is rehearsing a program to be presented during the international fiesta to be held at the clubhouse commencing the evening of the 28th inst. and ending the following day at midnight.

Members whose birthdays come in January will serve the club luncheon Tuesday at 1 p.m. Mrs. P. R. Philbrook will be chairman of arrangements.

VERSE WRITERS MEET

Tomorrow evening at 7:30 p.m. the regular meeting of the Verse Writers' Club of Southern California will be held at the Public Library.

SPEECH SET ON CEMENT PLANT ISSUE

Alphonzo E. Bell Will Address Women's League on Controversy, Thursday

The Santa Monica cement-plant controversy will be aired at the meeting of the Women's Political League, Thursday at 12 noon, when Alphonzo E. Bell will discuss "Plans for the Development of the Santa Monica Mountains." Wilke Woodward, engineer in charge of the property development, will be present to answer any questions relating to the project.

The meeting will be held at the Windsor Tea Rooms, twelfth floor, the Brack-Shops, and will be open to the public. Addresses will follow a luncheon.

The meeting will be presided over by the new officers elected for the ensuing year: Miss Ruth Sterry, president; first vice-president, Mrs. P. E. Keeler; second vice-president, Mrs. Emma Thomas; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Dorothy Arnold; recording secretary, Mrs. Rolland Vandegrift; treasurer, Mrs. Algot Nordstrom; auditor, Mrs. Caryl Sheldon; directors, Mrs. Lydia Crossley, Mrs. Douglas L. Edmonds and Mrs. Dora A. Stearns.

Santa Barbara Group Planned

Mrs. Elmer H. Whittaker of Santa Barbara has issued an invitation to the members of the State Society of the United States Daughters of 1812 to be her guests at a luncheon at her home, 124 Arallega street, Friday, the 18th inst. Mrs. Levering Moore, president of the society, will give a talk on international relations, and later afternoon tea will be served.

Mrs. Moore is desirous of forming a chapter in Santa Barbara, and with this in view, the hostess has invited those who are eligible to meet the out-of-town guests.

Members from Los Angeles, San Francisco and San Diego are expected to be guests for the day.

IMMIGRATION TO BE TOPIC

A lecture of more than usual interest to Californians and especially to the southern half of the State is to be presented at the regular meeting of Ebell tomorrow afternoon, when Theodore Graham will speak on his recently completed investigations into the problem of Mexican immigration.

In his lecture "The Back Door of America," Mr. Graham considers the past history of this important problem and draws some definite conclusions as to future immigration policies, some of which are now coming before Congress.

At the Wednesday luncheon ex-Senator Samuel H. Piles of Washington will talk on Colombia.

Mr. Piles was appointed under the Harding administration as Minister Plenipotentiary to Columbia and has served in that capacity for the past six years.

Several department meetings are scheduled for the week. Tomorrow morning applied design and psychology section, meet, with the principal address at the latter being given by Mrs. Francis Webster Blaisford on "Memory." Tuesday morning the Bible section will have an illustrated lecture by Mrs. Lena Fisher to be followed by the semi-annual luncheon of the department. In the afternoon, the child study group will hear of the "Importance of the Nursery School in Education."

Wednesday morning art and travel section will discuss "Fundamental Principles of Home Arrangement" under the direction of the curator, Mrs. James W. Johnson, Thursday morning Spanish classes meet as usual and in the afternoon the new drama workshop will meet at 3 p.m. in the fine arts room. Friday morning French and practical relief groups convene.

SONS AND DAUGHTERS

By Myra Nye

Older Daughters—Look Your Age

It is all very well to say we look as old as we feel and then try to feel kittenish when we are 48. But we are getting terribly tired of the older, kittenish woman. She is too apt to be a cat and kittenish actions are far too incongruous.

We might just as well lose our age. Fannie Wards are going out of fashion. Even real flappers are passe. A beauty expert has given as the chief commandment in the decalogue of beauty, "The first and greatest commandment, look your age."

LOOKING ONE'S BEST

To be sure we ought to look our best at all times possible. That, of course, is an anomaly, an impossibility and an abuse of the English language, for there is only one best in anything. But usage makes "looking one's best at all times" all right. Age and the appearance of age have a definite connection. And nobody can beat the game very much. Let's put the energy we have spent in the past in trying to beat the game, on mental and spiritual grooming and yet don't quote me I beg you, as saying looks do not matter at average club woman's age. They matter more than ever. That is a lot.

It is entirely possible to be a nicer looking woman at 60 years of age than at 40. I know a woman who at 55 is surpassingly beautiful and she was known as the ugly duckling from 14 to 20 years of age. She hasn't bobbed her hair and it is almost snow white. But it is virile, youthful in its tendrils and lovely in its frame for her face. She is erect and active, dances beautifully, wears her clothes with an air and never misses on her combinations of colors. She has never had a facial in her life, she rouges discreetly, manicures frequently, bathes every day with bath salts in the water, but never uses perfumes except those in high-grade soaps. She drives a car expertly, swims vigorously, climbs mountains every vacation season, has canaries in her living-room and they do not make her nervous and the other live things in her house besides the birds are children, gold fish in bowls, fresh flowers every day and friends and neighbors dropping in at any time. But she lets you know if you are curious that she is 55.

She is the most charming woman, young or old, whom I know.

EXPERT GIVES HINTS

Here are a few hints given by a beauty expert for the woman past 45 repeated this week: Only the young fresh skin can dare a bright rouge or any rouge in quantity. Any showing of face powder makes a haggard skin look more so, and if she is wise the older woman steers clear of mascara. She should use on her lips simply a pale-toned oily lipstick to keep lips lubricated and to take away that dry-look characteristic of age. A too severe coiffure makes the fat face look fatter and the hairdressing should show restraint. A swirl or French twist helps a short or fat neck and if the ears are partly exposed the head looks less heavy. Those who have small-boned faces with soft skin that wrinkles and fades easily should do their hair simply but softly with special attention to the temples. If the bony structure of the face is well defined and good, often as one grows older and the face loses its roundness it takes on almost a classic look. It is a great mistake in this case not to cultivate a molded line with the hair.

"It's the way you walk and the way you turn your head and wrinkle up your nose or whatever you do that makes you. Using a face for fifty or seventy years can't fail to change it and using a body hard all your life is bound to create bumps and hollows and all sorts of physical idiosyncrasies. My quarrel with the 'looking-young' school is that it attempts to iron out these personal characteristics or to dress up so that nobody in the world would dream that the mature woman had lived, seen or known any more than the veriest youngster," says the same beauty expert I quoted before.

Mothers of grown sons and daughters have no moral right to look like flappers.

If a young girl of 20 is beautiful she should thank God and keep the thought of her beauty in her subconscious mind. If she is still beautiful at 40, she should be more thankful to God than ever. If she is beautiful at 60, she really need not thank God so much, for it is due to herself and the inward life she has led, but having got into the way of thanking God she will no doubt continue to do so.

EUROPEAN BIRDS AND AMERICAN COMPARED

Comparison of European birds with those of America will be featured in a talk to be given by Miss Belle Smith before the Los Angeles Audubon Society on Thursday. The talk will be illustrated with moving pictures of bird life shown by Mr. and Mrs. V. E. Maescher. Bird lovers are invited to attend the meeting to be conducted at 3 p.m. in the State Building, Exposition Park.

OUR FOREIGN POLICY ANALYZED

A New Volume Studies Its Traditions and Its Principles and Shows How Our New Position As a World Power Is Forcing Us to Change

BY THOMAS F. FORD

SURVEY OF AMERICAN FOREIGN RELATIONS, 1928. By Charles P. Howland, Yale University Press, New Haven, Ct.

"Political thinkers are now learning to take account of the fact that for the first time in 2000 years the strongest single force is outside of the European continent."

Thus begins this scholarly study of American foreign relations, a volume which brings home to its readers the fact that the United States has attained a new world leadership, involving new foreign policies and responsibilities.

The first section of the book is devoted to a historical study of our traditional policy. From the first the corner-stone of American foreign policy has been the achievement of national security. To carry out this policy we entered upon a plan of expansion which established our borders on the Atlantic on the east and the Pacific on the west. We were protected by treaty on the north and by power on the south, both of which have proved to be effective.

Thus we had no occasion for any such system as that known as the balance of power, justified on the grounds that only through it could the many European nations huddled so closely against one another hope to maintain themselves. If the many turned on the few, their destruction would result. Repeating the process, all would eventually fall.

World Power, Plus

In our pursuit of national security through the extension of our boundaries we have attained an economic maturity that has brought us to the forefront of all nations. In short, the United States has become a world power, plus. But in achieving this position we have entered into a more complex state, one in which we impinge on other countries just as definitely as though we were surrounded geographically on every side by foreign powers. "In colonial possessions, in the relations of an advanced country to countries less civilized, in the export of capital for foreign investment and in the competition for raw materials and foreign markets we have moved toward the English situation," which is one that makes us impinge upon most of the major problems of the world.

This impingement gives us new problems and new responsibilities.

But opposed to our enlightened meeting of these problems and responsibilities are our traditions in foreign policy. We have four of these: Isolation, the Monroe Doctrine, the freedom of the seas and the open door.

Each of these is traced historically and is considered in relation to the new age. It is made clear that with our far-flung interests, both economic, as in our loans to Europe, and political, as in our colonial holdings in the Philippines, Porto Rico and our other islands of the sea—interests that reach from Alaska on the north to Samoa on the south—to attempt to maintain a policy of "isolation" is to simply fly in the face of the facts. How can we be indifferent to the rest of the world when we have a Panama Canal in Central America, when our nationals have hundreds of millions invested in Mexico, in the Mosul oil fields, in rubber plantations in Africa. It simply can't be done. We are a world power. Our interests are as far-flung as those of Britain, France or any of the other European powers.

Politics and Economics Fused

The plain fact is that our economic interests are so closely woven into the fabric of our political interests that whatever our traditional policies in the past may have been, those policies will not fit into the picture of the present.

As for the Monroe Doctrine and its inadequacy as a guide for us today, all will do well to read what is said in this book.

The average man, unfamiliar with governmental matters, would, I suppose, were he asked about our foreign policy state that as far as he is concerned the Monroe Doctrine is a good enough foreign policy for him. This is natural. He recalls that when the battle was on for the League of Nations it was because we feared the League would in some way interfere with the Monroe Doctrine that the people as a whole were opposed to it. Since world-shaking decisions depend upon our understanding of this doctrine and our application of it, let us at least make the effort to view it with some enlightenment. No better road to enlightenment is offered than the careful reading of this volume.

Of little less importance than the principles and policies of our foreign relations is the control of those relations. All students of the subject have realized that a democracy offers special difficulties here. So, with us, there is the long controversy between the President and the Senate and the still unsettled boundary line between the powers of the two. Then, too, with us there has been a lack of trained diplomats, which may or may not have been a handicap. This section of the book closes with a consideration of the reorganization of the State Department.

Section II considers the United States as an economic power. If there is anyone left who still believes in isolation let him read of the growth of our economic power and see how it involves us in countless ways with other nations. Shall we draw in our horns and hide ourselves in our own shell, or continue to make progress and accept the new policies essential to such progress?

Section III is concerned with the United States and the League of Nations. Beginning with an account of the projects for a League, we are led into formation of the League and to the controversy which made us, in the end, nullify our own good work. The further history of the League and our relations to it are fully discussed.

Last of all come the sections on the financial relations of the United States government after the war and that on the limitation of armaments.

An Impartial Study

The volume throughout is impartial, nonpartisan, scholarly and enlightened. It is a book that every judge, every public official, every Congressman, every lawyer, every banker and every man who thinks he is a good citizen should read and digest. Too much praise can not be given it. If I were physician extraordinary to the American people I should prescribe chapter doses of this to be taken every evening before retiring.

This is the first of a series of volumes to be issued by the Council of Foreign Relations which organization is a research associate in government at Yale University. The purpose of the series is to study at first hand in an unbiased and scholarly manner the international aspects of America's political, economic and diplomatic problems.

In this series it is proposed to examine a field somewhat broader than that covered by the term "foreign policy." It is the aim of the editors to present the facts as they appear objectively without either favoring or criticising the policy of the various statesmen or administrations responsible for conditions as they are found.

The section on the limitation of armaments, part of the chapter on traditions, and a chapter in the section on the United States and the League of Nations were prepared by Arthur Bullard: the sections on the United States as an economic power and on financial relations of the United States government after the World War are by H. B. Ellis-ton, and the chapter on domestic control is by Quincy Wright.

ON VISIT TO MEXICO

Harvey Fergusson, author of "Wolf Song," "Blood of the Conquerors," and other books, is visiting Mexico City. He plans to stay well into February. His latest novel, "In Those Days," will be published on the 28th inst. by Alfred A. Knopf. Mr. Fergusson has once more taken the Southwest for the background of a novel. While this story is in no sense a sequel to "Wolf Song," the story continues the saga of the early pioneers of that interesting region. Sam Lash, hero of "Wolf Song," wore a picturesque fur cap, made his own trails, fought the Indians because he liked to, trapped for his living, and married a Mexican girl. Robert Jayson, the hero of "In Those Days," who lived a generation later, went west from the east with a pattern of civilization in his mind. He wore a sombrero, was book-keeper (at first) for a frontier store, fought Indians only when attacked, and sent for the eastern girl he had left behind, to marry. Later he owned a store himself, and owned stock in a silver mine, and in the railroad. In Robert Jayson Mr. Fergusson has created a prototype of American character in the making.

Hoover's $3,000,000,000 plan for a nation-wide construction reserve to be held for use in time of unemployment and overproduction is said to be based upon the plan put forth by William T. Foster, head of the Pollak Foundation for Economic Research, and Waddill Catchings, New York banker, in their book, "The Road to Plenty," recently issued by Houghton Mifflin Company.

BOOKS and Their Makers

Two Distinguished American Writers

UPTON SINCLAIR

Hendrik Van Loon,
Author of "The Story of Mankind," whose latest book, "Man the Miracle Maker," has just been published.

"The Swiss Family O'Malley"
Mr. Graves does a gay jacket for Frank Ward O'Malley's humorous account of an American family abroad.

Upton Sinclair,
Author of "Boston," a two-volume novel that has created a furor in conservative quarters.

Gossip of the Book World

Wallace Smith, who has written short stories, novels and orders of execution for Mexican bandit chiefs, is now busily turning out screen stories in Hollywood, his most recent one being an adaptation of "Bulldog Drummond." His latest novel, "Tiger's Mate," was published by Putnam this fall. Aside from his literary career, Wallace Smith has been a Chicago police reporter, a war correspondent and a soldier of fortune in Mexico.

A new edition of Paul Leicester Ford's "The Honorable Peter Stirling" will be published by Henry Holt & Co. early in the new year. This novel has sold more than 250,000 copies in the thirty years since it was first printed. It was chosen by the Book-of-the-Month Club for revival in 1928.

Those who wept with delight at canine fidelity when they read the story of Verdun Belle in Alexander Woollcott's "Two Gentlemen and a Lady" will get a rude jolt in the January Vanity Fair. Under the title "Now It Can't be Told," Mr. Woollcott brings the story of the faithful setter to a disillusioning end.

The first publications for the new year from Henry Holt & Co. are two nature books, "Personality of Insects" and "Personality of Water Animals," by Royal Dixon and Brayton Eddy. They deal with intimate details of the lives and social customs of their subjects and are suitable for older children as well as grown-ups. They appeared January 1. Mr. Eddy has begun an extensive lecture tour in the West under the management of William Feakins, while Mr. Dixon is appearing on several large Chautauqua circuits. Both authors are well known as naturalists and have addressed thousands of people in various parts of the country.

A recent visitor at Three Rivers, N. M., Reports that Eugene Manlove Rhodes looks ten years younger than he did last June, and is hard at work on his volume of reminiscences ordered written by a special proclamation of Gov. Dillon. When ready the book will be published by Houghton Mifflin Company.

Harry Hervey, who as author of "Conga!" used to stay up working till 3 in the morning because he liked to write, now as playwright finds himself tied down to just as severe a schedule. "Conga!" has recently opened up as a play in Philadelphia with Helen Mencken in the leading role. As the setting is French Indo-China, Mr. Hervey is called upon to buy props, instruct dressmakers, and even make wigs in order that the atmosphere may be authentic. As the period is from 1910 to 1928, even the uniforms have to be changed from act to act. And the names in "Conga!" are so foreign to members of the cast that Mr. Hervey has to conduct a geography class.

"The Conduct of British Empire Foreign Relations Since the Peace Settlement," by Arnold J. Toynbee, is a recent publication of the Oxford University Press, New York. This small volume is supplementary to the "Survey of International Affairs," which is appearing in annual volumes. It confines itself to a consideration of that aspect of recent British constitutional history which bears upon foreign affairs.

Ulrich B. Phillips, professor of American history at the University of Michigan, has been awarded the prize of $2500 in addition to book royalties for the best unpublished work on American history, offered by Little, Brown & Co., book publishers. The judges in this contest were James Truslow Adams of Brooklyn, author of "The Founding of New England;" Worthington C. Ford of Boston, editor of the Massachusetts Historical Society, and Allan Nevins of New York, professor of histor; at Columbia University. Prof. Phillips's prize-winning manuscript, a history of the South, will be published next May under the title of "Life and Labor in the Old South."

Vina Delmar, black-haired author of "Bad Girl," selected by the Literary Guild last April, has just purchased a new home in Scarsdale, N. Y., a considerable distance socially and geographically from the "White Harlem" she depicts in her best seller. Every room is said to be finished in a different period, to say nothing of commas and exclamation points. The youthful novelist has become one of the most highly paid fiction writers of the day.

WANDERER TURNS WRITER

W. B. Seabrook, adventurer, scholar, tramp, whose book, "The Magic Island," has been selected by the Literary Guild of America as its January book, is gifted, or cursed, as you will, with a craving for the sights and scenes of far places and for mingling with strange peoples. His book, "Adventures in Arabia," which was published last year, was one of the most interesting of the flood of travel books that appeared. He is known to his friends as Willie and seems to delight in wearing rough tweeds that have the look of never having been pressed, and he is partial to blue shirts. At home he generally wears a Brittany fisherman's outfit. His left thumb is weighed down by a huge silver ring, the gift of an Arab chieftain. His hair is cut in bangs like a boy's across the forehead, which makes him look several years younger than he really is.

Seabrook was born on Washington's Birthday, 1886, at Westminster, Md., the son of a Lutheran preacher. He attended a college at Roanoke, Va., and received his master's degree at Newbury, S. C. He insists that he learned nothing in school and, sick of the futility of trying to, he left home and went to Augusta, Ga., where he became a cub reporter on the Augusta Chronicle. Three months later he was made city editor at a salary of $22.50, that was raised to $25 in a short time. At the end of the year he was offered the position of managing editor, but, feeling that the education he possessed was inadequate to lead him to the larger horizon he desired, he took the $300 he had saved and went to the University of Geneva, working his way through for nine and one-half months, studying philosophy and metaphysics.

Upon leaving the university he became a tramp, not a prettified version, but an absolute hobo, stealing, wearing rough clothes, working on farms and even getting into jail in the year and a half he spent wandering all over Europe. He was so happy in this life that he began to feel he had found the solution of the way to live. He was 22 years of age then. One day an incident occurred which completely revolutionized his ideas again. He was sitting on a bench overlooking the water at Lucerne, Switzerland, and a young man drove up in a shiny new automobile with a pretty girl who was nicely attired and wore shimmering silk stockings. Willie looked at the youth and saw what money had given him and decided that he, too, wanted a car and a girl.

He went back to America to get money. In Atlanta he established himself in the advertising business and at the end of five years he was secretary of the Rotary Club, but was unhappy. The war broke out and offered him an excuse to quit. Upon his return to America, after the war, he started writing in New York. He wrote fantastic fiction and short stories and was encouraged by H. L. Mencken. His wife ran a coffee shop and one evening Seabrook met an Arab there. The result was that the Seabrooks went to Arabia for fifteen months and Willie wrote his first book, "Adventures in Arabia."

With an interest in magic so pronounced that it amounted almost to an obsession, Seabrook turned to Haiti, "the magic island," where the strange religion of Voodoo flourishes, and charms can be made to raise the dead from their graves or place the living there. He and Katie lived in Haiti for a year and a half and Seabrook made many expeditions into the heart of the Haitian jungle, setting foot in places where no white man had ever been before. He participated in their ceremonies, was admitted into their blood rites, did everything and anything they did, and loved it. He believes implicitly in magic as a form of suggestion that has its opposite manifestations in Christian Science and the "Miracles" at Lourdes.

"Every white man who has lived long enough with primitive peoples, no matter what his hard scientific background, no matter how rational the texture of his mind, has come finally to an often-reluctant admission of the powers of magic," says Mr. Seabrook in his book.

He is just about to start on a trip to the Orient. His plans include visits to Indo-China, Siam, Cambodia and many other more or less distant and obscure places scattered about the equator.

STUDIES IN AMERICAN HISTORY

THE PAGEANT OF AMERICA. In Defense of Liberty. By William Wood and Ralph Henry Gabriel. Makers of a New Nation. By John Spencer Bassett. American Idealism. By Luther A. Weigle. Volumes 7, 9 and 10. ven.

These three new volumes of "The Pageant of America," are as beautifully and profusely illustrated as are the preceding seven or eight, already issued.

The volume, entitled, "In Defense of Liberty," gives the history of three wars. These are the Civil War, the Spanish-American War and the World War. The latter is treated entirely from the point of view of the participation of America. A study of the illustrations for each section reveals better than many words the material changes in the art of war that six or seven decades have developed.

In "Makers of a New Nation," John Spencer Bassett follows the political problems that have engaged attention since the Civil War. Reconstruction, with the passage of the Fourteenth and Fifteenth amendments, is discussed largely by presenting the plans of various leaders, the difficulties, the injustice, the riots and the wretchedness that went with the plan as adopted are closely shown. The reproductions of contemporary cartoons, photographs and sketches make the story one that is full of reality.

Bassett proceeds from reconstruction to the difficult readjustments under Grant, with the graft and partisanship that broke out everywhere until reform was started under Cleveland. McKinley and his policies are considered, with the political reform led by Roosevelt and Taft's effort to obtain harmony. The new domestic issues under Wilson receive due consideration, as do war politics and policies.

In "American Idealism," Luther A. Weigle considers our history from the point of view of church affiliation and maintenance, with our insistence upon religious freedom. Along with this goes the story of the development of public education and of the fight that had to be made in order to shape public opinion in favor of free schools.

These three volumes, then, carry on successfully and well the story of American history as considered under the distinct heads and divisions indicated by the titles of the various volumes. When "The Pageant of America" is completed there will be available for reading and reference a set of books in which scholarship and research combined have produced a vivid and orderly account of the growth and development of every phase of American life.

BEST SELLERS IN NEW YORK

The following is a list of the six best sellers in fiction and nonfiction in Brentano's New York stores for the week ending January 6, 1929.

FICTION—"Case of Sergeant Grischa," by Arnold Zweig, Viking; "Well of Loneliness," by Radclyffe Hall, Covici Friede; "The Wanderer," by Alain-Fournier, Houghton, Mifflin; "Orlando," by Virginia Woolf, Harcourt Brace; "Point Counter Point," by Aldous Huxley, Doubleday Doran; "Lily Christine," by Michael Arlen, Doubleday Doran.

NONFICTION—"Elizabeth and Essex," by Lytton Strachey, Harcourt Brace; "The Tragic Empress," M. Paleologue, Harper; "John Brown's Body," by Stephen Benet, Doubleday Doran; "Leonardo the Florentine," by Rachel Taylor, Harper; "Whither Mankind," by Charles A. Beard, Longmans Green; "My Autobiography," by Benito Mussolini, Scribner.

Contemporary Publications

MARSH FIRE. By Mateel Howe Farnham. Dodd, Mead & Co., New York.

This second novel by the well-endowed daughter of Ed Howe takes up in an original way the problem of the office woman whose business ability makes her indispensable to her employer, but who is unable to keep her business life separate from her emotions.

Led on by the illusion that her life was bound up with that of her employer and that here she could succeed, Josie made her mistakes and in the end nearly ruined her employer, Michael Fielding, who had strayed sufficiently from the safe road of business to make his position insecure.

Aside from the original twist given to the story it has not much weight. Written entertainingly, with many interesting incidents, the novel just fails to be significant.

THE SILK PURSE. By Elisabeth Holding. E. P. Dutton & Co., New York.

A clever story of a man who came back after six years in Rio with the firm intention of renewing the half-understood engagement with Kathie, whom he had known and loved.

He finds her living shabbily in New York with a room-mate who makes her living by running a tea-room. Kathie herself is a stenographer. She is quiet, undemonstrative, proud, and determined not to hold Grier unless he makes it very clear that he still loves her.

He, poor boob, allows himself to be taken in by a cheap flapper, whom he marries, with never a word of warning from Kathie. Of the payment exacted from Grier for his mistake Miss Holding tells in a novel that is modern, clear-cut and clever.

THE SPLENDID BUCCANEER. By Rupert Sargent Holland. J. B. Lippincott Company.

Lovers of the swashbuckling days of old, when men made their way with cutlass and broadsword, will find this a tale decidedly to their liking. The story opens in London, where Edmund Gerry, just "up to Lunnon" from Yorkshire, becomes embroiled in a street brawl that threatens to land him either in jail or on the gallows. But fortune in the form of Capt. Elijah Pound, master of the good ship Mirabel, intervenes and instead of a prison cell he takes to the broad Atlantic as clerk on Capt. Pound's ship.

But this is but the beginning of his adventures, for before the story closes he is a full-fledged member of a buccaneering craft. That this opens the way for a full quota of adventure those who read the yarn will find. There are attacks by pirates, battles by land and sea and all the other gay and festive doings that are part and parcel of a rollicking pirate tale.

TALES FROM GREENERY STREET. By Denis Mackail. Houghton Mifflin Company, New York.

Denis Mackail is an English author who has made the troubles and the joys of newlyweds his specialty. Most of his young married people live in Greenery street, and Mr. Mackail so manages as to make their lives interesting without boring us with either too much sentiment or too little sympathy.

THE PLAYS OF J. M. BARRIE. Charles Scribner's Sons, New York.

Those who still thrill over Barrie, and this reviewer is one of them, will welcome this one-volume edition of the collected plays, including several that have never been published before. "Peter Pan" is here. This play which until last month had never been available in any printed form, has just been put out in a single volume. So now you may have it as one of many or in its own covers.

The complete list of plays is "Peter Pan," "Quality Street," "The Admirable Crichton," "Alice-Sit-by-the-Fire," "What Every Woman Knows," "A Kiss for Cinderella," "Dear Brutus," "Mary Rose," "Pantaloon," "Half Hours," "Seven Women," "Old Friends," "Rosalind," "The Will," "The Twelve Pound Look," "The New Word," "A Well-Remembered Voice," "Barbara's Wedding," "The Old Lady Shows Her Medals" and "Shall We Join the Ladies?"

Roland Pertwee's blackmail drama of the upper world, "Interference," issued a short time ago in book form by Houghton Mifflin Company, is making a hit on the screen as Paramount's first motion picture to be made with sound and voices throughout.

NEW NOVELS HAVE DISTINCTION

Publishers Start the New Year in Fiction With Books by Isa Glenn, Sigrid Undset, O. E. Rolvaag and Others All Far Above the Average

BY LILLIAN C. FORD

TRANSPORT. By Isa Glenn. Alfred A. Knopf, New York.

The New Year has launched five or six novels of distinction, which, let us hope, is a happy omen of what 1929 is to do in the way of books. These novels include "Transport," by Isa Glenn; "The Snake Pit," by Sigrid Undset; "Peder Victorious," by O. E. Rolvaag, and "Joseph and His Brethren," by H. W. Freeman. Space permits the review of three of these today.

Isa Glenn has shown in the four novels she has written a steady progression, which makes the fourth, "Transcript," a book to be seriously considered. Miss Glenn was born in Atlanta, where her father was Mayor. She is a cousin of Whistler, with whom she worked in Paris, while still in her teens. As the wife of Brig.-Gen. S. J. Bayard Schindel, she has seen service in the Philippines and in other Pacific islands. Hence, she is well equipped to write of army people as well as of the effect on the morals of ordinary Americans of a long and tiresome voyage to the Orient.

"Transport" has for its underlying idea the question, "How deep is civilization?" Place people under the stress and strain of discomfort, excessive heat and forced association with one another, keep them there for three weeks and watch them give way under the strain. Whatever is weak or vicious or craven or distorted in their natures will break through, and then you will see them as they are under their skins or as they would be if they did not keep a tight rein on themselves.

Mrs. Swan, whose past insures her of being ostracised wherever she goes, but who proves the best of the lot; the faded beauty, Mrs. Mellish, whose blondined hair deceives the men just as successfully as does her overly sweet manner; the newly married Second Lieutenant Thwait and his up-to-date bride; the shrewd Mrs. Gildersleeve whose pleasure it is to valet her handsome if wooden husband; the dreadful major and Mrs. Bhutis, with their tragic children; the two neurotic nurses, who nearly drive one another crazy—they are all limned with a distinctness that makes them seem remarkably real.

Miss Glenn, then, has an unusual background, an unusual group of characters, a striking series of psychological tests to subject her people to and a very definite plan of development for both story and characters. Is it to be wondered at that her book is already mentioned as one of the sure successes of the year?

PEDER VICTORIOUS. By O. E. Rolvaag. Harper & Bros., New York.

O. E. Rolvaag came to Minnesota as a young immigrant, almost penniless and utterly uneducated. But the inner urge proved strong enough to make an education possible for him, to win for him the position of professor of Norwegian literature at St. Olaf College, Minnesota, and to make him the wise and powerful chronicler of the struggles of his own kind in the stubborn West. His "Giants of the Earth" has its sure place as the best story yet written of pioneer life in our West.

Of "Giants of the Earth" one reviewer wrote: "It is a moving narrative of pioneer hardship and heroism, told with such obvious veracity that it makes almost all other tales of western frontier life seem cheap. At times, as in the description of the storm of locusts, of the blizzard, of the coming to the little settlement of a lone pioneer whose wife has gone mad with grief, it rises to great power. And the background of the boundless Dakota prairies, with its mysterious distances and its capacity for evil, is painted with alternating beauty and grimness."

"Peder Victorious" carries on the story of the family of Per Hansa, with the widowed Beret and the youngest child, Peder, as the central characters. Beret, troubled always by her conscience, because she had sent her husband out into the storm that had killed him, convinced at last that she had not been a good wife, begins to doubt even the religious faith that she had so fervidly turned to as a solace in the pioneer life she had hated. Peder is alike the nearest to his mother and the cause of most grief to her, for [illegible] adolescence his is [illegible] tive, ardent, and [illegible]

Thus it is that [illegible] makes his story of the [illegible] justment of this [illegible] to the American [illegible] absorbs them, more than a pioneers. It is a [illegible] souls and a study of [illegible] and mental development.

Because it lacks the [illegible] of "Giants in the Earth," "Peder Victorious" will, I think, [illegible] a secondary place in the [illegible] work. But it is a [illegible]

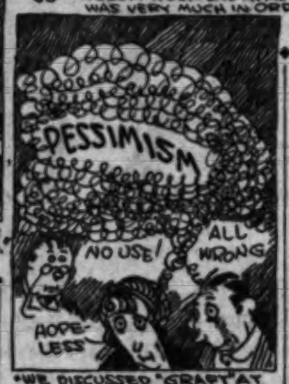
SUSPENDED SENTENCE

"SO—WELL A WEEK-END AT ARROWHEAD WAS VERY MUCH IN ORDER."

A SEA OF FEMININITY GAZING AT HIM WITH FATUOUS ADORATION.



*WE DISCUSSED "GRAFT" AT OUR DISCUSSION CLUB THIS WEEK.

THE countryside is beginning to look its enchanting best. Just enough rain to start everything into new life. So . . . well, a week-end at Arrowhead Springs was very much in order.

Lots of people up there. John Reisewsder, for instance, still a par golfer at 78 years of age. He, you will recall, was active in the nomination of Presidents McKinley, Roosevelt, Taft, and Harding. He looks youthfully patriarchal, surrounded by his daughter and son-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Louis Fisher, and his young grand-daughter, the bride-elect, Miss Lee Salsrider, who is to be married in New York this spring.

A charming old lady of that attractive maternal type is Mrs. P. W. Miles of Seattle (the Miles Lumber Company) who everyone regards with affection. There, too, is Mrs. William Matson of the San Francisco Navigation line—a distinguished-looking grande dame, who has been a great traveler and has sojourned at Arrowhead since her trip to Europe last year. Mr. and Mrs. Yule of the Goodyear Rubber Company are there with their two jolly small boys and Mr. and Mrs. Raymond.

Movie circles are well represented, too—George Bancroft, with his wife and small daughter, have a cottage of their own. And what is known as the Peck Bungalow is constantly tenanted by Ronald Colman, William Powell, Lew Cody, Norman Kerry, etc., and spouses (if any.)

Young Dr. F. Modern, the resident physician, has been in this country from Hungary for five years. He expects to become a citizen, to which end he is copiously studying the history of the United States. So far he considers the newspapers malign the country—which should not be judged by the crime news. Any students who have to write a composition on the United States government will find Dr. Modern a sumptuously helpful fellow student.

They have put in some "sun-baths" on the roof of the hotel—artfully designed to afford suitable privacy from all but aviators when one basks in the "altogether," which, as Mary Garden told us, is the only way to take a sun-bath. And aviation grows apace . . .

Mrs. Archibald McArthur has surely attained supreme glory. The new rose, "Isabella," has been named after her—a lovely blossom on the glorified wild-rose order of utterly exquisite coloring. Nor is this her only distinction, since she can brag that she is a much-beloved mother-in-law, whose family is vastly proud of her gardening talents. She still talks with a heavy Scotch accent after thirty years in this country—and is a valiant daughter of the British Empire and a long-time member of the Friday Morning Club.

Answer to several recent correspondents: Please don't ask me for the address of the motion-picture stars—especially and particularly when you want to sell them something. I decline to make myself that sort of a nuisance.

We discussed "Graft" at our Discussion Club this week. A very depressing subject. Two judges, a lawyer, several physicians, all took the most pessimistic view of the situation.

The meeting was held at the home of Judge and Mrs. Yankwich. Mrs. Yankwich knows how—that living-room looks as utterly cosy and livable as that essentially homey room they showed us in "The Marriage Bed" at the Belasco recently.

These digs at Eugene O'Neill for craving seclusion . . . a friend who knew him in the long ago remembers him as a sad patient in a tuberculosis sanitarium. On that occasion Eugene said, "No man knows a damn thing about life until he has had T. B.," and so . . .

Suffering interviewees may take heart. Even Will Durant, who gets paid highly for making speeches about philosophy, doesn't actually drip epigrams for a newspaper interview.

Or perhaps, of course, he prefers to sell all his bon mots himself—like Will Rogers.

Stokowski, the guest conductor of the Philharmonic Orchestra, of Greek godlike aspect, with two lights throwing his head into halo-ic relief, created havoc with the emotions of his feminine audience. A sea of femininity gazing at him with fatuous adoration! . . .

He knows all the dramatic tricks of his trade—standing poised to command absolute silence e'er one note shall be vouchsafed . . .

Lucille Morrison, the daughter of Lee M. Phillips, could have been a society queen had she so desired. Instead she prefers four boy babies—and writing books for youngsters. Her latest, "Mystery Gate," shows much charm and another is on the way.

She also sponsors that fascinating exhibit of dolls at Exposition Park and gives prizes to the youngsters who write the best stories about dolls. These have been published as "Doll Dreams."

Those who consider Lucille "standoffish" are mistaking a real reticence and reserve, a rather fine type of shyness, for conceit. She has gentle eyes and a sweet maternal expression of countenance—an ideal "mother of men." Her eldest boy is 8 years of age, her youngest two months.

Another clever girl for whom "society" as such is negligible is Eleanor Cole Bodrero, grand-daughter of the late Senator Cole. Eleanor is the tall, aristocratic type, with an intellectual profile, and her work is painting for textiles—in which she is making a happy success.

Surely an unusual experience. I was able to assist a young school-girl to vacation work—with an Ebell Club member. Both the latter and the schoolgirl write assuring me that everything was charming, praising each other, and thanking me for my introduction!

Quite often one gets reproaches from both sides. Or never hears from either. I glow with gratitude.

The doorman at the Biltmore stage door is an artist. His name is Edwin Baldridge—been in the profession twenty-seven years. But it is his portraits of all the presidents and Lindy, done on the backs of play-bills, that give one to marvel. Likenesses, technique, are all excellent—and he has never taken a lesson in his life—or tried to sell 'em.

The old property man, Springer, who recently committed suicide, must have been an interesting character. He left a unique collection of theatrical mementos, carefully labeled and preserved—and a dairy faithfully kept through the years.

The country club crowd strong at "The 19th Hole" at the Biltmore, amateur and professional golfers galore. Buoyant old Dick Schweppe with a gay party, including a lady whose bobbed hair was the perfect cut.

Mr. and Mrs. E. Collins, too, just back from Omaha, where Editor Collins has taken over another paper. That couple acquires new newspapers as others do new babies or new automobiles.

A college boy arrested for going thirty miles an hour through a small town near here. The court-room an ex-dyers and cleaners' store, with a corner fenced off for the police department. Big sign "No Smoking Allowed"—but the policeman smoking.

"Fifteen dollars or fifteen days," announced the judge.

"I guess I'll have to take the fifteen days," said the culprit, "because if I give you the money I can't go to school either." Then it transpired the little town had no jail—very embarrassing. Suspended sentence!

"I sort of suspected all they wanted was money," grinned the boy.

GLENDALE GROUP TO PRESENT NEW WORK

BLOCH'S PRIZE SYMPHONY ON ALTSCHULER'S NEW PROGRAM

In the general acclaim that greeted the first performances of Ernest Bloch's prize symphony, "America," by the principal symphony orchestras of the country, on December 20 and 21, many critics pointed out that only after additional hearings could the score adequately be analyzed and fully appreciated. It is, therefore, gratifying to learn that the Glendale Symphony Orchestra, under Maestro Modest Altschuler, is to present the new work on the evening of the 21st into in the Union High-school auditorium, East Broadway, Glendale, thus offering an early opportunity to those who enjoyed the first rendition of this really remarkable composition.

Altschuler, it is said, was one of the first of the leading conductors to obtain permission to present "America." The Glendale Symphony has had it in rehearsal for several weeks, but could not produce it earlier owing to previous program arrangements. Because of this conductor's fine musical attainments and long experience, and the excellent accomplishments of the Glendale orchestra, this repetition of the Bloch "epic rhapsody" should be worth attending. The program, of which it is part, is called by Altschuler a "Concert of the Nations." Always a clever program builder, he will first give national compositions of several countries, leading up to "America" as a grand finale.

SCHOOL ACCREDITED

Announcement is made by Idell Harvey Moye, director of the Southwestern College of Music, of the beginning of the midterm.

Credit given for work in the various branches of the school's studies can be applied toward high-school promotion or graduation, since all of the teachers are accredited and the school is authorized by the Board of Education to issue such credits.

STRING PLAYERS ENGAGED

Hazel Goodneau, banjo player, and Gertrude Lehman, guitar player, both pupils of Fred Martin, teacher of string instruments in the Music Arts Building, were signed last week for appearances in two vaudeville acts to be presented in the East for the remainder of this season.

IS 'INSPIRATION' NUDE IMPROPER?

surface of such controversies than one sees at a glance. Feeling against the female nude in art is not modern, not even confined to Christian times, but was present in that ancient Greece which poets and artists have tried to convince us was a paradise of gamboling and innocent nudity where one might meet at any time in the sacred groves a bevy of carefree goddesses, mainly attired in Olympian smiles.

This makes a pleasant theme which renaissance painters used successfully and which the Victorian painters, servants of a hypocritical public, ran into the ground by filling their "classical" pictures with cold-creamed harem beauties more likely to titillate the senses than to expand the soul.

Nothing could be further from the Greek ideal than the bar-room nudes of a past generation, though these are still to be found in art galleries and private collections. But it is not on the score of sensuousness—the great and rightly praised nudes of Titian and Giorgione are certainly sensuous—that the salon nudes of the nineteenth century deserve condemnation. Their fault lies in their failure to enlarge the mind. And this is due to the poverty-stricken art ideals of artists who, starting with a false conception of "classic" art, imagined they could make art by copying the prettiest studio model they could afford. This is the procedure of the average sculptor today.

GREEKS DRAPED FEMALE

The male nude was commonly used throughout the long development of Greek sculpture. The female figure was always clothed during the great ages, not until the fourth century — when decadence had set in—making its appearance in art.

Of course the artists must have studied the figure from life just as ours do, but they were chiseling marbles that typified the characteristic Greek balance of mind and body, of music and athletics, a harmonious conception that, in the Periclean age, enabled Phidias to bring back the gods in their most glorious forms.

The oriental voluptuousness which went through Alexandria to the later Roman world, and which we have inherited as part of our art tradition, was not characteristic of Greek art before the palmy days of Praxiteles and the philosophers. The stories of gods and heroes which were the materials of artists, poets and dramatists show us a race whose ideals, at least, had had much of the naturalness of animal and little of the voluptuousness of later, pleasure-seeking civilisations.

For what Praxiteles added to sculpture in praise of bodily charms was done at the expense of that austere grandeur of form and proportion that has remained the deathless glory of Greek architecture and sculpture.

In the Greek games only men took part and only men viewed them, thus male nudity was an accustomed social fact. Woman played a very different role in all ancient civilizations to the one she is now assuming in our own.

But now she shares our lives and recreations as a comrade and an equal and her social enfranchisement is aiding the growth of a franker, more natural social consciousness.

As, with increasing ease, we see woman paralleling man's stride in social and economic spheres of action, so we shall see art reflecting the new ideals. But it will take something more than the milk-and-water nymphs and fauns of present-day American sculpture to justify so much undraping or to interpret our age.

The only logical objection to "Inspiration" is that she reminds us too much of a languid fashion model who has forgotten her clothes. We are given an idealized portrait of the artist's model instead of a great plastic idea in bronze. Sculpture, lacking the animation of the human body, must still have "movement" if it is to possess any vitality at all. And what is sculptural movement? It is the passage of a great thought through the unyielding material; a balance of opposing forces which can only result in a noble form, itself made up of finely articulated and related component forms.

No model can pose such forms. Posing at once destroys the beauty of movement by arresting it. The great sculptor does not copy or even "idealize" what he sees before him. He uses what he knows, what he has learned from watching many models in movement, what he has learned from his study of former masterpieces. We may be quite sure that when a work of sculpture looks "posed," it is not great work.

The real objection to "Inspiration," if there is any, would not be on moral, but an esthetic grounds.

OPERA SEASON PLANS SHAPING

ing is proper organization and co-operation. When these things are achieved opera may become a more vital and frequent part of our city's enjoyment and education.

STATEMENT GIVEN

The opera association has tried to provide opportunity for many but its plans have not always met with success and the following statement by Mr. Armitage as spokesman of the association is of especial interest at this time:

"While we are in no way discouraged or sorry for having provided opportunities for resident artists in the opera, the lack of proper response and a proper appreciation of this unique opportunity on the part of young singers has been very enlightening to us. We hear on every side that the resident singer is never given a chance. Yet, with certain rare exceptions, our experience has been that most of them have not arrived at a point in their development where they are ready for great chances.

"Apparently our young singers do not realize that San Francisco and Los Angeles are the only two cities in America where singers, by entering our chorus, with a fair amount of intelligence and voice, can if they will, progress to minor roles and, if they merit it, to roles which are not minor.

"It is true that we demand regular attendance and a certain discipline in the chorus, but in turn for this small sacrifice we offer them a musical education, the rare opportunity to coach a chorus and operatic repertoire under some of the most eminent living maestros, an opportunity to sing as a part of a first-class ensemble and on the stage with the greatest artists under great conductors.

"Is it the overzealous parents or friends of the singer, is it the overambitious teachers of these young singers who convince the singer that this association is belittling them by giving them a minor role when they should be singing in the place of Schipa or, is it simply a lack of understanding on the singer's part? In any case, too large a percentage of those given these opportunities are careless about coming to rehearsals, see no necessity of spending time at our expense with the conductors and stage managers rehearsing their parts, believe that a voice is all that is necessary to an operatic career and become victims of an arrogance which would amaze a Rethberg. If they only realized that an operatic career needs years of background, of routine, of acquiring a stage sense—which comes only through repetition—they would be twice as valuable to us and a hundred times more valuable to themselves.

Apparently, the flash in the pan success of some of our young American singers in New York who have been forced into roles for which they were entirely unready and their inevitable failure to sustain their positions, have taught our young singers very little.

There are a few serious, understanding persons who have made the most of their opportunities with us and who have a future and it is because of these that I am sure that this association will always continue its policy of opening its doors to the resident singer.

BAPTIST CHOOSES ORGANIST

The music department of the First Baptist Church, Los Angeles, announces the engagement of Mabel Culver Adsit as organist. David Wright, who has served the church so capably as organist during the past two years, has accepted the position of choir director and organist of the First Presbyterian Church of Los Angeles, a position which he formerly filled.

FATE OF STARS HELD IN DOUBT

guage is often limited to but a few words.

Throughout its history, Hollywood has presented a growth cosmopolitan. The influx of Europeans attained its greatest development following the arrival of Miss Negri. She was regarded as the leader of the invasion.

To an elder group of actors, rather thoroughly Americanized, belong Jean Hersholt, Ramon Novarro (Mexican,) Karl Dane, Renee Adoree, and the English headed by Charlie Chaplin. Most of them have been in pictures for nearly ten years. In some cases, for more.

The big foreign invasion included Vilma Banky, Ronald Colman (English,) Greta Garbo, Mauritz Stiller; the Swedish director, Seastrom, Hansen and various others. Charles De Roche (French) was among the earlier arrivals, but went back shortly. Such players as Lil Dagover, Natalie Kovanko, Ivan Moujuskine, Natli Barr, Arlette Marchal, Andre Matonni, Joan (Dimples) Lido sailed away again in most cases after comparatively short sojourns. Some of them never played in a single picture. A little German girl, Eva Von Berne, was discovered by Irving Thalberg and Norma Shearer during a visit to Europe, played in one picture, and then bought a ticket to Berlin. Another German actress, Dita Parlo, was brought over not long ago by Paramount, but went home again without doing a single film. She may return later.

It may be said that the majority of shifts and changes have had little or nothing to do with talkies. Reports to contrary notwithstanding, they are the normal goings and comings of new talent. They do not represent any particular loss of international character of Hollywood.

Whether the talkies will mean an exodus of foreign stars of real box-office value is also seriously doubted. There are no signs of it as yet. Almost as many American stars are being affected by the change as European.

A foreign accent may occasionally be used to advantage in a film with dialogue, and again may not prove a detriment in the portrayal even of an unaccented role. The achievements of such artists as Modjeska, Ditrichstein and others on the stage in the past have shown that an accent is no deterrent. When it comes to musical films, foreigners might even anticipate a greater share of glory. A majority of artists of the grand opera and also many in comic opera have been of European extraction. The American stage has generally welcomed the foreign-born artists. There is no indication that he will not find as great favor in the screen medium, whether it be silent or synchronized.

FOREIGN CULTURE HELPS

Producers' opinions strongly bear out the idea that foreign players will not be affected.

"The screen should not be deprived of the talent possessed by the trained European," according to B. P. Schulberg, general manager of west coast production at Paramount.

"National dramatic academies, such as are to be found in all countries of the Old World, demand that their students, all potential stars, become versed in many languages," he said. "Therefore English comes easily to those who will but concentrate on its study. Also Europe likes to see its own flesh and blood in American-made photoplays. Producers are making films with international appeal, and foreigners are necessary.

"Another point in favor of the European is that accent is a thing of charm. This is true of Maurice Chevalier, Baclanova and Paul Lukas at this studio. Chevalier speaks English fluently, although his style may be termed colloquial. His touch of an accent adds another bit of charm to his personality.

"Today Baclanova understands everything one says to her in English and speaks the language remarkably well, whereas she needed an interpreter when she came to this studio." This only goes to prove that the foreigner can rapidly acquire knowledge of the language if he or she wishes to."

PROBLEMS OF HOME TALENT

"Talking pictures will no more spell the doom of the foreign player who finds difficulty in speaking perfect English than it will send into oblivion the domestic player who has to master dialect and broad accents for foreign characterizations," is the view expressed by Irving Thalberg, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer executive. "I am of the opinion that talking pictures will most certainly preclude the possibility of importing foreign talent indiscriminately," he continued, "but I am equally of the opinion that sound production will not in any great measure interfere with the success and following already obtained by foreign players who have won recognition in silent pictures.

"The hazards of talking pictures are double-edged. If we are to give the public vocal characterization the American and English player will be in no better position than the player from Sweden, Mexico or South America. If we are to eliminate the characterization of voice in our sound pictures it still remains for the domestic talent to learn to speak lines in a certain cadence, with certain inflections and certain emphasis, in most cases entirely different from their habitual manner of speech. To learn the same lines as they move from scene to scene will be very little more difficult for the foreign player who is perhaps hampered by an accent." Mr. Thalberg spoke very glowingly of the future of Greta Garbo and Nils Asther.

COLLEGE OF MUSIC TO BEGIN MID-TERM

By the Way

By EVA G. TAYLOR

Of all our acquired faculties, or qualities, discrimination is one of the most needful in our journey through life. We need it at every point.

The business man needs it, the educator needs it, the jurist needs it, and religious and civic organizations cannot get far without it. The lack of it spells disaster, or woeful sidetracking in individual life and organized activities. As we press on toward some goal of high endeavor we are constantly reminded of our dependence upon this outstanding quality.

While its synonym, "discernment," reveals the nature of the ends desired or striven for, discrimination will guide in the choice of means to obtain the end. It reveals characteristics and distinguishes between them.

It is sometimes used as a term of reproach; as when we say of those in charge of certain affairs: "They discriminate in favor." As with all our developed faculties or powers, discrimination may be put to the wrong use. It may favor one and deprive another. All of which betrays the under development of another faculty—justice.

It works in harmony with all the highly developed powers of mind or soul. It is especially necessary as an adjunct of the beautiful quality, compassion. It helps one to pity the innocent victims of a crime and those who suffer in consequence, rather than the brutal assassin.

Discrimination is most needed in our courts of justice. It would prevent the supine weakness shown to the enemies of society and mankind and properly distribute the qualities of kindness and compassion. It would make them available for the deserving victims of insatiable cruelty.

It would aid the minds of jurors to distinguish between the true and the false, between the deserving and the undeserving. It is a vital factor in true justice. It would prevent the scales from tipping so often the wrong way.

It would help to keep the balance established in character development. In all our activities it would decide between the essential and the nonessential. It would prevent encroachment upon our time by the unthinking. It would greatly aid us in our choice of friends. Discrimination would save us many a mistake, many a heartache, were its aid invoked in a crisis. It would help us to plan our entertainment and recreation more wisely and spare us much disillusionment.

It seems almost like the irony of fate that the young, whose need of this faculty is greatest, are practically devoid of it. It appears to come as a heritage of many disillusionments, or as an outgrowth of many tragic experiences. In some rare cases it may be a natural gift—or one predeveloped somewhere. In such instances it may shine out in youth and guide the feet safely through all the pitfalls.

The masses at large seem almost destitute of discrimination, of its synonym, discernment. They follow mob acclaim and mob frenzies. They are swayed by passion and prejudice and never distinguished between things or actions.

They praise today and censure tomorrow. Having no standards of excellence they are moved by their passing interests or desires, their likes and dislikes.

The quality they most need seems to be prohibitive to their stage of development. Lacking it, they go blindly on and emphasize the wrong things.

The so-called classes are not always particularly gifted in the art of discrimination either. In the political field we see glaring instances of this lack. Many otherwise superior minds have this faculty in latency, if indeed at all. The absence of it is often apparent in every walk of life.

To be able to discriminate between the true and the false, between the needful and the unimportant, would save many a blind lead. Yet the very distress of an experience often quickens the discerning power. The blind trails we take leading to no goal, awaken in us a scorn of futility and this in turn arouses the discriminative faculty.

However developed, it is a most important asset to any life.

William T. Ellis, in reviewing the present trend of modern civilization, suggests that the evils noted are the result of the sense of sin being dulled. He points to the fact that the new philosophies have substituted "a whole bewildering vocabulary of 'complexes', 'inhibitions,' 'repressions' while social evils grow apace." He says:

"Everybody has his own personal inside information that sin is no illusion . . . every straight-thinking mortal is aware that sin is a horrible fact and the greatest obstacle to the attainment of inner peace and of noble character. Every man's own experience assents to the Bible characterization of sin."

As everything else has been tried to explain the crime situation and the irreligion both in the churches and outside of them, it might be well to turn from the psychologists and the modernists to the Bible version of sin. It wouldn't hurt to give the soul a real cleansing in sincere penitence for that which has clouded its vision and disturbed its relations with God.

To be sure it is not a pleasant fact to contemplate and is thoroughly unpopular. It imparts such a smug, self-consciously superior sense to philosophize over the negation of evil—to reason it out of the universe. It is comfortable to feel no need or repentance and no necessity for th infusion of diviner life than is found in the human mentality.

Preachers preach around the ugly Bible fact of sin, in flowery discourses. They talk about everything under the sun except the need of repentance. Of course all this is highly gratifying to the criminally inclined. To give free rein to all the impulses wherever they may lead, is the natural thing to do where there is no penalty attached.

Where crime is merely the result of a "complex" or the release of a "suppressed desire" it has no need to offer apology for its existence, or make restitution to the offended law. Indeed, what right has the law to interfere if no sin has been committed?

Into what labyrinthine mazes does such a hypothesis lead?

Jungle Stream Will be Made for Siam Film

Land in Culver City that only recently was a real-estate tract, will soon be a broad river, with a steamboat floating in it, alligators in its waters and tropic jungles along its banks.

Construction of an entire river, one of the most ambitious engineering tasks ever attempted by picture technicians, will be started in a few days for Lon Chaney's next picture, "Where East is East," which Tod Browning will direct for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

The play is laid in the inner wilds of Siam, with a river boat as the only connection between civilization and the tea planters and animal trappers in the jungle.

The river will be 2000 feet long and some 300 feet wide, and will be supplied with water by artesian wells discovered on the site, and by pumps. Huge pumps will keep the current running, with a drain ditch as a connection.

The picture is a vivid mystery drama of Siam, with Chaney in the role of a sinister trapper in the wilds. Estelle Taylor will appear as his wife, a former circus performer, and a huge cast is being assembled for the picture.

LEADER SECURED FOR FILM PLAY

Engagement of Modest Altschuler, famous Russian director and composer, to synchronize Henry King's latest superfeature, "She Goes to War," is announced at Inspiration Pictures, Inc., headquarters. The collaboration of Altschuler is expected to result in an outstandingly fine score, the Russian Maestro having been known as a successful composer of film and theater music.

In fact, final rehearsals for the music are to be held late this or early next week, Altschuler and a score to copyists working day and night to complete the music for an early release. Next week the music will be definitely recorded. Judging from advance hearings, few changes will be necessary.

CHOSEN FOR LEAD IN MISSION PLAY

The announcement that Irmalee Campbell, California soprano, has been engaged as prima donna with the Mission Play for its coming season, follows a series of successful seasons in one of the leading singing parts of that production. Miss Campbell is, in a way, a product of the Mission Play, as her singing of one of the important roles has been one of the most highly praised factors of the play.

Miss Campbell's first success was won with Doris Keane in "Romance," in which production she toured the Pacific Coast for seventeen weeks. She sang the off-stage music which the star was supposed to be singing on the stage. Since that time the name of Irmalee Campbell has been featured in numberless concert, dramatic and operatic performances. She proved her operatic worth, singing the role of Nedda in "Pagliacci" and Gilda in "Rigoletto" with the De Lara Opera Company a few years ago.

BOOK TALKS SLATED

Aline Barrett Greenwood will give her monthly talk at the Shakespeare Club in Pasadena Wednesday. Included in the books she is reviewing are "Brief Candle," by Norman Venner; "The Tragic Empress," by Maurice Paleologue, as well as the play, "The Sacred Flame," by Somerset Maugham. She will give the same talks at the Ambassador Thursday and at the Biltmore Saturday.

VANCOUVER SEA MUSIC TO REVIVE CHANTEYS

At Vancouver, B. C., this great Pacific port is rolling up its bell-bottomed trousers in preparation for the four-day sea music festival scheduled for the 23rd and 26th inst., with headquarters at the Vancouver Hotel. All the music inspired by the sea from the time of the Vikings down to the present day will be heard in a series of concerts arranged for the hotel by Harold Eustace Key, director of Canada's major music festivals. Linked as it is with the familiar names of Capt. Cook and Capt. Vancouver, and with the less familiar Admiral Quadra connected with the early Spanish occupation, the city of Vancouver is rightly the scene of Canada's first celebration of the sailorman's songs. Vancouver's wharves, ever alive with the bustle of arriving and departing ships, offer a continuing panorama of the peoples of the world. Here tread the sailors of 100 lands, singing sea chanteys that have in common a marked rythmic swing despite the differences of language.

The high spot of the sea music festival is "The Order of Good Times," a ballad opera composed by Dr. Healy Willan of the Toronto Conservatory and translated and adapted by John Murray Gibbon from the French original of Louvigny de Montigny. The hero of this opera is the great Champlain, whose exploits in Canada's eastern portal link him with the present festival at the dominion's western gate. A further feature is the Viking Chorus of Vancouver, which will sing the earliest sea music devised by the Vikings, whose bold seamanship has become nautical history. The sea cadets of Winnipeg's Navy League will sing modern sea chanteys, and their band will play marine music at a number of the hotel concerts.

Dr. Vaughan Williams's famous sea symphony will be performed by the Vancouver Scottish orchestra assisted by 100 voices of the North Vancouver Choral Society under the director of Dr. Frederick Rogers. Vancouver's Welsh Male Choir of fifty voices, directed by Ifan Roberts, will sing Stanford's "Songs of the Fleet," accompanied by the Vancouver Scottish Orchestra, whose conductor is Mr. T. Shankey. This choir also will sing a selection of old sailor songs heard along the seacoast of Wales. A chorus of 250 Vancouver school children will be heard in sea songs and chanteys under the direction of Miss Ethel Bassin, L.R.A.M. Miss Bassin will also lead a group of young Hebridean fisherman in the singing of Gaelic fisher songs.

To make the festival more international in character, Mr. Key has invited the widely known Amphion Choir of Seattle to sing a program of distinctively American sea chanteys.

SINGER POPULAR

November and December have been filled with interesting engagements for the popular young soprano, Miss Florence Kaiser. Some of Miss Kaiser's recent appearances have been with the Glendale Symphony, the Hollywood Woman's Club, Schubert programs at the Biltmore, Charles Wakefield Cadman in the Dr. Frank Crane Memorial Service held in the Ambassador. The success of her appearance at Hotel del Coronado, not only necessitated a "repeat" concert, but a return engagement. The Pasadena Oratorial Society has engaged Miss Kaiser for an appearance in the near future. This early spring she will have an extensive concert tour in the East, and following these eastern engagements will appear in Germany where an itinerary has been arranged for her.

GAINS AND LOSSES

A recent human-interest cartoon depicted two "stylish stouts" at a luncheon table conversing earnestly for the moment on the subject of dietetics. According to the attached legend one of the ladies was asking the other: "Which do you count, Mrs. Jephcott, the calories or the vitamines?"

We are unable to extract any important moral from the trivial scene, but it may at least suggest a certain possibility of error in one fairly common attitude toward life. A not-infrequent manifestation of a similar attitude may be heard at bridge tables, when one player casually asks another: "Do you count your gains or your losses?"—[Providence Journal.

QUEUES IN DEMAND

More than fifty Chinamen's queues will be seen in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's picture, "The Bridge of San Luis Rey," although not one of the owners appear in the picture. It seems the braided hair of their queues is used for various items of make-up, such as eyebrows, eyelashes, wigs, switches, curls, side waves, goatees, chin pieces, beards and other articles demanding the use of hair.

TO APPEAR IN CONCERT

Maestro Andreo is coaching Maria Boni, an opera singer from Greece. Maria Boni will be the soloist with the Maestro-Andreo chorus, which is being prepared for a recital this spring. George Jones, baritone, another product of Maestro Andreo, is working on a program for his coming recital.

LOOKS EASY TO BE SILLY--- TRY IT, SAYS "NUT" COMIC

"To be a comic, one must have a philosophic slant on life. To be a 'nut' comic, one must be two philosophers rolled into one."

Will Mahoney, "nut" comedian headlining at the Orpheum this week, thus summarizes the artistry which has brought him fame and fortune.

"Most people," says Mahoney, "regard the 'nut' comic as slightly batty. They think only a half-wit would go out on the stage and make himself so hilariously silly that people can't help rolling in laughter at his antics. But that contention is wrong.

"Nut comicking is the most difficult of stage arts. The nut comic never gets any rest. He is continuously staying awake nights, trying to invent new so-called crazy idiosyncrasies which few authors or gag men can create.

"Harassing him always are boys and young men who want to become nut comics. They write strange epistles to him, approaching him curiously at stage doors and attack him in other weird ways." Mahoney asked one such youngster why a "nut" career seemed so attractive.

"It's so easy," was the reply. "All I gotta do is do crazy things. Everybody'll laugh and I won't have to work for a living!"

In New York recently Mahoney was starred in Gene Buck's "Take the Air!"

EXPORT TRADE CLIMBING

Shipments Through Pacific Coast Ports to Far East Increase During Fall Months

With the exception of Australia, Malaya and Ceylon, the United States, principally through Los Angeles and Pacific Coast ports, did a much greater export business with the Far East during October of 1928 than in October of 1927, and one that showed even a heavier advance when compared with September of the year just closed.

This highly favorable condition was attributed more to the quantity of shipments than to any general price increases, especially in the heavier values of iron and steel, raw cotton, automobiles, gasoline, automobile tires and lumber, it was reported yesterday by the statistical division of the Andrew Brown Co., Inc., Los Angeles manufacturers and exporters of lasquers, in an analysis of recent Department of Commerce figures. October trade with the Far East amounted in all to $186,587,000, Federal records disclosed, a total that the Brown comparison revealed showing a 9 per cent, or $18,184,000 increase over the corresponding period of the previous year.

Of the total amount, exports accounted for $91,410,000, an advance of $14,986,000 over the previous October, and of 27 per cent, or $20,-827,000 compared with September of 1928. Much of the latter gain was due to heavier sales abroad of raw cotton, automobiles and mineral oils. At the same time that the United States was so greatly increasing her sales in foreign lands, her overseas purchases were undergoing little change, it was revealed, the October imports of $95,117,000 remaining at practically the same level as a year ago.

Contributors to the heavy export growth were led by China, which in spite of internal strife, showed an increase of 112 per cent during the month under review. The Netherland East Indies disclosed the lowest gain, less than 2 per cent. Indo-China, or Anamite, and Siam, whose combined shares accounted for $450,000, or 5¼ per cent of the total exports to the Orient, bought 300 and 93 per cent, respectively, more than in 1927.

Burbank to Reopen With Stellar Cast

"Calieties of 1929" is the title of the production which reopens the Burbank Theater today, with the new policy of "burlesque that is different."

The new company will number eighty-five people; the cast is entirely new to Los Angeles theatergoers, all having been recruited from New York and Chicago. The players include Sam Weston, Charlie Goldie, comedians; Estelle Nack, Emily Clark and Hazel Miller, dancing soubrettes; Miss Ann Myers, prima donna; Will (Styles) Kraemer, Mack White, juveniles, an adagio specialty team, and a quartet of four youths.

The forty-five girls of the chorus have the distinction, it is said, of being able to act, sing and dance, a trinity of gifts very rarely bestowed these days upon chorus members.

The twelve Burbank syncopators will offer many musical novelties.

LUKAS IN FAMILIAR ROLE

Paul Lukas does his skillful best to break up another home in "The Wolf of Wall street," Paramount's all-talking picture starring George Bancroft with Baclanova as his wife in the story.

DIX PLAYS INDIAN

Richard Dix portrays the role of a Najavo of the tribe whose habitation of America is said to predate even the visit of the Norsemen, in the Paramount color production, "Redskin."

Highway Information

(The following highway information was issued by the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California under date of January 8, 1929. Motorists desiring any further information may obtain it by communicating directly with the club.)

GOLDEN STATE HIGHWAY TO FRESNO—From communities south of the Tehachapi Mountains motorists have a choice of routes into Bakersfield. They may either follow U.S. No. 99 (the Golden State Highway) across the Ridge on an entirely paved road, or they may bear to the right at Sangus and follow pavement via Mint Canyon to Mojave. From that point over Tehachapi Pass to Bakersfield is of oil gravel for the first eight miles leaving Mojave, thence graded and natural gravel to within nineteen miles of Bakersfield, where macadam is encountered and followed into town.

Continuing on beyond Bakersfield a paved highway extends to Delano, where the motorist turns to the right and crosses over to the eastern side of the San Joaquin Valley, following paved road, which is then continuous via Richgrove, Terra Bella, Porterville, Lindsay, Exeter, Visalia, Dinuba, Kingsburg and Sanger to Fresno.

The return to Bakersfield is then made over paved highway along U. S. No. 99 (the Golden State Highway) via Kingsburg, Tulare and Delano.

The trip is one of interest to those of agricultural inclinations, as it traverses the citrus belt, the grape belt and the wheat belt of Eastern San Joaquin Valley. At this time of the year, of course, wheat and grapes are out of season, but the citrus industry is now active.

For the motorist who has some time to spare, side trips may be made from Ducor to California Hot Springs, which is reached over a good type of mountain road, and from Porterville to Camp Wishon and Camp Nelson, which are accessible over paved highway to Claviela, then oiled to the resorts.

From Exeter and Visalia, Sequoia National Park may be reached by following paved road to Three Rivers, then oiled gravel practically the entire distance to Giant Forest, the center of activity in Sequoia National Park.

From Visalia, Gen. Grant National Park may be reached via Badger and Pinehurst, or Orosi, Miramonte and Pinehurst. On the former road pavement extends to the foot of the hills and on the latter to the junction of the Orange Cove Road. The remaining distance into the park is made over mountain highway.

Due to the possibility of snows in the higher altitudes at this time of the year, chains should be carried as an essential part of the equipment in attempting to reach any of the mountain resorts.

Upon the return to Bakersfield, a very instructive loop may be made, by way of Buttonwillow, McKittrick and Taft to Maricopa, which will take the motorist through the productive oil fields of the west side of the San Joaquin Valley. The road from Bakersfield to Maricopa is entirely paved. From Maricopa eastward to U. S. No. 99, at Reed's Station, is of pavement from the first two miles, then graded gravel, partially oiled, to Reed's Station.

EGG MARTS STABILIZING

Improved Production Methods, Grading and Storage Boon to Business Poultry Man Declares

Many important changes have taken place in egg production during the past few years which have given this important industry a greater stability, according to an official of the Runnymede Poultry Farms.

"One of the outstanding developments is toward the stabilization of prices throughout the year," he declared. "This has been the outgrowth of improved storage methods, better marketing practices, more careful grading and increased winter production made possible through scientific management of flocks.

SPECIALIZED REGIONS

"The most highly specialized regions in the country are found along both the Atlantic and Pacific coasts in sections where economic and climatic conditions are best suited to large-scale poultry farming, and production in these regions has been increasing rapidly. In this respect the Pacific Coast and Southern California in particular enjoy climatic conditions peculiarly suited for the economical production of eggs.

"It is the specialized poultry farms, which being able to give more time and attention to the scientific management of flocks of hens, have done most to increase the winter supply of fresh eggs. It is felt by many authorities in the trade that if the winter supply of fresh eggs continues to increase it may be expected to effect an appreciable reduction in the percentage of the annual production which must be held in cold storage.

"Here in Southern California, the cold-storage problem does not concern the housewife in the same manner that it does in the East, for under the conditions which eggs are produced here it is almost always possible to get the fresh product. The fact that we are able to produce them here all winter is a decidedly favorable factor in the matter of shipments to other States, which shipments are steadily increasing.

"The production of the big Runnymede plant, where 200,000 hens are cared for, is all consumed locally with an ever-increasing demand."

BRIGHT THIEVES

Stealing automobiles is an intellectual pursuit. That is the conclusion reached by a study of offenses committed by the young recently made from juvenile court records in Ohio. It was found that boys who were distinctly bright, and, in fact, those generally above the medium in their school work, average infinitely higher in the stealing of jewelry, money, and above all, automobiles. The dull pupils go in much stronger for immorality and that heinous offense—truancy. Maybe its because the latter lack the skill that makes thieving profitable, and also maybe the intellectual are better able to cover up their trail of immorality in case their instincts turn that way. The Ohio State Bureau of Juvenile Research worked out that the upper half of the juvenile class, during a given period, had gotten away (temporarily at least) with $158,000, while the morons had managed to steal only $960. During the same time the normally bright had stolen ninety-eight automobiles and the feeble-minded but one car. The conclusion from the study was that, given the proper surroundings, the mentally alert will "go bolshevik" as quickly as the dull or half-wit.—[New Orleans Times Picayune.

INSURANCE COMPANY TAKES LONG LEASE

HUNTINGTON PARK, Jan. 13—(Exclusive)—A five years' lease has been closed here by the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, with W. W. Wilson, owner of the new four-story business building at the corner of Slauson avenue and Pacific Boulevard, the company to occupy nine rooms in the east wing of the building. The company was established in the Huntington Park district two or three years ago, employing eighteen agents at that time, and it now has forty men at work in the district. The offices at the present time are located in the Hellman Building, and the new quarters are to be occupied about the middle of the present month.

DOG DISTEMPER CONQUERED

Dr. Laidlaw and Mr. P. W. Dunkin of the Medical Research Council, a British institution, have succeeded in discovering the true nature of the virus or poison which causes distemper in dogs, and have found a method of employing it so as to render dogs immune from attacks of the disease.

Five years ago the magazine Field undertook to raise a fund with which to engage experts to study the disease and attempt to find successful immunization against it. The happy outcome of their labors is now announced.

The method of preventing distemper consists of a double inoculation. Distemper, says the report of the discovers of the immunization process, occurs, not as was once supposed, by a visible germ of micro-organism, but by an invisible one that can be detected only by the virus or poison that reveals its presence. The virus is the concomitant of the organism causing distemper, and is present in all cases. The first inoculation is made with a vaccine which is in fact the virus of distemper, made inactive by laboratory treatment, and the second inoculation, made after an interval of about ten days, is made with a weak or attenuated strain of the living virus. This latter dose is a hundredfold more potent than that which would suffice to infect with distemper any dog that had not been inoculated with the first vaccine, but it produces only slight symptoms, because the dog is rendered partially immune by the first inoculation. The final treatment renders the animal completely and permanently immune from distemper.

The treatment has been put to the most severe test and found efficacious. Dog owners will await anxiously when the virus and vaccine requisite for the inoculations can be had from any veterinarian.—[Washington Post.

An Observant Child

Little Elsie was being taken to task by her mother. "You bad child! Just look at that jam on your face. Whatever would you think if you saw me with my lips and cheeks all smeared with red like that?"

Elsie considered a moment and then said innocently. "Why, I'd fink you was goin' to a dance, mummy."

"RUNNIN' WILD."

California's milk bottle law prohibits a dairy from using the bottles of another, and in consequence the milkmen have set up an exchange that handles 750,000 scrambled bottles a month. But would it not be simpler to have all such containers officially stamped as to contend and let them run wild throughout the industry?—[New Orleans Times Picayune.

ART OF GORGING DEAD, SAYS CHEF

Oscar of Waldorf Mourns Decay of Gormandizing

Passing of Wine Card Helps Speed Decline

Americans No Longer Stuff Selves at Banquets

NEW YORK, Jan. 12. (AP)—The art of dining well as it used to be known is dead in the United States, according to no less an authority than Oscar of the Waldorf. Oscar is busy, as the time approaches for the razing of the famous old hotel, collecting his intrinsic reminders of thirty years at the head of the Waldorf-Astoria dining-rooms and kitchens. Among his souvenirs are menus of many a feast to which few moderns would be equal.

Imagine, for instance, any dinner party sitting down to such a banquet, in these days, as the Bradley Martins spread at the Waldorf in 1899 in farewell to their daughter and the Earl of Craven, about to wed and take up their residence in England.

A ROYAL GORGE

Eleven courses were served—not for the guests to choose from, but for them to eat in their entirety. First was bouffe russe, then clams, and gumbo printanierre and green turtle soup. Five meat dishes followed: Moose, timbale of shad roe with oyster crab sauce, sweetbreads, gourmet, spring lamb and boneless squab. Salad, a wealth of desserts and coffee completed the feast. Courses were interspersed with choice wines. The meal cost $20 a plate, and would cost $50 today.

Gourmets of 1929 would grow dull-eyed before the lamb arrived. The greediest of them would select half a dozen courses and be filled.

DECLINE OF GLUTTONY

The decline of epicureanism in the United States, Oscar thinks, has two primary causes. One is the prohibition of wines and liquers necessary to the proper enjoyment and digestion of food. The other is the custom of dieting. He of the twentieth century may eat more wisely, but not as well.

Oscar's last name is Tschirky, but to habitues of the Waldorf he has always been plain Oscar. When he was 17 he landed in New York from Switzerland, and on the same day he took out naturalization papers and got a job as bus boy in the old Hoffman House, run by the Ned Stokes, who later shot and killed Jubilee Jim Fisk.

Stokes noted Oscar's aptitude and saw to it that he had opportunity to learn everything pertaining to inn-keeping.

FOUNDS HIS FAME

Presently Oscar went to Delmonico's, where most New Yorkers of consequence ate in those days. He soon came to know, as captain of waiters there, all of the 400 and before the Waldorf ever was contemplated he was the most famous waiter in town.

Oscar and his father were walking up Fifth avenue one day in the early nineties and Oscar's father asked, "What's that big hole in the ground?" "They're building a hotel there," Oscar answered. "Ah," said the parent, "an opening for you, maybe?"

Oscar pursued the suggestion, and George C. Boldt, who was already engaged to manage the hotel, asked him for references. Whereupon Oscar sent the names of seventy-five social laders of the town, all patrons of his at Delmonico's. He got the job.

Oscar wouldn't tell this of himself, but it was he who taught many a millionaire of the nineties how to eat. They came to his tables at the Waldorf with hearty appetities, and under his tutelage they became connoisseurs of kingly viands in the golden age of the groaning board.

STONE REMINISCES

Lewis Stone, most recently with Greta Garbo in "Wild Orchids," is one player who not only doesn't mind but encourages the outbursts of "I knew him when" brethren. For over ten years Stone was the matinee idol of a Los Angeles theater, and outsiders of the city who visit the studio usually pounce upon him with voluble reminiscences. Stone not only smiles but pulls out a few added memories of his own.

Talkies Make Girls' Voices Sound Alike

Marceline and Alice Day are sisters as well as sister film players. The two are of widely different types, the former being a brunette and the latter a blonde.

They have appeared in entirely different sorts of screen roles—in fact, are generally acknowledged as being wholly different on the screen.

Now they are making "talkies" and their voices register almost identically the same.

"When my voice was played back in the talking sequences I made in Reginald Denny's picture, 'Red Hot Speed,' I thought I was listening to my sister Marceline," says Alice.

'And when I listened to the play backs of the sequences I made the other day in 'The Wild Party,' I was amazed because my voice sounded exactly like Alice's," says Marceline.

"We've never registered at all alike in real life or over the telephone," Alice continues, "so it must be some particular trick of the talking device that picks our tones up identically," she concludes.

MISSION PLAY DANCER

Eva Rosita, dancer of "The Mission Play," is a pupil of Eduordo Cansino, who arranged the dances for her. Mr. Cansino has arranged special numbers for many stars, among them Dorothy and Fred Stone, Ada May, Ziegfeld star; Violet Beche, Orpheum headliner; Luis Arnold and Carmen De Lara, featured dance team on Orpheum Circuit, and Nennette Vallon, featured dancer of "The Desert Song."

BICKFORD STOCK VETERAN

Charles Bickford, whom Cecil De Mille has just induced to desert New York stage stardom for fame in talking pictures, will have a ready-made "public" in Boston, Lynn, Lawrence, Haverhill, Lowell, Newport, Staten Island, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Harrisburg, St. Louis and Chicago. He played leads in stock in those cities.

Edward Brothers will excavate a store site at Brighton Way and Beverly Drive, Beverly Hills, for Bolger Dry Goods Company.

Goldwyn Star Hopes to Get Madcap Roles

At heart a comedienne . . . in her first American picture the heroine of an unhappy love story, almost a tragedy. That is the situation in which Lily Damita, vivacious French actress, finds herself.

Her first picture on this side of the water, "The Rescue," adapted from Joseph Conrad's adventurous tale of the Javanese seas, made of her a woman madly in love with a man she could not have. Crazed by her desire for him, she brings havoc into his life, and causes the death of all of his friends. Love, honor, and hope are lost to him through her agency.

And yet the Lily of France is at heart a rascal . . . gay, devilish, a lovable, laughable girl, who finds it hard to be a serious lady.

In a recent interview, Lily admitted that she would love to play an almost cartoonish part as her first starring vehicle. For it is said Samuel Goldwyn has promised to star her soon as the result of her success in "The Rescue."

"In France I played several such roles with success. In fact, my public expected me to appear in almost—what you call hoydenish parts," she said.

"Madcap?" it was interposed.

"That's it, madcappish."

Lily has gone to New York to appear at the eastern opening of her picture. She has just completed a leading feminine part in "The Bridge of San Luis Rey." That portrayal, too, is a seriously dramatic one. Her dream of doing a lighter part will soon come true, according to Samuel Goldwyn. First she will appear in another role opposite Ronald Colman, and then will probably be starred alone.

"The Rescue" continues at the United Artists for another week.

SHERMAN REVELS IN DUAL ROLE

Directs as Well as Acts in "Guardsman" Now at Figueroa

BY ALMA WHITAKER

Every actor and actress in Hollywood is jealous of Lowell Sherman and Doris Lloyd for having secured those peachy roles in Franz Molnar's "The Guardsman," which opens tomorrow evening at the Figueroa Playhouse as the third of the new Repertory Theater's offerings.

Lowell Sherman, long-time actor as he is, rejoices in the dual role of the guardsman-husband-actor, who works up a gorgeous frenzy of jealousy of himself when he elects to deceive his wife. Doris, the wife, not only has a gem of a part, but wears four utterly ravishing gowns—with trains—which Lowell, too, has to dodge gracefully.

Lowell is also director of the play—so that he is the right person to throw things at if it doesn't prove as "distingue" as rehearsals promise.

They were sighing a little at rehearsal last week when the news came that subscribers of the Repertory Theater had taken every seat for the opening, and hence there could be but a few motion-picture star confreres to witness the hoped-for triumph on the first night.

The acoustics of the theater are pronounced excellent since Lowell Sherman himself has tested them from every part of the house. It would be dreadful for any of the audience to miss a line of this provocative play—which ends on such a naughty question mark.

It is noteworthy that this "Guardsman" has kept his figure with never a hint of corporation anywhere, something which so often mars the romance of a lover role. For, be it known, that Lowell loves his food, any food—everything except parsnips. And so . . . "How, how?" he was asked, with a view to spreading important information in Hollywood.

"I eat anything I like three weeks out of every month," confided Lowell, "but the fourth is always atonement week. For years I have disciplined myself every fourth week. I did long before diets were fashionable. I cut out all starches, sugar, fats. Sometimes I go on a strict vegetarian diet, sometimes just liquids. Soup, for instance," he added, hastily, "or milk. Nothing nectarish. I can eat what I like today having just completed a week of soup," he announced, oozing virtue and triumph.

This Lowell Sherman comes of a theatrical family, his grandmother was a famous actress before him. He grew up on the stage, and, although of late pictures have claimed him for six months out of the year, especially between winters on the New York stage, he says there are only two kinds of actors, good ones and bad ones. The good ones are good on both the stage and screen and the bad ones always bad. And neither kind can hope to make any sort of success without a good role. He has played in one "talkie" for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer so far—but turned down two other offers in order to appear in this "The Guardsman." "Any actor would," he grins.

"Look at the chance I have to show both a voice and my acting ability in such a role. Of course, every actor wanted it," he confesses. Not entirely for art's sake, you see.

"I often wonder just how the public feels about newspaper interviews—and curtain speeches," he pondered. "I doubt whether many actors enhance their prestige trying to talk for publication."

He can laugh at actors generally, including himself — and "The Guardsman" is quite a good joke on actors.

A COUNSEL OF PERFECTION

A bulletin just issued by the National Safety Council is headed by the question: "What are the qualifications of a safe automobile driver?" In answering the question it sets forth an even score of qualities which to the casual reader would appear to be a counsel of perfection. In fact, we feel no risk in making the assertion that there is not a single driver in the world who measures up to the qualifications.

One of the all-embracing requirements is that a driver should be "possessed of all his senses." Two essential senses in a driver are hearing and seeing, and yet recent investigations have proved that these are frequently deficient in applicants for license to operate a car. Another quality emphasized by the National Safety Council is: "All traffic rules of States, cities and towns through which the car is operated should be observed." A sound injunction, but difficult to follow if a man has any other business requiring attention.

However, it is a good axiom which the council coins: "Accidents do not happen—they are caused," and there are certainly too many of them which are avoidable.—Longview (Wash.) News.

Another Slam at Sandy

"Do Not Touch the Exhibits," runs a notice in a London waxworks emporium. Despite this warning, there is one effigy of a millionaire so realistic that several Scotchmen have tried to touch it for a fiver.—[Auckland News.

Whoops! Music Box Girls in New Dresses

"Television chiffon," latest bathing creation from Paris, will be introduced by the show girls in the "Music Box Revue" at the Hollywood Music Box tonight in a new Deauville beach scene in which Lupino Lane plays the comedy role.

This material recently startled French society when worn by Jean Nash at Nice and Juan les Pins, fashionable European resorts. Since then its vogue has spread to the stage revues at the Follies Bergere and Moulin Rouge, in Paris. Designed by M. Amazar, famous fabric wizard, it has been hailed as the greatest discovery in years.

"Television chiffon" derives the name from the fact that it is the only material so far devised which can be shown in technicolor over television equipment. It comes in pastel shades of orchid, peach blossom, canary, turquoise blue, magenta, pale emerald and boudoir pink.

Revealed in striking one-piece design, this latest Music Box novelty is cut low in front and back, and when worn by beautiful show girls it is like a page from La Vie Parisienne brought to life.

Each television costume weighs but two ounces, and the local order is the first received in this country, having been mailed here direct from Amazar's studio in Paris.

A WALK HOME

When William Hazlitt, in his "Table Talk" series, wrote in his own delightful way "On Going a Journey," he had in mind something of a three-mile jaunt along the countryside, with a quaint, inviting inn at its termination, while "every mile of the road heightens the flavor of the viands we expect at the end of it." Hazlitt wasn't writing for the present-day motorist or street-car rider, who rushes home to his evening meal with only such anticipations as may be guessed.

He wasn't writing even for the downtown worker who elects to defy custom, deliver himself from the inhuman din of traffic and set out afoot, for a trudge of four or five miles, with the red glow of the West fading into the more lurid street lights and a good stiff December breeze beating steadily into his face.

Yet upon actual experience the testimony is submitted that the person who is bold to make such a choice may not only find his evening meal more inviting but be led to refresh his mind on Hazlitt or some other old master when the hour arrives for an easy chair and a pipe or cigarette at the comfortable fireside.

Then he may appreciate the full meaning of the remark in "Tom Brown's School Days" that the typical Englishman chose to ride on the top of a coach, rather than the inside, in the coldest of weather, just to satisfy his dogged desire to stand out against something. That, of course, was when coaches were in order. The representative Englishman today rides atop the double-decker, just as the hardy youngbloods do (not) in Kansas City.—[Kansas City Star.

INDIVIDUAL COSTUME IDEAS POSSESSED BY FILM STARS

Although the feminine stars of Hollywood form a group of the best-dressed women in the world, each one possesses a highly individual theory of costuming that is at wide variance from the next sister of fame.

For instance, the lovely Esther Ralston believes that clothes are merely a background for one's face, hair and figure. Therefore, her frocks are extremely subtle and deft in results. Miss Ralston prefers soft, feminine drapes in solid colors, such as all gray, black, dull blue or pastel colorings.

Then the vibrant Evelyn Brent decisively proclaims the fact that every frock, hat and accessory a woman wears is a certain index to her character. It is every woman's duty to dress for the part nature originally molded her to play. Miss Brent carries out her conviction by wearing striking, definite costumes that cause one to note their cleverness immediately.

Having won the title, the best-dressed woman in Hollywood, Florence Vidor modestly says that she has nothing original to offer on the subject, unless the fact that she always adheres to strict tailleurs for street wear, and supreme simplicity on all other occasions, might prove helpful.

But along comes Clara Bow, Paramount's dynamic redhead, with the news that she selects her wardrobe to please herself and no one else. She loves brilliant colors and wears them. She doesn't like hats, so reduces this commodity to the lowest common denominator. If black depresses you, don't wear it, is Clara's advice, even though fashion moguls point to it with favor.

THREE-PIECE ENSEMBLE

Too much stress cannot be laid on the ensemble theme which has so successfully pervaded the whole world of feminine fashions. One of its most popular versions is the costume consisting of a three-quarters length coat, a pleated skirt of similar fabric and color, and a blouse of lighter shade. Lightweight tweed will be most effective for the skirt and straight-line coat shown above, while the square-necked blouse may be of crepe de Chine or satin in white or one of the off-white shades.

HILLMEN MARRY AS MANY WIVES AS PURSE PERMITS

As many wives as a man can afford is the rule governing polygamy in the Red Sea Hills of Northeastern Africa.

This is the information brought back to Hollywood by Ernest B. Schoedsack and Merian C. Cooper, co-directors of "The Four Feathers," A. E. W. Mason's "British bible of courage," which is being filmed by Paramount as one of its chief bids for screen leadership during 1929.

Thousands of Fuzzy-Wuzzys, Rudyard Kipling's "first-class fighting men," who rule that portion of the globe, and who have wives in proportion to the number of camels and sheep they own, appear in some of the most thrilling scenes of this picture. Cooper and Schoedsack spent eight months in the Red Sea Hills filming location scenes for "The Four Feathers."

It is almost impossible to obtain photographs of the Fuzzy's wives, and Schoedsack and Cooper made no unusual efforts to overrule the objections of the black warriors of the hill country to their women posing for pictures.

The featured players in "The Four Feathers" include Richard Arlen, Fay Wray, Clive Brook, William Powell, Noah Beery, Theodor Von Eltz, George Fawcett, E. J. Ratcliffe and Noble Johnson.

FOOLS AND ROGUES

"I was never a rogue," wrote Robert Burns, "but I have been a fool all my life, and in spite of all my endeavors I see now plainly that I shall never be wiser."

Burns did many foolish things and one supremely wise one. He is remembered gratefully by the world because he cultivated the one great gift he possessed. Amidst all his troubles, he did not sulk; he sang, because the gift of song was given him.

Anyone who does one thing well will be forgiven the ill-doing of many things. Anyone who builds on the one authentic ability that is his own, whether it be writing poetry or blacking boots, will not miss the warming consciousness of at least a little success.

All men are moved to confess themselves fools at times; few will admit that they are rogues; but the dividing line between roguery and folly is hard to draw.

We are all both rogues and fools. "If any man say he has no sin, he deceives himself," says the New Testament.

In spite of all our sin and all our folly, there is in us a streak of good and a gift of power. A poem, according to the Greek derivation of the word, is really a "deed." Burns's deeds were in singing lines of rhyme, yours and mine may be in other things; but if we have written them somewhere in the record of our lives, we need not despair concerning the outcome.—[Detroit Free Press.

NOT IN THE DAYS OF '49

At Wallace Arctic-ward of Diamond City in the heart of the Lethbridge Northern district, two corporations are developing "a model mining town." Around its business center will be small truck farms to be occupied by miners with families. Water will be provided in abundance. The model settlements will possess the usual instruments of a well-organized community, including, in all probability, a traffic congestion problem.

In an age of standardization and efficiency this is highly gratifying but there are men who will be glad they lived before the mining camp gave way to a pattern of municipal planning. That's gold in them thar hills; there is romance in the huddle of tents clustered at the foot of a cliff pitted with speculative shafts of eager prospectors seeking ore. The dance hall and the gambling saloon, advance agents of civilization in another day; the bad man with notched gun, the marshal whose mild voice was belied by his cold blue eyes, the main street with its sink holes, the cemetery down the gulch so soon populated with those who died with their boots on—these have no place in a model town, but they do belong in the picture of the search for the lost mine.

From workings ventilated by electrically operated fans the miners of today will return to pleasant cottages embowered in highly cultivated gardens, don their smoking jackets, and with wonder touching incredulity read of the strange but not barren life led by their predecessors.—[New York Sun.

Parisian Idol Had Ill Luck in Early Life

Bleakest poverty is the background of Maurice Chevalier, Paris stage idol and popular figure in continental night life, who recently was brought to Hollywood by Paramount to appear in all-talking film productions.

Chevalier was born in Menilmontant, near Paris, less than thirty years ago. When he was 11 years of age his father died and his mother was left with the burden of supporting him and other young children.

As a boy he was an apprentice carpenter, electrician, printer and doll painter. At 13 he was a salesman for a painting shop. He lost practically every job he had.

After working hours, while employed in a nail factory, he studied acrobatic work, but a sprained ankle and an injured face caused his mother to halt these endeavors.

He was a pronounced failure in his debut as a singer at a theater.

His first successful performance as a singer, at the Casino des Tourelles, paid him three francs an evening, four evenings a week. The boy did well, imitating popular hits and stars.

In his late teens he was the dancing partner of Mistinguett at the famed Folies-Bergere. In 1913 he began his military training period. Then came the war, wounds, capture and imprisonment. With a friend he escaped, posing as a Red Cross worker. France honored him with a military cross.

Following the war he again became the partner of Mistinguett at the Folies Bergere and the Casino de Paris. He soon became a star, the idol of the Paris theatrical

In addition to being engaged to sing a program of songs before the Masonic lodge in Hollywood during the latter part of this month, she sang thirty-five programs during the past two months, among which was the Los Angeles Athletic Club program given at their annual musical last month, as well as a program she presented recently before the Harbor Chamber of Commerce.

Stars to Try Out New Acts

Monday will be vaudeville night at the Pom Pom, Hollywood, on which occasion a special impromptu program will be staged between performances of the current "Rue de la Paix" revue, with William Melkeljohn, producer, acting as master of ceremonies.

Stars from the Orpheum, Hillstreet, Pantages, and other variety houses will attend as guests of honor, and beginning promptly at midnight they will introduce new songs, try out new dances, and tell a lot of new gags.

Many vaudeville performers first gained fame at the Pom Pom, including Crockett's Mountaineers, the Candreva Septette, the Four Olympians, Bubbles, Esther Freesman, Bell and Costes, the Trigg Brothers, Georgie Grandee, Moroni and Warner, Raquel and Casanova, Frank Evans, George Wards and other favorites.

MUELLER COMPOSITIONS

Kurt Mueller, who is making his residence in Los Angeles, is not only a successful piano teacher but also a composer who has a reputation in Europe and America. He was the first teacher of the finishing classes at the Klindworth-Scharwenka Conservatory of Music in Berlin, and the first professor at Helsingfors Conservatory in Finland after Busoni left. He was also director of the Atlanta Conservatory and director and president of the Southern University of Music. Some of Prof. Mueller's songs were recently sung by the Wagnerian soprano, Milka Ternina, who complimented them highly and will sing a group of them for her concert tour through Austria and Jugo-Slavia.

ATTERBERG'S LITTLE JOKE

The Swedish composer and musical critic, Kurt Atterberg, won the $10,000 prize in the Schubert centenary contest. He pocketed the check from the corporation promoting the contest, accepted the congratulations of eleven judges from eleven different nations and sat down to enjoy the disputes of experts over his work. But amid these disputes Mr. Ernest Newman suddenly projected a searchlight on the prize symphony. He pointed out in the London press that large parts of it were clear imitations of Stravinsky, Berlioz, Dvorak, Delius and others, and that Mr. Atterberg was plainly spoofing the public. Now the composer admits that this is true and that he was perpetrating a colossal joke.

Opinions will differ upon the taste of such a jest. They will differ also upon the question whether Mr. Atterberg really showed up—as he says he intended—the ignorance of the musical world. Apparently numerous writers have commented on the "reminiscent" passages, and it did not take Mr. Newman long to expose the pastiche. But there can be no doubt that the judges are left looking very funny. Nor can there be much regret over the fact that Mr. Atterberg has shown up the fatuous nature of most prize contests. The theory put forward by the publisher, phonograph company or manager who offers $10,000 for a novel, symphony or play is that some great genius is just waiting for a prize of this character to stir him into producing his masterpiece. The actual motives usually are (1) to draw a good many works that might normally go to other commercial interests and (2) to obtain reverberant publicity. Mr. Atterberg took the "inspiration" of this prize at just about its face value—and he has certainly delivered the publicity.—[New York World.

ANANIAS OR THE FALSE ARTIST

A Review of the Courageous and Thoughtful Book in Which Walter Pach Lays a Firm Finger on Some of Art's Most Delicate Nerves

BY ARTHUR MILLIER

The real fault in Ananias was that he tried to keep a foot in both camps. Like the rest of the disciples who had property, he sold it. But unlike them he did not lay all the proceeds at the Apostles' feet that they might be distributed to "every man according as he had need." No, Ananias and his wife Sapphira kept back a part, doubtless against a rainy day when the community of the faithful might fail them.

But Peter saw through the ruse and said: "Ananias . . . thou hast not lied unto men, but unto God."

This book is aimed straight at a condition that most critics lack the courage, the conviction or the opportunity to indite, and those who love art—as distinguished from those who only make their living out of it—owe a debt of gratitude to the man who had the courage to publish it. No one knows better than he who writes about art the discomforts attending plain speaking.

The false artist—and he is legion today as never before—is one who, having it in him to give all, holds back a part. And forever after he is the bitter enemy of the true artist.

Less than 100 years ago in Paris a directory of artists listed some 200 names. Today the Undersecretary of Fine Arts of the French government estimates 40,000 artists in that city. Mr. Pach believes that then as now only about 100 of these artists would leave the world any richer for their work.

It has been a singular feature of the last century that the artists who enjoyed official position, who directed the schools and formed public opinion, usually belonged to the Ananias group. As he develops his theme he makes it clear that Ananias is not all black; he is often a very good fellow. But the limitations of his narrow mind, no less than his instinctive fear of powerful work he does not understand, make him the implacable enemy of good art. Because of his counsel the public works, which in other ages were done by the best artists of the time, usually go to Ananias, and the true artist is seldom accorded official recognition or shown to a wide public until death comes knocking at his door.

So usual is this treatment that people have come to regard it as inevitable. Thus benefactors of museums put codicils in their bequests stipulating that the funds shall not be used to purchase works before the artists have died, on the assumption that only death can pick out the true artist. Yet the Renaissance does not seem to have suffered from such fears and the greatest artists were competed for as soon as their genius disclosed itself. Moreover, when a really great artist dies today the Ananias pack barks round his prostrate form with renewed animosity and greater courage.

Ananias himself and the public are the sufferers, not the true artist, because the integrity of his work is the latter's first interest. The failure of the age to provide handicraft opportunities for the huge numbers who practice the crafts of painting and sculpture is blamed for hordes who rush into them today.

Most of Mr. Pach's illustrations of the works of Ananias are taken from the Metropolitan Museum because he grew up with and in that institution. The current tendency of many museums to pander to an ill-formed public taste in order to attract crowds is ably criticised. Of the good works included for contrast, one is that superb Thomas Eakins portrait of Senorita Gomes which this reviewer urged should be purchased for our museum when it was shown here. It is now permanently in the Metropolitan Museum collection.

How Ananias functions in his political role and as public and private adviser is thoroughly demonstrated and the author has not feared to give chapter and verse.

COMPOSITIONS PUBLISHED

Joseph Jean Gilbert, well-known flutist, is almost as busy these days with his composition activities as he is in his flute playing, for in addition to having one of his compositions, entitled "A Song to the North," accepted by Alfred Devota, pianist, and which is now, with Gilbert's permission, being used in a text-book on modern art song composition in a New England conservatory, he has also just finished a group of three songs entitled "Dissolution." These latter songs were written to three poems, the lyrics of which were written by Ann Blair, a well-known eastern poet, lawyer and clubwoman.

Mission Play Setting for Many Parties

With the 100 artists in the Mission Play cast giving presentation of the historic production in its eighteenth year's career at San Gabriel, L. H. Boydston, newly appointed field director, reports that an increasing number of special parties are being planned by various civic and commercial organizations and clubs throughout Southern California for employees, members and guests.

Boydston has established Los Angeles headquarters for the Mission Play at 367 Chamber of Commerce Building, and with the co-operation of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, he is assisting many committees in planning their entertainment program for coming conventions.

For the first time this year, the Mission Play is presented with synchronised organ accompaniment, which lends unique glamour to the production. Under the direction of Florence Jefferson Madser, the new musical director, who is nationally known, the various musical numbers are said to be a distinct triumph.

R. D. MacLean, celebrated dramatic actor again plays the stellar role of Fray Junipero Serra, with Irmalee Campbell, new soprano lead, playing opposite, as Senora Yorba.

John Steven McGroarty, the author, assisted by Ida L. McGroarty and Julius V. Madsen, personally directs the famous production, which is now in its eighteenth year and holds the record for presenting more than 2650 performances in its own playhouse.

MUSICALES BY PUPILS OF OPERA COACH

Beginning with January 7, Guido Caselotti, Los Angeles vocal instructor, will hold weekly musicales to be given in his studio each Monday evening in the Beaux Arts Building.

Mr. Caselotti is a former pupil of Toto Octogni of the Academy of Santa Cecelia in Rome. Caselotti also announces that the weekly classes in Italian and French with native teachers are to be continued permanently.

Caselotti comes by his musical activities rightly, as he descends from a family of musicians, his father having been an operatic basso of repute, his two brothers both opera singers, teachers and composers. His wife, Mme. Caselotti, is an internationally known opera singer, and his daughter, Louise Caselotti, who is following in the footsteps of her parents, is to be heard January 27 as soloist with the Philharmonic Orchestra.

The New in Stores & Homes

Novelties, Ideas, and Suggestions

By OLIVE GRAY

...the convenience of lounge or sofa, is obtainable for oh, so little of our household money. And, almost incredible is the improvement made by even a single additional piece of good furniture.

Shoes Stretch Up

Are shoes making an effort to follow skirts? Or rather to bridge the gap between hem and footwear? Many of the newer pumps disport high tops at the back. Not exactly "bustle-backs," but somewhat on the order of the bustle trend in couture, some of the new shoes display, in their high aims.

Watered

Whether it rains more or not, moire silk—formerly named "watered silk"—is bound to return to favor, during the coming season. This is guaranteed by the examples shown in some of the more exclusive shops. In these examples, the new-old silken weave is modernized and carried far away from its former somewhat stodginess, by reason of the sauciness of line and angle. In the old days, when moire was grandame's favorite silk, dignity was its characteristic; but fashioned in the new bustle-backs, the jaunty clinging skirts, with dancy-floating panellings, this material is decidedly modernistic.

Nancy Drexel Coming Into Just Reward

Although she has been rated one of the outstanding figures in Hollywood's class of motion picture players, Nancy Drexel, who has the featured feminine role in "Prep and Pep" at the Boulevard Theater, is just coming into her own with the public.

Making five pictures in a year, including Murnau's "Four Devils," is admittedly a feat for an actress so young as Miss Drexel, and it would seem that the motion picture screens of the country would see much of her. Yet, due to the vagaries of motion picture making and their release, it was not until a little more than a month ago that the first fruit of this continuous effort was unfolded for the approval of audiences.

As the result, in the last two weeks four of Nancy's pictures were played on Broadway and "Prep and Pep" is the third to be shown in Los Angeles in three weeks.

"If audiences get as much enjoyment out of seeing 'Prep and Pep' as I did out of making it, they sure will enjoy it," said Nancy. "It was just like being back at school. We made the picture at Culver Military Academy in Indiana and, just think of it, I was the only girl on the campus.

"David Butler directed the picture. He made 'The High School Hero,' you know, but he didn't seem like other directors. He seemed more like one of the boys. It was as much play to him as it was to Dave Rollins and Johnny Darrow and me."

On the stage at the Boulevard is a big Lynn Cowan review, featuring the Hollywood Beauties, and West Coast Variety, etc.

Jetta Goudal Finds Talkies Much Easier

Jetta Goudal says it is much more terrifying to appear before the camera and make a silent picture than it is to work in a "talkie" production.

"Having something definite to say," says Miss Goudal, who has just completed her talking sequences in Griffith's "Women of the Pavements," is much simpler than playing the silent drama.

"I can liken it to the difference in standing before an audience without anything particular to say in comparison to getting up without something that is well set in the mind. Naturally one makes a much better impression with a definite something at the tip of her tongue."

Miss Goudal had years of stage training before coming into the films. Her first theatrical work was done in French in a Paris theater. Next she came to America and appeared in stage production in New York.

Fawcett Uses Protean Skill to Advantage

Fitting into any environs keeps George Fawcett always working. A make-up man once remarked that Fawcett has features and builds as to adapt him to any kind of nationality even including oriental types.

"Actors had to be protean," Fawcett explained one day when a younger player asked him how he did it. "They did not play just one kind of thing—but everything!"

An interesting compliment was paid his versatility in his current engagement, "Innocents of Paris," for Paramount, in which he plays a Parisian rag picker. This breaks the run of titled personages, generals, millionaires and the like, which he has been doing lately. The picture stars Maurice Chevalier with Richard Wallace, directing.

NEW SONG SCORES HIT FOR COMPOSERS

"Guns," a new song composed by Harry D. Kerr and Geoffrey O'Hara, is finding a prominent place on current programs. The song was given its first presentation at the Roxy Theater in New York in honor of Armistice Day and was extended a hearty ovation. It was presented with soloists, ninety male voices and the Roxy concert orchestra.

The song was an outstanding number on the program of Mr. John Charles Thomas, internationally known baritone, while Lawrence Tibbett, Thomas and Alexander Kisselburgh are now making it into recordings.

Mr. Kerr, who wrote the lyrics, will be remembered as the composer of "Neapolitan Nights," "In the Heart of the Hills," and many other popular numbers.

SEVEN MURDER SUSPECTS

Seven suspects contribute to the excitement and suspense of Paramount's first all-talking detective story picture, S. S. Van Dine's "The Canary Murder Case," offering William Powell in the role of the detective, Philo Vance, and Louise Brooks as the Canary.

THE MAY COMPANY
fashion co-ordinates

When first the "ensemble" note appeared on the fashion horizon, it was a didactic matter of a frock, a matching coat, matching accessories.

Today the "ensemble" is the all-important vogue. So important, indeed, that a new season finds the manufacturers of coats in conference with the manufacturers of frocks . . . combining their stylist-studied notes on color, fabric, design.

PRESENTED BY THE MAY COMPANY AS SMART SPRING "FASHION WITHOUT EXTRAVAGANCE"

Collecting an ensemble has become a fascinating game . . . and one that The May Company makes possible for every woman, no matter how large or small her budget. Ensembles are created as a whole . . . or madame chooses her own individual ensemble. A coat . . . two or three frocks selected by May Company stylists. A suit with blouses and sweaters permitting innumerable costume changes. Every woman can be well-dressed today . . . if she accepts the "ensemble" . . . and assembles it here.

A NEW STRAW—PARIS-MEME

One of the linen-weave genre, as soft and pliable as felt or silk. The model sketched, an original Mercedes, bound in beige taffeta, with two smart feather ornaments. ($47.50.) Replicas to order. Third Floor.

JEWELRY IN DESERT TANS

From the pale cream beige of a long strand of pearls (simulated) at $10.50 to the bright gold-color disks and topaz-colored triangles that fashion a new collar. ($13.50)—a Both so new. First Fl.

GLOVES & BAG CO-ORDINATE

Both the same lovely shade of mastique—the pouch bag of calf leather with clever, circular tab. ($13.50.) The gloves from France, traditionally smart pull-ons in soft suede. ($4.95.) First Fl.

NEW PUMPS OF REPP CLOTH

Completing the accessory ensemble! Beige repp cloth (finely ribbed with smooth lustre,) tongue pumps with gold kid piping. ($10.) Matched with Propper chiffon hose called "Bubbling Over." ($3.95.) First Floor.

NEW COURSE TO OPEN IN PHOTO PLAY

Lecturers Announced and Subjects Given for Class Saturday, February 6

Believing that the importance of the photoplay to the intellectual, social, moral and esthetic culture of the world warrants an active interest on the part of university leaders in the further development of the photodrama in art and social utility, President R. B. Von Kleinsmid of the University of Southern California announces that beginning with the spring semester opening February 6, a new course, "Photoplay Appreciation," will be offered in the college of liberal arts.

In general charge of Dean Karl T. Waugh and Prof. W. Ray MacDonald, the course, to be given on Wednesdays from 3 to 5 p.m., will consist of formal lectures delivered by qualified members of the Academy of Motion Pictures Arts and Sciences, of which Douglas Fairbanks is president and Milton Sills is chairman of the committee on college affairs, and S.C. faculty members.

Enrollment will be limited to between thirty-five and fifty representative students, and at the conclusion of the semester's work the syllabus will be revised as experiences and observations gleaned from the term's work dictate. It is anticipated that this course will be developed in such a way as to give students an accurate conception of the photoplay as an art form and as a social institution.

With subject matter prepared by bibliographical courses and from information gained through questionnaires and interviews with members of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences and university authorities, the course will cover evolution of the photoplay, a critical survey of modern photoplays, and the social significance of the screen story. Students will be required to do reference reading and observe and criticise current photoplays.

Permanent reproduction by Vitaphone and Movietone will make the selected lectures later available for all colleges, it is planned.

It is also hoped, following the innovation of the introductory course, to build up a literature of textbooks, critical works, analytical works, and reference articles dealing with the photoplay as an art form and as a social institution.

Lecturers and their subjects which appear in the schedule of the first month of the course are as follows:

February 6, opening date; photoplay appreciation: Douglas Fairbanks, academy president, President Von KleinSmid of the university, and Dean Waugh of the college of liberal arts.

February 13, scientific foundations, J. A. Ball, director, technical department, A. M P.P.

February 20, early history of the photoplay, Commodore J. Stuart Blackton.

February 27, growth and development of the photodrama, Frank Woods, secretary of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences.

The first half of the two-hour session will be consumed by the special lecture, with the latter hour taken up with discussions, explanations, etc., headed by Prof. Ray MacDonald of S. C.

Between March and May, inclusive, lectures will be given on Wednesday afternoons on the Trojan campus by Ernest Lubitsh, Benjamin Glazer, Irving Thalberg Clara Beranger, Milton Sills, Cedric Gibbons, William C. Menzies, M. C. Levee, Edwin Schallert, Dr. Karl T. Waugh, Dr. H. Wildon Carr, Dr. Emery S. Bogardus, and William C. DeMille.

DRAMATIC INSTINCT VARIES IN CHILDREN, M'WADE SAYS

The general impression about child players is that they act with such naturalness because they are just themselves. People praise them as being "cute" or "charming" and everyone thinks they appeal to an audience because they are allowed to do as they please.

No less an actor than Robert McWade asserts that this theory is all wrong. "There are just as bad actors among children as among adults," says the portrayer of James Crockett, the gruff and hot-tempered bachelor in the Henry Duffy Players' production of "Daddies" at the Hollywood Playhouse.

"Not every child is a born player. The dramatic instinct will be found in some children and not at all in others. In childhood there is a natural desire to imitate but this has nothing to do with acting. Yet all child players are given equal praise although some may show not the slightest real talent for the stage.

"For instance, little Anita Calfot, who plays my adopted child, Lorry, in 'Daddies' is a born actress. She does things instinctively, she reads her lines with a clarity and an intelligence that others might envy. She already has more of the technique of the stage at her finger tips than many players four times her age.

"I seldom have seen a child who showed such promise for future acting. She is like a veteran and if anything goes wrong on the stage she can keep things going as only actresses of experience ordinarily can do. If anyone misses a cue or 'drys up' in a line, Anita comes to his rescue. She is not just a talented child going on the stage repeating her memorised speeches in parrot fashion. She has absorbed a tremendous amount of stage methods and she responds to the tempo of a performance.

"She already knows much about the mechanism of the stage and she always is asking questions of the stage crew about this or that. She watches all the scenes in which she does not appear from the wings and I think she could go on and play anyone's role, my own included if necessary.

"Something approximating the art of the theater goes into Anita's performance which is a real characterization for, off the stage, she is just the opposite of the Lorry of the comedy."

Domestic Row Features Play at Playhouse

What amounts to a domestic tempest in a teapot is the hook on which Harold Chapin has hung much smart dialogue and screamingly funny, but frivolous situations, in "The New Morality," which is the current medium of the Pasadena Community Playhouse.

In the cast interpreting its gay humor are Gilmor Brown, director-general of the Playhouse, and Ralph Freud, as two sadly besieged husbands; Ralph Urmy, as a legal adviser, in a domestic turmoil created by two jealous wives; Marion Clayton as the aggressor in the battle between wives; Virginia Princehouse, as her closest friend and ally; J. P. Clewe and Dorothy See, as the respective servants drawn into the excitement, that very nearly leads to the courts, but is adjudicated in the realms of diplomacy.

The action transpires in a houseboat, affording attractive opportunities for bright settings of atmospheric type. The story is of sophisticate folk, with more leisure than restraint commonly felt by the average work-a-day American, but nonetheless interesting to encounter in their deadly moments, across the footlights.

CHARLES LANG CHOSEN

Charles Lang has been assigned as first cameraman on the all-talking picture, "Innocents of Paris," that Richard Wallace is directing at the Paramount studios, with Maurice Chevalier, the French music-hall star, in the stellar role.

NO THANKS FOR GOLF WIDOW JOB

Husbands Have Fun, Wives Just Wait, Finds Dorothy Blackburn

It's apparently a thankless job . . . . this golf widowing, and the statement comes from one who has acted in the capacity for more than a year, Dorothy Blackburn, leading lady in "The Nineteenth Hole," Frank Craven's comedy current at the Biltmore Theater.

There are, no doubt, any number of these unfortunate ladies who would be more than grateful for a little sympathy. It would mean at least company while friend husband cavorts along the greensward in pursuit of a hard rubber ball . . . . and the impossible . . . . and tells tales that rival the wildest myths around the Scotch bottle at that oasis of the golfer, the nineteenth hole.

Dorothy, however, would be particularly happy to be the recipient of the proverbial "few kind words," since paramount among the comments that have greeted her since the play opened in New York, has been: "Do you really enjoy playing such an unsympathetic role?"

The answer is "Yes" . . . . and furthermore the role is not unsympathetic. Dorothy calls upon any confirmed and initiated golf widow to back her up in this statement.

"It's simply the question of a third person in any family affair," she explained. "When a mother punishes a child in the presence of a guest, the child is always the one to receive the sympathy, no matter what he did to merit the punishment.

"In 'The Nineteenth Hole' the audience is the third person and responds according to form. An analysis of the character would bring to light the fact that in place of being hard and unsympathetic, she is really more tolerant than the average, more sentimental type."

Incidentally Miss Blackburn considers this character as one of the most difficult she has ever portrayed, in spite of the fact that during a stock engagement in Oakland she was cast in parts ranging from "The Patsy" to Sadie Thompson in "Rain."

"When one can dress a character, that character is established with the audience before a line is spoken. Creating a definite characterization in clothes that almost any type might wear is the real test," according to the actress.

Strange as it may seem, it was just a trace of remaining bitterness between the North and the South that was directly responsible for Dorothy's stage career.

Her mother was a southerner, her father a northerner . . . . but Dorothy was reared with all of the delicate manners of the old south. There was but one thing that disturbed her mother to the point of distraction . . . . and that was a rapidly increasing Yankee twang to the youngster's voice.

When every other remedy failed, Dorothy was sent to a school of voice culture, and it was this that first planted the desire for a stage career in her mind.

She made her debut in an important role with Frank Bacon in the New York production of "Lightnin'."

Lincoln Cast Will Present Dramatic Hit

The colored Lafayette Players' presentation of Jules Eckert Goodman's powerful drama, "The Man Who Came Back" which is holding the Lincoln Theater stage this week, is outstanding in more ways than one, for, not only has "The Man Who Came Back" never before been staged by colored actors, but it also has not been presented in Los Angeles in many years.

"The Man Who Came Back" has long been acknowledged as one of the greatest vehicles of the American stage. When Goodman wrote the play he incorporated all of the ingredients that go to make a dramatic production that is long remembered by theatergoers. The action of Goodman's play ranges from the drawing rooms of New York to the lowest opium den in China. It takes audiences "behind the scenes" along the water front of San Francisco in one act, and then jumps to China, and a little later to a Hawaiian plantation. To say that the production is lavish and elaborate, only half describes "The Man Who Came Back."

Edward Thompson has the title role, and the play is one that gives the actor his best characterization to date. The role of Marcella, the dance hall girl who is instrumental in bringing about Henry Potter's regeneration, is essayed by Evelyn Preer.

"MY MAN" OF EMOTIONAL TYPE FILM

Fannie Brice Alternates Comedy With Pathos in New Warner Talkie

Anyone who has ever heard Fannie Brice sing "My Man," the song from which her picture now at Warner Brothers' Theater was taken, will have some inkling of the emotional power of this really great actress. Few singers have ever been able to move an audience more intensely than she does with her rendition of this tragic song.

And yet—

Fannie Brice has always been known as a comedienne. Everything she did on the stage was expected to be funny, and audiences were ever ready to burst into laughter—to attribute a comedy "treatment" even where it did not belong. All the more reason, then, for characterizing "My Man" as a remarkable demonstration of her emotional depth. "My Man" followed a number of riotous comedy songs in her act, and yet the audience was sobered in a moment.

In the Warner Brothers' screen production, "My Man," in which Fannie makes her screen debut as a Vitaphone star, much of this dramatic intensity is introduced, and the song "My Man" occurs with great effect as a part of the story. But the picture is primarily a comedy, and includes many comedy songs sung as only the magnetic Miss Brice can sing them. In this production, as in few others, the "talking picture" makes possible the enjoyment of a wealth of entertainment that could not be transmitted by any other means.

"My Man" was directed by Archie Mayo, and the cast supporting Miss Brice includes Guinn Williams, Edna Murphy, Andres De Segurola, Richard Tucker, Billy Seay, Ann Brody, Arthur Hoyt and Clarissa Selwynne.

RITZ HAS COMEDY

Karl Dane and George K. Arthur in their latest laughfest "Brotherly Love," is the current attraction at the Ritz Theater. Monday, "The Awakening," starring Vilma Banky, opens a three-day engagement. "The Awakening" is the tensely emotional story of a girl who decided that love was the only thing that mattered—and who dared scorn and ridicule to carry out her beliefs. Miss Banky is said to have one of her finest roles in the new picture.

Famous Trio Reunited for Egyptian Opus

The star, the author and the director who were responsible for the success of "It" were brought together by Paramount once more for the making of "Three Week-Ends," feature screen fare now at Grauman's Egyptian Theater.

Clara Bow is the star, Elinor Glyn the author, and Clarence Badger is the director. "It" was the first picture on which they collaborated, and it was directly responsible for the tremendous popularity of the star. Subsequently, they also worked together on "Three Weeks," which was likewise a popular success throughout the country.

In "Three Week-Ends," Miss Bow is supported by a cast which includes Neil Hamilton, Harrison Ford, Lucille Powers and others.

On the stage at the Egyptian, Frank Jenks, master of ceremonies, is seen with the "Personality Band" in another presentation. A Metro-Movietone comedy, Chic Sale in "The Star Witness," and a Fox Movietone news reel complete the bill.

Horton Farce to Close at End of Week

Next Saturday night will see the final performance of "Her Cardboard Lover," the hilarious love farce starring Edward Everett Horton at the Vine Street Theater. Although one of the most successful plays ever produced at the popular Vine street house, it must make way for Ferenc Molnar's comedy, "The Swan," which opens the 20th inst.

However, the beautiful sets, furniture and clothing used in "Her Cardboard Lover" will not pass into oblivion as O. D. Woodward, a well-known producer, was so impressed with the entire play and its effects that he purchased the rights, as well as the sets, furniture and clothing from Horton, to send to San Francisco where he will stage the show. Everything will be exactly as it was here except for the cast.

With the closing of "Her Cardboard Lover," beautiful Florence Eldridge, Horton's leading lady in his last three productions, announces her retirement from the stage. Thus it is that this is the last week for playgoers to see one of the most talented stage stars to appear in this city recently.

Although now entering its eighth and final week, "Her Cardboard Lover" has constantly been the incentive for large crowds at the Vine Street.

"Adoration" on at Westlake

"Adoration" starring Billie Dove, opens at the Westlake Theater today, under the theater's newly adopted policy "Adoration" will remain for a one-day showing only, in keeping with the Westlake's new arrangement, whereby a special show will be presented on Sunday, with added features. In the past, the Westlake programs have changed on Tuesday, after the Sunday showings.

Dave Good and his band will entertain at all shows on Sunday, as in the past. "Adoration" is featured by a excellent cast in addition to Miss Dove; including Antonio Moreno, who plays the leading male role. A synchronized print of "Air Circus" has been secured by the Westlake, and will be screened for three days starting Monday.

CHORUS GIRL TO BE TRIED SECOND TIME

"Mary Dugan" Returns to Mason Tomorrow Night After Road Tour

The well-known legal maxim that a person cannot be tried twice for the same charge will remove a jury in Los Angeles tomorrow night, for that occasion at the Mason Theater the beautiful lost spring Mary Dugan will again go on trial for the murder of her rich husband. The same novel and interesting atmosphere, which permits the spectators to view the inner workings of a court, will be in evidence.

After a lot of maneuvering Manager Val Kennedy finally succeeded in securing a return engagement of this highly sensational murder play, "The Trial of Mary Dugan." On its earlier engagement at the Mason, eight weeks were found to be entirely too few to satisfy all of the playgoers who wanted to see it. As the result its final eight weeks witnessed absolute capacity houses.

It will come here directly from a return engagement in San Francisco, where it is reported to have been registering an even greater success at the Columbia Theater than upon its first visit.

Several old-time Los Angeles favorites will be found in the cast including Charlotte Walker, who is now the beautiful widow, a regular feast for the eyes; Fernan Saunders, the District Attorney, a merciless relentless State's prosecutor; Florence Mason, the Mary Dugan, with just the right amount of youth and sophistication for her difficult role and Allen Connor, her loyal but impetuous brother, who wins a brilliant battle of wits in the courtroom fight for his sister's life.

Matinees will be given Wednesday and Saturday.

OUTCAST AT MANCHESTER

Corinne Griffith's starring picture "Outcast," is the current offering at the Manchester Theater. There is also a Fanchon and Marco stage show with Sol Lowe as master of ceremonies. Monday, "The Awakening," Vilma Banky's new starring picture, opens a three-day engagement. The tempestuous love story will be followed on Thursday by "Brotherly Love," co-starring Karl Dane and George K. Arthur.

B'NAI B'RITH

Santa Monica Lodge of the B'nai B'rith celebrated last Tuesday under the guidance of Lester Roth, past president of Los Angeles lodge, when the newly elected officers of the men's lodge and the ladies' auxiliary were installed. Mrs. N. A. Bertram, retiring president of the ladies' lodge, also installed officers of the girls' auxiliary.

The list of elected officers of the three lodges follows: Men's lodge: President, H. B. Press; vice-president, Leo Stein; Monitor, Al Blumberg; Assistant Monitor, Emil Zilz; Treasurer, N. Feitlebaum; Warden, Charles Gottlieb; Guardian, Julius Hoffman; Financial and Corresponding Secretary, H. S. Cohn; Trustees, S. Block, M. Shere, A. J. Bertram.

Women's lodge: President, Mrs. Ann Rose; Vice-President, Mrs. Jennie Press; Conductress, Mrs. Tillie Kallman; treasurer, Mrs. Ann Goldring; Recording Secretary, Mrs. Sarah Amels; Financial Secretary, Mrs. Clara Thomas; Corresponding Secretary, Mrs. Elsie Goldberg; Auditor, Mrs. Frances Fox; Sentinel, Mrs. Clara Spitzer; Counsellor, Mrs. Rose Bertram; Trustees, Mrs. Leah Silver, Mrs. Irene Cone and Mrs. Rae Lewokowita.

Girls' lodge: President, Estelle Dale; Vice-President, Enid Bertram; Treasurer, Cathleen Spitzer; Secretary, Libby Steingardt; Conductress, Oraney Goldman; Sergeant-at-arms, Naomi Goldstine.

President Press announced that on Tuesday evening, the 15th inst., there will be a short business session from 7:45 to 8:30 p.m., following which the doors will be thrown open to the members of all the lodges and their immediate friends to hear an address by Hugh Matier.

Announcement was also made that on the 22nd inst. Roy Randolph will present a forty-five-minute show of his high-class talent. Another affair scheduled by the lodge is a masquerade dance and card party to be staged on Tuesday evening, the 29th inst.

INDEPENDENT ORDER OF FORESTERS

Joint installation of officers of Courts E. G. No. 33, E. S. No. 34, Emily No. 66 and Morris Vingard No. 152 at the new Forester Building at 1339 South Hope street last Tuesday evening was a brilliant affair. The high standing committee of the high court of Southern California officiated under the direction of High Chief Ranger Dr. C. B. Dickson. The floor work was under the direction of Companion Cora Nale and her uniformed guards of Companion Court E.S., the guards later entertaining with a drill. Vice-Chief Ranger Frank E. Hand was the principal speaker.

Court Wilmar installed officers at the Wilmar Women's clubhouse last Monday evening, the installation being done by the high standing committee of Southern California and the drill staff of Companion Court E. S. No. 34 of Los Angeles.

Frank E. Hand and Mrs. Hand, who have spent the last month with their son, Frank E. Hand, Jr., and family, left for San Francisco on Wednesday to attend the high court meeting of the high court of Northern California. From there they will go to Seattle, Vancouver and then to points east as far as Buffalo, N. Y., before returning to headquarters at Toronto.

TO INSTALL OFFICERS

A public installation of new officers of Parlor No. 45, Native Sons of the Golden West, will be conducted on the evening of the 24th inst. at the Los Angeles Parlor Hall, 134 West Seventeenth street. The ceremony will be followed by dancing. The public is invited.

Denny Views Shake-ups as Talkie Plot

Someone with a flair for dramatizing what is going on in Hollywood motion-picture studios right now, could create a most diverting talk-film, in the opinion of Reginald Denny, Universal comedy star. "Truly tremendous — herculean, in fact—are the readjustments of huge organizations to the new form of entertainment known as talking pictures and millions upon millions of dollars are involved in the project inspired by progress," says Denny.

"To me the whole thing is very dramatic and I can sense a big story in it all," he declares. "If I was a writer I think I'd get busy and try to transplant what I see into drama fitting audible film production.

"Some of the phases of the new situation are tragic. There is a passing of the old order and this always entails a certain amount of regrets. Some of the screen favorites of yesterday will not be favorites tomorrow. The talkie will make the difference and there is heavy drama in this, too.

"I daresay a picture based on a story of this type would find a more avid manifestation of interest on the part of the public than many of these so-called 'epics.' The reason, therefore, to my mind, would be because it would be true to life," concludes Denny, who is now making the talking versions of his three latest pictures for Universal. Eddie Cline, comedy director, is guiding Denny in these productions.

ANN BRODY CAST

Ann Brody was added yesterday to the cast of Emil Jannings's new Paramount starring film, tentatively called "A Tale of the Alps," which is now being made under the direction of Lewis Milestone. She is a veteran character actress who has played recently in two other Paramount films, "The Case of Lena Smith" and "Wolf Song." Esther Ralston and Gary Cooper head the German star's supporting cast.

Vilma Banky Using English Minus Accent

"Three years ago, Vilma Banky came to America, unable to speak one word of English. Today she is talking in a sound picture as clearly as an American-born girl could do," says Alfred Santell, director of the Samuel Goldwyn production, starring the first foreign star in a sound film.

Santell makes this assertion to put at rest the question of the foreigner in talking pictures.

"If the same amount of intelligence, ambition and perseverance belong to others, they may accomplish what Miss Banky has," Santell says. "A talking test was made of her weeks before the work on the present picture started. Naturally, she was nervous and did not remember all her rules of pronunciation which she has practiced faithfully since coming to America. 'You can learn to talk into a microphone if you wish,' I told her, and she went to work.

"My own name is an example of what Miss Banky had to overcome. She called me 'Mr. Santel,' with the accent on the 'San.' I told her to say it correctly, and she immediately pronounced it 'Santell' with the last syllable stressed properly. This demonstrates how she has learned each word she is using in the talking sequences of her picture.

"Miss Nancy O'Neil trained Miss Banky for weeks on pronunciation. First, she gave the film star words to repeat. Then they took sentences, and finally, Miss Banky was speaking short playlets, as taught by Miss O'Neil. There was no question of her speaking properly—she showed that she could learn to pronounce exactly as she was told to do. The talking test made nine weeks later was a revelation of what this stranger in our land has done."

Writers Flock from East as Talkies Grow

That the field opened up by talking pictures has attracted prominent song writers, Broadway playwrights and vaudeville patter experts in such large numbers as to give Hollywood the palm as the nation's foremost mecca for writers of anything from master drama to conundrums, is the assertion made by Roy Del Ruth, Warner Brothers director.

"Creative ability the world over immediately recognized the new avenues of expression opened up in the world of art by the Vitaphone reproduction process, with the result that genius representation is here in abundance.

"Their presence here will be of mutual advantage, since it will no longer be necessary to negotiate for the services of any individual expert in these lines over a distance of thousands of miles. This was aptly proven during the making of 'The Desert Song,' which I just finished directing as a 100 per cent Vitaphone talking picture. The need for several new and catchy songs to augment the already numerous and catchy ones which made this play on the stage one of the outstanding hits of the past few years, was immediately answered by the country's best song writers now here."

POMEROY VETERAN

Roy J. Pomeroy, director of sound at the Lasky studio, spent more than six years as executive head of the technical department waiting for his opportunity to direct a motion picture. Four years ago Pomeroy conceived the ethereal effects for "Peter Pan" and was assigned the direction of the Barrie story, but studio changes postponed his opportunity until recently, when Pomeroy directed "Interference," Paramount's first all-talking picture.

WAR ORPHAN FROM FRANCE HAS INTERESTING CAREER

One of Hollywood's most interesting stories of the day is that of Philippe De Lacy, 11-year-old ranking juvenile actor who is playing his tenth important screen role of the year as Richard Arlen—as a boy—in Paramount's adventure story spectacle, "The Four Feathers."

Philippe receives 5000 letters a month from motion-picture fans throughout the world—more than drops into the mail boxes of many famous stars.

Philippe is not his real name and neither is De Lacy.

He has no mother or father or any near relatives.

The French village in which he was born no longer exists. German artillery wiped it from the face of the earth.

Philippe was found in the ruined cellar of a now-forgotten village near Nancy in January, 1919, by Miss Edyth De Lacy, an Englishwoman who had become a trained nurse in New York and who had gone to France early in 1917 with the women's overseas hospitals. Before the war she had conducted a hospital for children at Sharon, Ct.

Philippe's father had been killed at Verdun and his mother in the tragedy which destroyed their home. His grandmother had been hurt in the same air raid but had managed to keep the baby alive during the following months. When Miss De Lacy found him, Philippe, 18 months old, weighed ten pounds.

In September, 1919, she brought the baby to the United States. The following year a Frenchwoman, a mutual friend of Miss De Lacy and Geraldine Farrar, took the youngster with her one day while calling on the grand-opera star.

Miss Farrar decided that Philippe would suit a juvenile role in "The Riddle Woman," in which Miss Farrar was about to star in motion pictures.

He appeared with Alla Nazimova in "A Doll's House;" his performance in "Without Benefit of Clery" brought him an autographed copy of "Life's Handicap," from Rudyard Kipling. He appeared as Mary Pickford's brother in "Rosita."

One of the outstanding opportunities of Philippe's youthful career was the role of Michael in J. M. Barrie's "Peter Pan." He was eminently successful in this picture.

Then came "Beau Geste," in which he appeared as Neil Hamilton, as a boy, "Don Juan," "The Eleg," "The Blue Boy," "Mother Machree," "The Magic Garden," "The Way of All Flesh," "Is Zat So?" "Love," "The Four Devils," "Napoleon's Barber," and now, "The Four Feathers."

Food by Ton Eaten During Childs' Film

The greatest food consumption ever recorded in a motion picture, is the record claimed by Director Al Santell for Vilma Banky's new starring picture, "Childs, Fifth Avenue."

As a great part of the story takes place in and around a restaurant in New York City where Miss Banky is a flapjack flipper, naturally there is eating going on in a great share of the picture.

The consumption to date includes 22,142 cups of "Java," 41,750 pancakes (including casualties which fell on the floor) and the sausages eaten, if laid end to end, would more than reach around the city pound.

Also incidentally the property men and electricians have gained on an average nine pounds apiece through eating up all the surplus food and no canine around the studio can look a pancake in the face.

MILLER TO GO TO SCHOOL

Winston Miller, brother of Patsy Ruth, is playing the Query in "Ask Dad, He Knows," the educational talkie in which Edward Everett Horton has the father role and Ruth Rennick the feminine lead. Upon its completion Winston will immediately return to Princeton Preparatory School, which he entered the past semester.

Girl Director Holding Daily Cast Parleys

"Table rehearsals" resembling nothing so much as a meeting of the board of directors of a large corporation have been inaugurated by Dorothy Arzner, Paramount's "girl" director, preparatory to starting work on Clara Bow's first all-talking picture "The Wild Party."

The entire cast of the picture, with Miss Bow at the head of the board, Miss Arzner on her right and Robert Milton, New York stage director on her left, is assembled about a big table each morning at 9 o'clock and the dialogue for the picture is read by each character in turn. Miss Arzner states that she will make no attempt to rehearse action until the cameras are lined up for the scene for she believes that such rehearsals rob the trained film players of spontaneity of action.

"The Wild Party" was written by Warner Fabian, author of "Flaming Youth." E. Lloyd Sheldon wrote the adaptation for the screen and Sheldon and John V. A. Weaver wrote the dialogue. Fredric Marsh has the lead opposite Miss Bow.

Copper production in Chile for 1928 is reported to have exceeded that of the previous year by 30 per cent.

Blystone in Court to Get Trial Details

John Blystone has been passing the last several days in the courtroom.

Blystone was not being sued nor was he bringing suit. He was merely imbibing atmosphere and the details of a jury trial. For this well-known director commenced last week on a picture, the entire story of which takes place in a courtroom. "Through Different Eyes" is the story of a murder, as told by the prosecuting and defending attorneys, the accused and the witnesses. It will have dialogue throughout. It will not, however, pattern after the stage play of "The Trial of Mary Dugan," as it will have flash-backs, fade-outs and other photographic tricks, which will allow fast action and more suspense.

Although this is the second Movietone production he has made for Fox, Blystone is essentially a motion picture director. He firmly believes that cinema audiences are not ready to sit down to a slow moving picture just because of the introduction of dialogue into it. He contends that, since the metamorphosis of the silent drama into a talking one, the story, the tempo and the acting of the players is of more importance than ever. Especially so, the tempo.

An English college is to be established on the Isle of Malta.

Jefferson to Do Role for Talkie Film

With a heritage of 213 years of stage experience behind him, Thomas Jefferson, veteran actor, has been cast in his first talking motion-picture role. He is to play a supporting part in "Close Harmony," a Paramount all-dialogue production, in which Charles (Buddy) Rogers and Nancy Carroll have the leads.

The acting tradition has come to Jefferson through four generations. Thomas Jefferson started it in 1717 when he appeared with David Garrick in London. Since that time all male members of the family have followed in his footsteps.

For eight-seven years the part of Rip Van Winkle was played by members of this theatrical family. The present Thomas Jefferson's grandfather was the original Rip. He played the part for seventeen years. Then Jefferson's father, the late Joseph Jefferson, played the role forty-five years. Jefferson played it for twenty-five years.

Jefferson has varied his experience as a stage actor with appearances in motion pictures. His first screen roles were with the old Biograph company under the direction of D. W. Griffith.

Until he was cast in "Close Harmony," the films had not seen this veteran for some time, however, as upon the death of Frank Bacon he was chosen to play the role of Lightnin' Bill Jones in the stage play, "Lightnin'." He played that role continuously for seven years and made his last appearance in it only recently before coming to Hollywood.

In "Close Harmony," Jefferson will be in familiar atmosphere, as it is a production of stage life based on a story by Elsie Janis and Gene Markey. John Cromwell, trained on the stage, is the director, and the cast includes such former footlights favorites as Miss Carroll, Harry Green, Jack Oakie and Richard (Skeets) Gallagher.

Historic Ghost Town of Gold Days Pictured

Audiences who see "Queen of the North Woods," a forthcoming Pathe serial, will have an opportunity of becoming acquainted with one of the most famous "ghost cities" in the Southwest.

A number of exteriors for this chapter drama were filmed amid the ruins of Havilah, which was a thriving city of between 3000 and 4000 during the gold-rush days in California. Now the population of Havilah numbers exactly six. There is a postmistress and a storekeeper, who serve the ranchers in a nearby territory, and their respective families. On the outskirts of the town there is also a forest ranger station.

Most of the homes of Havilah are still filled with the ornate and pretentious furniture which was brought from the East to satisfy the lavish tastes of the gold miners during the boom days. When the gold rush ended, the majority of people simply walked out of their homes, leaving them just as they were. Many had made fortunes and were leaving to spend them elsewhere. Others had squandered the metal they plucked from a generous earth, and could not afford to take any personal belongings with them, other than what they could carry.

Spencer Bennett and Tom Storey who are co-directing "Queen of the North Woods," spent several interesting days in this historic town with Ethlyne Clair, Walter Miller and other members of the cast of the picture.

GEN. BOOTH AND MARGOT

Gen. William Booth prayed as naturally as a child appealing to its father, says Evangeline Booth in the Saturday Evening Post. He was not self-conscious when he prayed. He never mumbled as so many do, but spoke out bravely whatever was in his heart.

King Edward once boasted that he would rather have Gen. Booth pray for him than any minister in his kingdom. It was his sincerity that conquered.

One time when the general was going down to Bristol a very charming lady stepped into the compartment. Her name was Margot Tennant, and this was at a time when social gossip was linking the name of that vivid personage with rival gentlemen named Balfour and Asquith.

The moment she saw the general she smiled and entered into conversation with him, and he, quick as a flash, said: "God bless you, Margot. May you make a wise choice."

She was full of questions. How did we reach the people who had never had contact with the churches? How great was the need of such an organization? As the general unfolded his story tears began to course down her cheeks.

The young society woman had to change trains at Swindon and arose to arrange her luggage. The general, rising also, placed his hand on her arm and gently said: "Before you go can we not have a little prayer?"

The two then knelt in the railway compartment and prayed. As they got to their feet and Margot prepared to leave she suddenly exclaimed:

LOW COST OF GAS

According to the United States Department of Labor, household consumers of manufactured gas are buying it at prices appreciably nearer the pre-war level than the general cost of living.

The report is based on a survey of gas prices in all principal American cities. It was found that while in 1927 gas sold at an average rate of 28 per cent more than in 1913, the cost of living had advanced 72 per cent over the former level.

The modern trend, which is toward employing gas more than ever before in the home, for cooking, heating, refrigerating and in other ways, has created a large demand that is being met at a remarkably low price.—[Prescott (Ariz.) Courier.

FILMING STARTS SOON

Actual camera work on "Dynamite," Cecil B. De Mille's first production for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, will start about the first of February. It will be preceded by three weeks of rehearsal, for "Dynamite" is to be De Mille's first all-dialogue picture. The four principal parts are to be taken by Charles Bickford, Kay Johnson, Carol Lombard and Conrad Nagel.

NEW BUILDINGS PLANNED HERE

Garage Announced for Olive Street

Ornate Two-Story Unit on Wilshire Boulevard

Nationally Known Concerns Coming to City

BY JAMES W. ELLIOTT

Announcement of a skyscraper [illegible] on the east side of [illegible] street between Sixth and [illegible] streets, and of a new [illegible] on Wilshire Boulevard [illegible] Hampshire which will [illegible] two national manufacturers was released to The Times exclusively yesterday.

The [illegible] garage building [illegible] 50-foot frontage on Olive by [illegible] to an alley will be constructed immediately by the Merchants Parking Building Corporation, according to Jake Schlank, president. Other officials of the company are Rose Klein, president, and Leo Shapiro, secretary-treasurer.

RENAISSANCE STYLE

Of steel and concrete, the building will be of pure Renaissance architecture with front facing of [illegible] stone inlaid with [illegible] designs of the same [illegible]. The main floor will be occupied by stores, the mezzanine by [illegible] offices of the corporation [illegible] storage. The basement, sub-basement and third to [illegible] floors, inclusive, will be entirely [illegible] garage. Ninth to thirteenth [illegible] will be used for offices. Express [illegible] will be installed for [illegible] with automobile elevators [illegible] ramps available for moving cars from one floor to [illegible]. An elaborate lounge and [illegible] will be provided for [illegible].

Immediate construction of a [illegible] building, specially designed to house and display the [illegible] exhibits of two [illegible] known manufacturers, was announced yesterday by the architect for the corner of Wilshire Boulevard and New [illegible] street, by George R. [illegible], vice-president of W. [illegible] Allsworth & Co. The [illegible] concerns involved are the Chesterfield Furniture Company of Long Island City, N. Y., and the Standard Sanitary Manufacturing Company of Pittsburgh, one of the largest manufacturers of fine [illegible] fixtures in the world.

The building features prominent [illegible] windows and will have a [illegible] of 165 feet on Wilshire [illegible] and 125 feet on New [illegible] street. It is expected [illegible] will be ready for occupancy April 1.

BLOCK PART LEASED

Approximately 64 per cent of the [illegible] in this building has been [illegible] all parties in the property [illegible] and lease negotiations [illegible] represented by Harry G. [illegible] of W. I. Hollingsworth & Co. [illegible] is the fourth property developed on Wilshire Boulevard by [illegible] firm.

A large space in this building [illegible] be occupied by the Chesterfield Company for showroom purposes. The premises will include a ground [illegible] with mezzanine and [illegible], 100 feet wide on Wilshire Boulevard by 125 feet deep; [illegible] the entire second floor, 150 feet [illegible] 50 feet, making a total area of [illegible] 20,000 square feet. [illegible] will be displayed an extensive [illegible] complete exhibit of exclusive [illegible] in America's most beautiful [illegible] and artistic furniture.

SPECIALTIES FOR DISPLAY

In addition to fine living-room, [illegible] and dining-room suites, [illegible] and occasional pieces, there will [illegible]

WORK PROGRESSING

PORTERVILLE, Jan. 13. (Exclusive)—Work is progressing rapidly on the Montgomery Ward & Co. building on Main street. According to Frank Sheldon, local contractor, the building will be ready for occupancy about February 16.

TO SELL HOSPITAL

REDLANDS, Jan. 12. (Exclusive) The City Hospital, built twenty-five years ago at a cost of $35,000, and owned by a group of physicians and surgeons of Redlands, will be sold or leased when the new City Hospital opens in February.

FACT AND COMMENT

IF THEY were surprised and chagrined, the architects who gathered in the thirty-fourth annual banquet of the Southern California chapter of American Institute of Architects did not show it when their national secretary uttered a few uncomplimentary remarks about Southern California architecture in general.

Requested to say a few words regarding his impression of architecture here, Frank Baldwin, secretary of the American Institute, said briefly that Los Angeles was the offthrow of every country in the world in architectural ideas, that inasmuch as the city is young and has grown fast there may be "some hope" for the condition. With the exception of a few newer communities, which he could not name, Mr. Baldwin said in a general way that there is no beauty in the great variation in styles here.

That's a technician's view of Southern California architecture. Perhaps conformity, uniformity and complete harmony is the chief word in his business bible. But for the average citizen who likes diversion, and who comes here and spends his good money for putting his own ideas into architecture, there is no more delightful place in the world. There is architecture to suit everybody, but not enough of one kind to offend anybody. There are homes here to equal the best in architecture for any price in the Middle West or East; people of Spain come here

URGE ZONING CORRECTION BY CIVIC GROUPS HERE

Destruction of Home Rights Laid to Promiscuous Placing of High Apartment Structures

(Convinced by authoritative charts and figures that Los Angeles by her rapid progress has developed undesirable zoning conditions, the Realty Board, Chamber of Commerce, City Planning Commission, Regional Planning Commission and other such bodies are devoting much time to means of correcting the evil. This is the second of a number of articles in which The Times will cite the true conditions of zoning in Los Angeles city and county as seen by the various organizations mentioned above. Zoning conditions which constantly grew worse and threatened real estate values is a problem solved only in recent months by Chicago.)

Los Angeles, the city of homes, will, if the efforts of speculators in Los Angeles real property are not definitely curbed by zoning regulations or in some other way, soon become a city wherein there will be no property in which the integrity of a hame may be maintained.

The sane purchaser of real property who buys a lot with the idea of developing that property for the use for which the property is zoned or set aside is a constructive and valuable investor; but the speculative type of buyer who purchases land only for the purpose of holding it until somebody comes along and pays him more money than he paid for the land has a questionable value as a community builder. This speculative type of purchaser often becomes a definite menace to the upbuilding of the community when he comes into a district zoned for a restrictive use, buys a vacant lot in that district and then proceeds by every way possible to change the zone or deed restrictions in that particular district in order that he may erect in the small-residence district an apartment or a business block, thinking that by so doing he will increase the value of his particular lot. Should he increase the value of his particular lot it will be at the expense of every home owner in the district.

SURVEY CONDUCTED

During the last few weeks considerable work has been done checking the zone condition of Los Angeles city and the uses to which property in the various zones within the city are being put, and it is amazing to realize the extent to which the speculator above referred to has decreased or injured home

Increased interest in residential properties, particularly in the western areas of the city, with a sharp increase in number of transfers for such properties, was the outstanding feature of the weekly survey of activity prepared by the Standard Mortgage Company, based on filings as published in the Los Angeles Daily Recorder.

With the single exception of the West Los Angeles district, all of the purely residential areas of the city last week showed marked increases in volume of transfers, while the industrial sections and the semiresidential sections were comparatively inactive.

SAN FERNANDO SECOND

For the first time in many weeks the San Fernando Valley jumped into second place in volume of transfers, this area having a total of 206 deeds filed, a gain of eighty over the week ending January 4. The southwest section continued to hold first place in total number of transfers, but showed a loss of twenty-seven from the previous week. In the Wilshire district, which ranked third, there were 190 deeds filed, a gain of twenty-nine over the previous week, and Hollywood, which was fourth, had 133 deeds, an increase of fifty-two.

The West Washington and Elysian Park districts showed gains of twenty-nine and twenty-six deeds, respectively; there was an increase of twenty-three in the Highland Park section, and a gain of seventeen in the Eagle Rock district. In the West Los Angeles area there were forty-nine transfers, a drop of four. This area is normally one of the most active in the city and the drop of the past week may be attributed to the proposal for the erection of a cement plant in the district immediately adjacent to Beverly Boulevard.

Financing operations also showed greater activity during the week, thirteen of the fifteen districts having substantial gains over the week ending the 4th inst. These gains were more than sufficient to offset a loss of more than $1,600,000 in the central business district.

HOLLYWOOD FIGURES

The Hollywood district, frequently the leader in financing operations, dropped to second place during the last week. The Wilshire district topped the list with mortgages and trust deeds to the value of $1,526,301, an increase of better than $673,000 over the week preceding. In the Hollywood district there were mortgages and trust deeds to the value of $1,148,044, giving this area a gain of $355,797.

The combined total of deeds filed in the fifteen districts for the week was 1237, as compared with 1052 during the week preceding, a gain for the last week of 205. Mortgages and trust deeds numbered 1236, with a valuation of $6,231,243, a lead over the week previous of $244,586. Releases of mortgages numbered 445, an increase of 142; and there were 604 reconveyances of trust deeds, a gain of 227.

Dividend Will be Distributed by Corporation

National Thrift Corporation of America at a recent meeting of its board of directors declared its twelfth consecutive dividend on capital stock, according to L. T. Porter, secretary of the company Porter declared this dividend would aggregate more than $40,000, and would be distributed shortly.

National Thrift Corporation of America, though but six years old, enjoys the distinction of never having failed in a single dividend requirement. Offices for the sale of securities have been opened from time to time until now the company is operating in four western States. New offices were recently acquired when the company leased the entire ninth floor of the Bank of Commerce Building.

SEWER SYSTEM STARTED

HUNTINGTON PARK, Jan. 12. (Exclusive)—The sewer system for the West Maywood tract has been started by the contractors, Simonovich and Prilich. The cost of the project will be around $60,000. This system will drain into the Atlantic trunk line of the County Sanitation District No. 1.

LIEN DEBTORS PAY PROMPTLY

Three-quarters of Mortgages Due in January Met

Foreclosure Total Amounts to Minimum Percentage

Unexpected Funds Available for Investments

BY A. C. ROWSEY

All but $3,765,000 of the entire mortgage and trust deed indebtedness of the city and county property owners for the month was wiped out by the 10th inst. This is the deduction from the totals of the records of the first eight business days of the new year, supplied by the Mortgage Maturity Company exclusively to The Times.

The record indicates a condition which is as alarming to the lending market of the city and county, as the continuous bull stock market has been to other financial activities.

It presents the recordations of new liens, which are vastly in excess of those of last year and the year before, as the movement of money coming in on liens paid in advance, seeking cover in new paper.

The total amount due in January on liens over $1000, according to the records compiled by the Mortgage Maturity Company, exclusively for the Los Angeles Times, was $11,435,000.

The total released and reconveyed, according to the records of the company, was $7,669,000.

There remains but $3,765,000 to be paid to discharge all liens due for the entire month.

That a large proportion of these payments were upon liens not yet due is indicated by the Mortgage Maturity, which show that there were due in liens over $1000 each, a total of 2310 instruments. Yet, the actual number of instruments paid off or accounted for of the total due, was only 793, leaving a balance of 1517 instruments for over $1000, normally due in January to be paid off during the remainder of the month. Of the 793 instruments, twenty-six were theoretically accounted for by notices of foreclosure. Theoretically accounted for, because notices of foreclosure are not filed until at least thirty days after due dates, and seldom for sixty days. The amount involved was only $114,846. This leaves a total of 767 instruments which released within $3,765,000 of the total amount of the indebtedness for the month due on a total of 2310 instruments. It warrants the prediction that the total discharge of indebtedness on liens in excess of $1000 will approximate the total paid off in December of $25,000,000.

Further confirmation of the advance payment of liens was visible at the offices of the building and loan companies of both the city and county, where record crowds of mortgage and trust-deed lien investors stood in line to place unexpected funds on certificates before January 10 in order to get the January interest. There were few 7 per cent certificates to be had. The best rate generally available was 6 per cent.

Of the amount due this month, in mortgages, 966 in excess of $1000 each are on Los Angeles city property, for $5,914,000. On county property, including all cities and towns outside of Los Angeles city, 686 mortgages are due for only $2,855,000. In addition there is due on Los Angeles city property, 280 trust deeds, each for more than $1000, totaling $1,224,000. On property outside the city, 378 trust deeds will fall due in sums in excess of $1000, giving a total of $1,442,000 for the county.

CORNER LOT ON BEVERLY PURCHASED

Intersection at Fairfax Bought for $120,000 as Site for Store

The Charles G. Andrews Company announced yesterday the sale of the southwest corner of Beverly Boulevard and Fairfax avenue, a plot 123 feet to alley on Beverly Boulevard by 180 feet in depth on Fairfax, for W. H. Fortine to a local capitalist for $120,000.

The purchaser, it was learned, plans the erection of a store on the site in the near future.

Prize-Winning Sketches to be Exhibited Here

Prize winning and honorable mention sketches in the national architectural contest, recently held by the House Beautiful Magazine, will be on exhibition at the exhibit rooms of the Architects' Building from the 15th inst. to February 1.

The sketches, all by California architects, are by H. Roy Kelley, Gordon Kauffman, A. C. Zimmerman, David J. Witmer, Loyal F Watson, Albert J. Schroeder, Donald D. MacMurray.

Additional latest work by the architects honored will also be shown.

Corner Sale Brings Lease for Ten Years

Burton & Co., real estate brokers, have announced the sale of the southeast corner of Whittier Boulevard and Ferris avenue for $55,000.

Monroe L. Moss was the owner, the property, 80 by 150 feet having been acquired by I. Pillsner. The building on the site will be immediately remodeled for a high class market and has been leased for ten years at a rental of $80,000

DIRECTOR OF STATE ASSOCIATION RESIGNS

Robert A. Swink, Pasadena broker, for many years a State director of the California Real Estate Association, has resigned from that office.

Mr. Swink served two terms as State vice-president, and was president of the Pasadena Realty Board in 1924, when the association convention was held in that city.

H. L. Gianetti, active in local and State work, has been elected to fill the vacancy.

POINTS AND POINTERS

WILSHIRE BLVD. EXCHANGE

If you wish to acquire a WILSHIRE BOULEVARD TRAFFIC INTERSECTION CORNER between La Brea and Hancock Park, we have the only one. When one of the large contemplated improvements in this district becomes a reality, this corner should double in value almost immediately.

This particular section called the "Miracle Mile" is the "White Spot" for investment and speculation. Prices are not high today in this district, considering the property improved will pay 6% net on finished and building and depreciate building and in ten years.

We want to sell this corner to a substantial investor who will improve it now and will consider $75,000 in exchange for close property of [illegible]

CIVIC ZONING CHANGE ASKED

values within the city. He has done the detrimental work by the erection of nonconforming structures in a restricted zone, which erection was permitted as a result of some special or spot zoning, regulation of the City Planning Commission or the City Council, or due to the fact that while very large areas in the city are used largely for single-family residences, business areas have been zoned for flat or apartment-house use.

Says W. L. Pollard, chairman of the city-planning committee of the Los Angeles Realty Board and of a similar committee of the California Real Estate Association:

"Los Angeles city boasts that within its boundaries are located some of the finest homes in the world, some of the finest duplexes and four-family flats, structures that have been built under the finest of architectural supervision and which, to all appearances, are first-class single-family residences. Yet there is hardly a district in Los Angeles city, except in the mountains back of Hollywood and in a few isolated and scattered areas in other portions of the city, where a man may build a single-family residence and feel certain that his high-class residence will not be spoiled or destroyed by the erection of apartment-houses or other structures of an objectionable nature immediately adjacent to his property.

"Of the total occupied property of Los Angeles city less than 10 per cent is zoned for single-family uses and 60 per cent is zoned in such a way that height-limit apartment-houses may be built within the zone. This in spite of the fact that the experience of other cities and the experience of Los Angeles to date definitely shows that a maximum of probably 10 per cent of the total area of any city can be absorbed by apartment-house structures.

APARTMENTS 5 PER CENT

"An analysis of the building permits of Los Angeles city for the last eight years shows that during this period of time an average of less than 5 per cent of building permits were issued for apartment-house structures and the bulk of the 95 per cent remaining were issued for single-family residence purposes. The maximum amount shown in any one year for apartment-houses and flats was about 8 per cent of the total permits issued for the year, while the minimum amount issued for apartment-houses and flats for any one year was 2.9 per cent of the permits issued.

"In one year about nine-tenths of 1 per cent of all permits issued in Los Angeles city were issued for apartment-house structures, yet at the present time 60 per cent of the area of the city is zoned in such a way that the limit-height apartment-house structure may be built within the zone."

"During the last few years," says Mr. Pollard, "there has been a considerable increase in the amount of structures erected for multiple uses, but it is significant to note that even so, the larger percentage of permits issued has been for duplexes, triplexes and four-family flats, and while 1928 saw a tremendous apartment-house building program, yet the actual percentage of permits issued for apartment-house structures was very small.

CORRECTION ADVISED

"Some correction must be had to the present zoning situation in Los Angeles city in order to preserve for those persons who desire to live in single-family residence structures or in duplexes or four-family flats some degree of safety. The apartment-house and business structure erected adjacent to the limited multiple-family dwelling shuts off light and air, increases carrying charges and is uneconomic."

Surveys made by the Eberle Economic Service of Los Angeles show that not only is Los Angeles dangerously overzoned for apartment-house use, but is likewise dangerously overzoned for every type of business use.

In February, 1928, the Eberle Economic Service issued a bulletin in which it showed in detail the results of speculation in the so-called income and business property and stated definitely that the construction of apartment-houses indicates a tendency to provide more family capacities than is warranted by population growths.

SPECULATION SENSED

By June 15, 1928, the Eberle Economic Service had, as a result of its surveys made to that time, shown that while dwelling occupancies in Los Angeles city were somewhat better than the previous year, yet the speculative type of apartment-house was pulling down the general averages and was presenting a condition that needed correction.

The people of Los Angeles city desire to live in single-family residences or in structures wherein two, and not to exceed four, families reside. This is shown by the fact that at this time the single-family residences on the front of the lot show a vacancy of only 3.6 per cent, while duplexes show a vacancy of 8.6 per cent, flats a vacancy of 11.4 per cent, and apartment-houses, 25.2 per cent. A year previous, in June, 1927, the apartment-house vacancy was 20 per cent. On September 15, 1928, the percentages were about the same. Single-family residences on the front of the lot showed a 3 per cent vacancy, duplex houses showed a 7.9 per cent vacancy, flats a 12 per cent vacancy and apartment-houses a 25.2 per cent vacancy.

DEPRESSION RESULTS

A high vacancy in apartment-house structures cannot but reflect itself in a period of depression in values of this type of structure. An overzoning of areas in which such structures are permitted tends to unduly spread these structures over a large area of the city and to create depressions in sections where, with the proper type of structures, depressions would not exist.

Los Angeles needs a very careful analysis of this real-estate situation, such an analysis as will show the logical use to which the several sections of the city may be put. It is declared by zoning officials. Such an analysis will stabilize values and will do away with much speculative bargaining in land. Speculation, while often bringing profits to a few, generally results in losses to the many. An analysis of land uses in Los Angeles would tend to curb this speculation and stabilize for the many the values which they have in their homes.

Los Angeles has the need of many districts wherein multiple dwellings may be erected, but these multiple dwellings should be limited to a very definite number of units and should be restricted to certain types of structures, it is shown.

MARKET RISE INDICATED

County Filings for First Week of January Show Distinct Gain Over Previous Week

Reflecting a rising real estate market for 1929, the number of deeds, trust deeds and other instruments recorded in Los Angeles county for the week ending the 5th inst. reached a total of 6199 as compared with 5180 for the period closing December 29, according to the Title Guarantee and Trust Company.

Practically every community listed registered gains, with Long Beach and San Fernando Valley maintaining the lead in both number of instruments filed and in valuation.

The two weeks compared show the following filing results:

Concern Opens New Builders Service Here

A service designed to protect owners of buildings under construction against liens, possible frauds, contracts, etc., was announced here yesterday by John M. Ewen, Jr., manager of Building Contract Service, Citizens' National Bank Building. Other officials of the new concern include Tyler F. Woodward, secretary-treasurer of Woodward-Bennett Packing Company, president; Flanagan & Sampson, building law specialists, legal counsel, which firm is composed of James A. Flanagan and Richard H. Sampson; and Henry A. Diestler, chief technical adviser, former owner of the "Building Guide" here.

The concern will offer advice and assistance in the following matters of building: Contract with architect, financing, mortgages and trust deeds, specifications, building permit, investigation of contractor, building contracts, recording, bills of labor men and material men, payments to contractor, extras, material releases, waiver of liens, bonding, escrows, joint control, insurance by owner, insurance by contractor, filing notices on property, notice of completion, release final payment from loan company and local building regulations.

Mr. Ewen was a former attorney in Chicago and Paris, France, and recently resigned as branch manager of Italy Frigidaire Corporation.

FACT AND COMMENT

for authentic Spanish-type houses; we have plucked the style of the most beautiful Italian Riviera or English homes; the city is unsurpassed in brick houses, stucco, frame or stone. Architects here, no doubt, approve of the city's development in all classes of building. They have learned the joy of variety, soft and fine lines and all else that thrills the visitor from other sections of the world.

A hush fell over the crowd of banqueters as the speaker had his say. But upon second thought, the words were tucked away for an occasion when they might be revived while each of the architects is reveling in viewing the city's architectural excellence—perhaps not technical excellence, but the best in pleasing variety and individual style.

Wholesaling Money

The turn about in the realty lien market, wherein the lender is wooing the borrower, millions piled up awaiting opportunity and more millions in the East preparing for a California season, does not necessarily mean that poorly secured loans will find ready reception, in so far as the local institutional lenders are concerned.

It does mean, however, that the individual who makes his own loans and demands a bonus that normally should go to a broker, will have a restricted field for activity, if indeed he has an opportunity to ask a bonus.

In view of the forecast for the year, it would seem that the creation of a new style of loan should appear on the market that would eliminate the waste motion involved in sifting investment opportunities to find good investments.

At a time when old loans are meeting prematurity terminations, the substitution of new paper has increased greatly the normal amount of waste activity in all lending institutions, with a corresponding loss of profits without much increase of volume. It would seem to be a time for wholesaling money in blocks to verified borrowers, at attractive rates that could carry an insurance clause. Since foreclosures are almost at zero in the record, the normal margin of safety is wider and becomes a factor worth considering.

Office Buildings

This country is entering a new year with an available surplus of office space that is sufficient to care for expanding business in the nation for at least three years, according to Paul Robertson, president of the National Association of Building Owners and Managers.

However, the official points out that the vacancy is only a little more than the 10 per cent which every successful building operator recognizes as normal.

If the experience of Los Angeles is followed by the nation, the fact that we are declared to be overbuilt in office buildings will mean nothing. Ten per cent is normal for vacancies and as long as the variance is not more than 2 per cent either way, office building will continue at a rapid rate. Los Angeles is in just that position now, and it is safe to say that office building activity this year will exceed that of 1928.

TAX SERVICE TO BE GIVEN LIEN CLIENTS

Company Organized for Protective Title and Lien Procedure

Organization of California Tax Service has been effected and headquarters have been opened in the Security Title Insurance and Guarantee Building, according to an announcement made yesterday by William S. Porter, vice-president in charge of operations of the Security Title Insurance and Guarantee Company.

The organization has acquired the contracts and general business of the California Tax Agency, the original and largest institution of its kind in California. It was founded fifteen years ago by V. H. Goodwin, tax expert, who has been associated with the organization since its inception, and who has been elected president and general manager of California Tax Service.

The service of the new organization will greatly broaden and improve the protective title and lien service of the Security Title Insurance and Guarantee Company, according to Mr. Porter. Furthermore, he points out, clients who have availed themselves of Mr. Goodwin's services during the past fifteen years also will benefit through the completely equipped title plants which the Security Title Insurance and Guarantee Company maintains in Los Angeles county and in seventeen counties of Central and Southern California.

Escrow Group Dinner Guests

Members of the California Escrow Association were dinner guests of the Title Insurance and Trust Company last Wednesday night in the company's cafeteria on the top floor of its new home office building on South Spring street.

Approximately 200 members of the escrow group attended the dinner and were later conducted on an inspection tour of the company's title plant. The various methods used in searching titles were explained by officials of the company and the escrow men were given the opportunity of seeing at first hand many of the old record books dealing with early Southern California land titles.

We Could Not Loan a Dime ...on the entire city of Rhyolite, Nevada

...but we have $5,000,000 available for Los Angeles Building Loans during 1929

IN Rhyolite, the famous ghost city of Nevada, are hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of buildings on thousands of acres of land—but a first mortgage on the entire city would not be worth a dime. Rhyolite's population, once 30,000, has dwindled to one lone hermit—and it is safe to lend money only in expanding communities.

That is why we have made $5,000,000 available for Los Angeles building loans during 1929. The population of Los Angeles has increased 125% during the past ten years. Our survey for 1929 indicates that this city is just on the edge of entering its greatest expansion period; and that coming expansion will have a solid industrial background.

Expansion means building, and building takes money. We are ready to loan $5,000,000 in amounts from $2,500 to $25,000. We have no plans, constructing services or subdivision land to sell. Our sole function is to finance the building programs of owners, contractors and architects. If you have any contact with building operations, or contemplate any during 1929, our survey of coming business conditions will prove helpful.

We have published it in story form and called it "What 1929 Should Mean to Your Pocketbook." It gives the plain, unvarnished facts in business language. Its theories are backed up with incontestable figures. You will want to read it and file it. It is available—free—to you and to your associates. Use the coupon.

DWELLING COST IN CITY SMALL

Los Angeles Second in List of Nation's Centers

Rentals Proportionately Low Through Southland

Heavy Construction Volume Shown by Survey

Los Angeles leads all large cities in the United States, except St. Louis, in low average cost per family for all classes of dwellings, according to Gilbert H. Beaemyer, secretary-manager of the Guaranty Building and Loan Association, after a survey which covers a six months' period, based on United States Department of Labor statistics.

Los Angeles stands well to the top in volume of building and is next to the bottom in average cost of one-family and multi-family dwellings and is fifth from the bottom in cost of two-family dwellings in a list which includes eighteen of the largest cities of the country.

AVERAGE COST FIGURED

Builders have provided new houslings for 136,003 families in fourteen cities of a population of 500,000 or more in the last year, the Guaranty survey points out. Statistics of the Department of Labor indicate that the average cost of construction for each family was $4579.

In the one-family dwelling division, Los Angeles is ranked third in the number of families provided for, and the average cost per family is lower than in any city except St. Louis. Provisions were made for 3687 Los Angeles families in private residences at an average cost of $6865 per family.

The table for one-family houses for a six months' period, which does not include the price of the land, is as follows:

ONE-FAMILY DWELLINGS

City.	Families provided for.	Avg. cost per fam.
Washington	745	$8,324
Bronx	743	6,939
Brooklyn	1,633	6,805

Los Angeles	3,687	3,447
St. Louis	934	3,419
Total	30,323
Average of all cities.	$5169.

When it comes to two-family houses Los Angeles continues to hold an advantageous position. Here Los Angeles ranks fifth from the bottom with an average cost per family of $3301. The larger and more congested eastern cities lead in this class.

Following are figures for this type of dwelling:

Washington	91	2,760
Buffalo	691	2,279
Total	14,312
Average.	$4336.

Construction costs per family in apartment-houses show Los Angeles as cheaper than in any community except one in the nineteen listed, with an average cost of $2180 a family. Only six cities provided for more families in multi-family dwellings than Los Angeles with 1024. New York, Bronx and Chicago lead in this division.

RENTALS RUN LOWER

With the low average cost per family in Los Angeles for all classes of dwellings, it is apparent that rentals average lower than in other large cities and are within the income of the average citizen.

Los Angeles is now constructing dwellings of the best type of architecture, with all modern conveniences, and at figures that are within the reach of the ordinary business man.

Following are the figures:

City.	Families provided for.	Avg. cost per fam.
Manhattan	6,276	$7,614
Washington	745	8,324
Philadelphia	1,855	5,766
Chicago	14,166	5,187

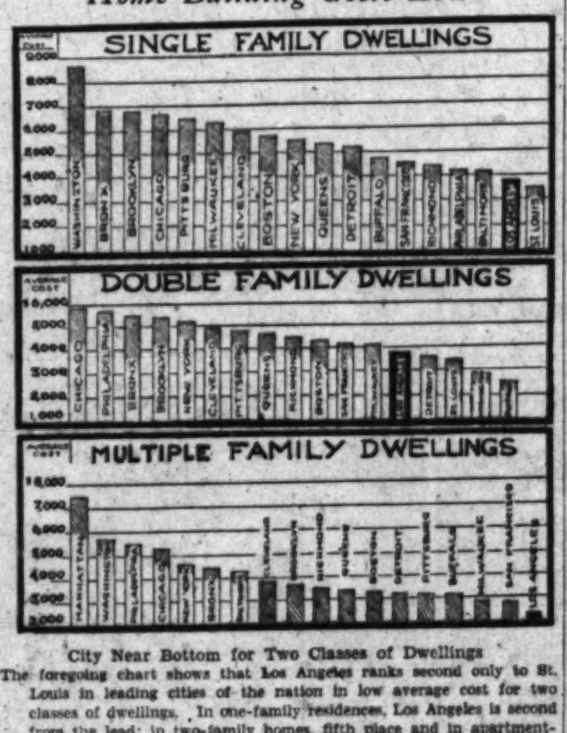
Average of all cities.	$4214.

Home Building Costs Low



City Near Bottom for Two Classes of Dwellings

The foregoing chart shows that Los Angeles ranks second only to St. Louis in leading cities of the nation in low average cost for two classes of dwellings. In one-family residences, Los Angeles is second from the lead; in two-family homes, fifth place and in apartment-houses, second place.

FREIGHT HAULS INCREASE

An interesting commentary upon the industrial growth of the Los Angeles East Side is contained in a report which has just been compiled by the office of A. J. Seiber, joint freight agent for all of the main line haul carriers entering the Los Angeles area, and located at the Los Angeles Union Stockyards.

Early in 1923 the Los Angeles Junction Railway was inaugurated in this area to serve as an added terminal facility for the account of all four of the railroads. During the year 1923 it hauled a total of 14,833 carloads of freight both incoming and outgoing. During the year 1928 it hauled a total of 35,377, or an increase approximating 300 per cent. The growth has been steady and consistent throughout the entire five-year period.

During the five-year period a total of 148,943 carloads of freight have been hauled by the junction line on the account of the line haul carriers. The greatest single item has been live stock, of which there have been 49,192 carloads received during the five years. Next in order of importance has been automobiles, of which 24,023 have been received, consigned for the greater part to Westland Warehouses in the Central Manufacturing District.

Seiber predicts that an even greater ratio of increase will be felt during the coming year, due to the increased amount of attention that is being given to foreign markets by the Los Angeles manufacturers and the increasing tendency to enter the markets east of the Rockies. This latter tendency, the executive states, is due to the fact that Southern California manufacturers are able, because of the advantages of climate, to manufacture at lower costs and are thus able to compete with eastern manufacturers in their own territory.

WILSHIRE COMPLETION NEAR

Boulevard from City to Sea to be Longest Street in Country With Seventy-Foot Wide Paving

Wilshire Boulevard, representing the longest stretch of seventy-foot pavement in Southern California, should be completed as a through traffic artery from Park View street to the ocean at Santa Monica by March 1, it was announced yesterday by R. H. Rook, inspector of public works.

The entire highway is approximately twenty miles in length. While no late records of paving widths are available from other cities, Rook stated that he knew of no other road, paved to a width of seventy feet, as long as Wilshire Boulevard, in the entire nation.

WORK UNDER WAY

Construction work is now going on, within the Los Angeles city limits, from the city of Beverly Hills to Federal avenue, and the county is paving the adjacent strip through the Soldiers' Home to San Vicente Boulevard, where a connection is made with previously laid wide pavement.

Portions of the new pavement are now open, but there are several detours, making it advisable for motorists to avoid the use of Wilshire Boulevard between Santa Monica Boulevard and San Vicente Boulevard.

Wilshire Boulevard is included in the major traffic street plan, and when completed will give Los Angeles motorists an example of the kind of highways planned by the city and the Traffic Commission. Wilshire Boulevard was improved through the co-operation of property owners, who realised the benefits that accrue to property fronting on wide, well-paved highways.

VALUE RISE PROPORTIONATE

It is interesting to note that property values are the highest on Los Angeles' best improved street. Ornamental lights and shade trees, installed along Wilshire, have added to the attractiveness of the street.

BUSINESS VOLUME GROWS

Documentary Stamp Sales for Past Year Reveal Distinctive Gain Over Previous Period

Documentary stamp sales by the Federal government are declared to constitute one of the most reliable barometers of business activity throughout the nation as a whole, A. H. Killgore, secretary of the Title Guarantee and Trust Company, said yesterday in releasing a survey showing the steadily increasing volume of business during the government's 1928 fiscal year, as indicated by the gain in documentary stamp receipts.

The steady monthly gain in the sale of documentary stamps used on bonds of indebtedness, capital stock issues, etc., as compared with 1927, is shown in the following table of the last six months of the Federal 1928 fiscal year:

January	$1,180,071	$1,281,270
February	1,364,194	1,947,141
March	1,055,662	1,131,346
April	1,202,789	1,314,028
May	1,188,175	1,285,109
June	1,200,144	1,532,716
Totals	$7,191,035	$8,471,610

Increase 1928 over 1927, $1,280,575.

The consistent monthly upgrade in the sale of documentary stamps used in the sale of capital stock and transfers is shown in this table:

	1927	1928
January	$1,702,501	$2,232,264
February	1,096,769	1,947,161
March	1,451,404	1,777,823
April	1,544,443	2,678,635
May	1,538,105	2,829,847
June	1,626,331	3,039,069
Totals	$8,959,553	$14,504,799

Increase 1928 over 1927, $5,545,246.

The stamp-tax collections on bonds executed by corporations, capital stock issues, passage tickets, and foreign policies of insurance on property in the United States for the entire 1928 fiscal year amounted to $15,561,459.56, compared with $13,044,445.65 for the preceding year. The tax on the transfer of stock during 1928 amounted to $24,208,537.68, compared with $16,674,102.83 for the previous year. These increases were due to the volume of business activity during the year, and especially to the volume of sales on the various stock exchanges, Killgore said. The tax on sales of produce (future deliveries) netted $4,048,498.60, compared with $2,854,534.45 for the preceding year.

Phone Cable Last Link in Utility Chain

With the completion of the installation work on the cable for telephone service throughout Huntington Palisades, the last link in the program of development which provides for all utilities in underground conduits was welded.

"Huntington Palisades is now complete as far as improvements are concerned," says L. A. Hardie, sales manager of this division of the Santa Monica Land and Water Company. "Our program which has required an expenditure of $1,100,000 is perhaps one of the most pretentious in this section of the country.

"It took more than six miles of cable for the telephone service installation. Every foot of this cable is underground, likewise that for electricity, and the connections for the water, gas and sewers are extended within the curb line to each site so that it will be unnecessary to ever disturb the pavement anywhere within Huntington Palisades to make connections when homes are built.

"There are fifteen miles of curbing and sidewalks, more than six miles of concrete paving, sewers, water and gas mains and close to 1000 ornamental electroliers in addition to the six miles of underground conduits for telephones and for electric service."

CONTRACTOR ELECTED

At a recent meeting of the board of directors of the Southern California Chapter of the Associated General Contractors, George E. Miller, builder of Beverly Hills, was elected to regular membership. Among the larger contractos undertaken recently by the Miller organization has been the construction of the Fox studios at Fox Hills.

TALKIES BRING HUGE STUDIOS

Building Total During 1928 Surpasses Record

Higher Type of Structures Sought for Sound

Fire Proofing Has Important Part in Program

Almost double the value of the same class of structures erected during 1927, the cost of motion picture studio construction within the city limits of Los Angeles during the year just closed reached a new high level of recent years, it was revealed in an analysis made yesterday of the calendar year report of the Superintendent of Building.

The result of the rush of practically all the producers to meet the popular public demand for talkies, erection of the forty-eight studio stages and producing units, for which permits were issued, entailed an investment in labor and material alone of $863,700, it was shown. This figure was 46 per cent above the $462,910 cost of twenty-seven structures erected in 1927, and which compared to $858,350 and thirty-four buildings in 1926, $160,250 and eleven buildings in 1924 and $207,950 and thirty-six buildings in 1923.

A higher class of building was necessitated for the production of sound and talking pictures than was erected in the past, for while in the year just closed there were issued permits for seven fireproof structures costing $344,000, but two of this class were erected during each of the years 1927 and 1926, at a cost of $230,000 and of $190,000, respectively, it was pointed out in the comparison made by the Pacific Fireproofing Company, Los Angeles, which supplied sound and fireproofing materials for several of the sound stages, notably those on the Fox and Lasky lots.

Remainder of 1928's total was made up of $368,000, representing the erection of twenty masonry buildings, and $251,100, the cost of twenty-one frame structures. These figures were comparable to $87,810 for ten masonry and $145,300 for fifteen frame buildings in 1927 and $295,950 for eleven masonry and $352,400 for twenty-one frame-type structures erected in 1926, the analysis revealed.

The value increase was also notable in view of the fact that but seven other of the twenty-nine classifications of building in the report according to use, or occupancy, showed increases over the previous year, and that the city's total building bill was 20 per cent lower than that of 1927.

Home Building Heads Activity for Van Nuys

VAN NUYS, Jan. 12. (Exclusive) In its building summary for last year, which totaled $1,162,346, the Van Nuys district shows permits for 258 new homes at a value of $749,975; forty-four new business buildings were erected and 118 permits were taken out for additional poultry houses of various sizes, all to be conducted on a commercial basis.

According to the complete report there were erected 1036 new homes in that part of San Fernando Valley which is a part of the city of Los Angeles. During the period, 138 business structures were erected in the valley area, while 611 poultry houses were added to the present large chicken industry of the valley, with a value, according to the report, of $348,008.

MAKING MONEY!

Some men make their money in business—some in stocks—some by tollsome saving of their weekly wage. But—

We submit to you the unquestioned fact that more men and women have reached a comfortable competence through the acquiring of real estate, than in any other way.

Business requires your sole attention—Stocks for the most part are subject to manipulation and are highly speculative. Real estate works for you all the time! Select it carefully—set it to work for you and surely day by day Los Angeles will add to your income and fortune.

Wilshire Boulevard—For Exchange
We have one of Wilshire Boulevard's finest corners, improved with high-class building—stores and offices, showing six per cent net on total purchase price. Substantial cash payment necessary, but will take reasonable trade if gilt edge location and properly valued.
Also 100 feet unrestricted, just west of Western and adjoining corner at prominent intersection. Part trade and part cash will handle.

Business Income Corner
Large full depth corner on West Side, car line artery. Close to active business center. Price $150,000. One mortgage only. Shows good income with low rentals. A CORNER WITH A BIG FUTURE—and we can take around $50,000 in clear property, Los Angeles or vicinity.

Owner Says "Sell"
Splendid apartment house of twenty-four singles in first-class condition. No vacancies. Income $1000 per month. Will take good clear lot or bungalow of $15,000 value for equity. This property is $10,000 underpriced.

Exceptional Income Property
Wilshire district apartment. Six-story steel frame. 100% rented. Income over $58,000 per year. Elegantly furnished. One mortgage $160,000. Will consider any reasonable offer, cash or trade for equity.

Obvious Success!
PELLISSIER SQUARE

BETTER PLANNED HOMES VISIONED

Architecture Expected to Reach High Plane

Lincoln Company to Fore in Educational Work

Spanish Type Will Continue to Hold Ascendency

The year of 1929 will see a higher development of domestic architecture in Southern California than any previous period, a development featuring a greater adherence to the true and accepted architectural types and motifs which have been so ably tried and tested locally during the past five years.

This is the opinion of building officials of the Lincoln Mortgage Company, who base their prediction on the remarkable improvement in residential architecture and construction which has taken place during the year just passed.

POSSIBILITIES UNLIMITED

They point out for example, that the possibilities of developing and improving the house architecture adapted from early California dwellings is unlimited. This particular style, which has come into such prominence during recent months, as adapted both to the large and small homes, is typically Californian in appearance and feeling embracing as well the traditional beauty and romance of the early days of the Southwest.

In many respects it follows the lines of Spanish architecture as applied here. It is low and rambling and suggests an utter disregard for boundary lines. It is built in wings which generally conceal a spacious patio.

GENERAL FEATURES NOTED

The outstanding features of this early Californian architecture are open porches of larger-than-average dimensions, gently sloping roofs of shakes or shingles, stucco walls, deep window and door reveals, walled-in patios covered with tiles or flagstones and numerous exposures for each room.

The perfect adaptability of this type of architecture to the setting and environment of Southern California assures it a growing popularity among Californians who are intent upon preserving local traditions.

This is but one of many types, styles and periods of house architecture which have been successfully adopted here, and it is the belief of these building experts that 1929 will surely witness a further advancement along these lines.

PLANS AUGMENTED

In preparation for a busy year, the Lincoln Mortgage Company has added scores of plans and sketches to the large collection which has already been assembled, and this library of house plans is used extensively by those who intend to build. Only by maintaining such a large and varied library is the company enabled to carry on its program of education for better architecture and construction which is the foundation of its designing, financing and building activities.

During the year just closed, the Lincoln Mortgage Company extended its field of building operations into many new residential communities, and according to Frank Frericha, director of sales, there is scarcely a high-class residential district in Los Angeles which does not at least have one Lincoln-built home.

Culver Sales Directors Find Air Travel Adapted to Branch Inspections

With the expansion of the branch offices of Harry H. Culver & Co.'s University City development throughout the Southland, and with the improvement program now being carried to completion in this highland community, C. M. Hamilton, director of sales, and his assistant, H. V. Bagwell, found an airplane the only satisfactory solution of their transportation problem.

Using the airplane, it is now possible for these executives to visit as many as six branch offices in one day. A one-day flight last week took them to Long Beach, Pasadena, Pomona, Santa Ana and Riverside. Upon this occasion the branch and unit managers turned out their entire sales personnel to greet the officials on their arrival at the airports of the various communities.

According to Earle S. Eastham, secretary-treasurer of the Culver organization, the improvements are being installed at University City as rapidly as men and machinery can accomplish this task with complete assurance of it being properly done. The $600,000 expenditure for improvements in University City includes the installation of sewers, gas, electricity, water, electroliers, pavements and curbs.

The first building of the group planned by Loyola University for the campus in University City is nearing completion with most of the scaffolding now being removed from the outside walls.

A German aviation company in Latin America is using thirteen aircraft.

DECEMBER SALES HIT HIGH POINT

Tatum Company Puts Over Deals Totaling $300,000 on Income Properties

C. C. C. Tatum, real estate broker, reports the month of December as a red-letter one for their organization, with sales made by Simeon Lagasse of their business and income properties department, amounting to more than $300,000, as reported by Cecil B. Barker, general manager.

These sales included a lot with a 145-foot frontage on New Hampshire avenue adjacent to Beverly Boulevard to William B. Hess, for $55,000, who contemplates the erection of a new six-story Normandy type, brick apartment building to cover the entire lot; a building site with eighty foot frontage on Hollenbeck Boulevard to Kate A. Ferrish for $26,900, who will erect a store and apartment building thereon. This property is directly opposite the new $1,500,000 project of the Angelus Furniture Company. Mrs. Ferrish also purchased a piece of industrial property on Inskeep street at a price of $10,000.

A four-flat building on Raymond avenue near West Adams street was acquired by Mrs. Louise D. Keesing for $20,000. Mrs. Alice V. Bolton bought the northwest corner of Fifty-third and Halldale, at present improved with two double bungalows, at a price of $20,000, contemplating the erection of a modern apartment building. An apartment-house site on Albany street near Pico was bought by George A. Diddock for $15,000. E. A. Bassett purchased four new stucco buildings, consisting of stores and apartments at Normandie near Forty-eighth street for $75,000. The northeast corner of Grand avenue and California avenue with a frontage on Grand avenue of 146 feet, was sold to Carl Shapiro, who contemplates the immediate erection of five stores and apartments, to be of brick construction.

BOWLING GREEN AND GOLF COURSE PLANNED

Plans for a nine-hole putting course and for a bowling green have just been approved and the improvements will be started immediately at Hollywood Green in the North Hollywood section, according to Roger C. Dahlhjelm, general sales manager of the Homeholders Company. Grading operations, which will be under way in a few days, will be followed by the seeding of the putting greens with cocos-bent grass, regarded by golf enthusiasts as the best covering for greens.

REDLANDS WANTS CIVIC AUDITORIUM

REDLANDS, Jan. 12. (Exclusive) Agitation has been started for the city of Redlands to sell the Wyatt Theater, which it owns, and put the money gained from that sale into a fund for a new city auditorium. The plans for the auditorium call for a concrete structure placed at the bowl in Library Park. The auditorium would face on Grant street and would be so designed and placed that the back part of it would make a shell for the giving of outdoor concerts. A pipe organ would be placed so that it could be used either for the outdoor concerts or for the inside concerts.

OFFICES OPENED

Preliminary to starting actual work on the San Gabriel Dam, the contractors, including Charles Ross of the Associated General Contractors, have opened offices in Azusa and have leased warehouses at the foot of the railroad that the county has constructed from that town to the site of the dam.

PARK SLOPE MAINS BEING INSTALLED

Irrigation Lines to Convert Trees, Shrubs and Flowers Into City Garden

Seventy-five thousand feet of distribution mains for the irrigation of the south hill slopes in Griffith Park are being installed by the city, it was announced yesterday by Van M. Griffith, president of the city board of park commissioners. The main trunk lines in that district have already been installed, he said.

The installation of this vast amount of pipe, which will be completed in between four and six months, is a part of the city's plan to make these hillsides a great garden of flowers, shrubs and native trees, Griffith explained. The planting of flowers and shrubs will begin as soon as the distribution lines are laid, he said.

Harmonizing with this landscaping scheme are the high-class residential districts that border the park on the south, it has been pointed out. These are quite solidly built up, with the exception of the Los Feliz Hills subdivision, the newest tract bordering the close-in side of the park. However, in this area more than fifty homes have been completed, it was explained yesterday by Ralph O. Williams, of Laack & Williams, owners, with the Edwards & Wildey Co., of that residential park.

TRACT SALES RELEASED

Ole Hanson Organization Closes $7,500,000 in Deals for San Clemente Since Founding

SAN CLEMENTE, Jan. 12, (Exclusive)—Property worth $345,013.25 was sold by the Ole Hanson organization for the quota which closed on December 31, according to an official statement issued by Huteson & Murphine, exclusive sales agents for San Clemente. Total sales for the year 1928 were $1,864,420.10 being made with the quota totals as follows: First, $537,628.73; second, $467,978.51; third, $513,799.56 and $345,013.25 for the last quota. Total sales, including resales for the three years San Clemente has been on sale, totals more than $7,500,000.

More than 200 salesmen of the organization were feted at a banquet and dance by Ole Hanson, founder and builder of San Clemente on Monday evening. After the banquet Ole Hanson presented H. B. Estes of San Bernardino with a valuable watch, Estes having won the sales contest with a total of $32,150. Second honors were won by Celestine R. Young of Santa Ana with a sales total of $30,567.50. Third prize was won by Carl Crowson with sales of $23,988.75.

Prizes were awarded the following realtors for business obtained: First, Bob Turner, San Bernardino, $35,891.25; second, Miss Lydia Schroeder, Santa Ana, $27,830; third, Mrs. Gertrude MacPherson, of Long Beach, $15,587.50; fourth, Mrs. Myrtle Fields, of Alhambra, $9000.

Ole Hanson, in awarding the prizes, stated that 1929 looms as one of the best real estate years in California history. He predicted a great future for Southern California and said that sales at San Clemente for 1929 would establish a new record for the Spanish Village by the Sea.

HOME COST RUNS LOW IN NATION

Churches Rank Highest Per Square Foot in Average of Construction Outlay

How construction costs of principal types of buildings compared in 1928 is brought out by a study of the year's building activity recently completed by the research department of Greenebaum Sons Investment Company. The investigation dealt only with the contract price to owners of the structures themselves; the cost of the building sites was not considered.

Residential buildings, which comprised nearly one-half by value of all work undertaken during the year, were erected at the lowest unit cost, it was found; new homes and apartments costing their owners on an average $4.91 per square foot of floor area.

Churches had the highest unit price of all building types covered by the Greenebaum company's analysis. This class of structure cost $8.25 per square foot to build.

Commercial structures, which include office buildings, garages and stores, called for an outlay of $5.54 per square foot of floor space. Schools cost $6.35 per square foot; factories and warehouses approximately $6.71 per square foot.

The general average price was $6.87 per square foot. This average embraces all types of structures included in the year's building program.

Escrow Deal to Be Staged for Brokers

VAN NUYS, Jan. 12. (Exclusive) The Van Nuys Realty Board at its semimonthly meeting next Thursday as an educational feature of its activities will stage a series of hypothetical sales and demonstrations of dealings through escrow, President Rockwell Smith has announced.

The first demonstration will show the sale of a piece of residential or business property, the closing of the deal, the appraisal by an expert and an analysis of the various features of the written instrument under which it is sold.

The second demonstration will take the sale through a make-believe escrow office. Various members of the realty board have been assigned as buyers, sellers and escrow officers to carry out the demonstration. One of the Los Angeles title companies has promised to send one of their expert title searchers to make a talk showing how titles are run down in each realty transaction.

ORANGE RANCH SOLD

LINDSAY, Jan. 13. (Exclusive)—F. S. Wammack, deputy horticultural commissioner, stationed in Lindsay, has acquired from H. C. Beeson, Lindsay orange grower, a ten-acre place northeast of town. Beeson took in trade a house at Woodlake, where Wammack was formerly stationed. Five acres of Wammack's new home are set to navels, olives and pomegranates.

Diversified Program Lined Up by Executive

BY CHARLES C. COHAN

A new era of industrial progress, a material increase of shipping scope, a large population influx and the developing of plans for furthering the welfare of the Los Angeles metropolitan area and the southwest in general, are visioned by Shannon Crandall, who just has entered on his duties as president of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce. Mr. Crandall is not disposed to make flamboyant predictions. However, on the foundation of prosperity and progress placed here, he sees the rearing of a mighty structure during a span of which this year he believes can be considered the start.

DR. GEORGE P. CLEMENTS

Contact with various large industrial enterprises in the East furthers the chamber's expectation of some extensive new industries in Los Angeles this year.

"We are not seeking to pile them in here pell-mell without due regard to conditions that immediately concern their welfare," is Mr. Crandall's view. He stresses the importance of industrial expansion here under circumstances making for permanency, sound progress and increasing prosperity.

SHIPPING EXPANSION

Expansion of shipping is looked for by Mr. Crandall. It is his hope, based on advocacy and action already well under way, that this year will see such augmented passenger and freight traffic between the Port of Los Angeles and Europe as will be a large factor in maintaining Los Angeles as one of the foremost harbors in the nation.

Los Angeles is directly on the great trade routes of the world, he points out. "We're not a community tucked down in a corner of the nation, but a vital center on the broad avenue of commerce that circles the globe. Not only that, but we give the current of commerce a mightly impetus. We have much further opportunity in that regard and this year should see us taking advantage of it."

Mr. Crandall feels it is the part of wisdom to pay special need to the welfare of the many thousands of new arrivals, who come here to invest and reside.

"We cannot too much stress the fact that we're not the dumping grounds for the nations' unemployed," he declared. "But in showing thousands of ... wisdom of ... the nation, we also ... efforts to ... community welfare as ... the future well-being of ... ple. Likewise we will ... deep interest in ... welfare and progress of ... dustries already ... We never underestimate ... tance of that.

LEIMERT PARK GAINS CITED

Construction Activity Marks Year

Service Station Facing Plaza

ONE year ago today, eighteen buildings were completed in Leimert Park and twelve more were under construction. Today, 144 buildings are actually completed and sixteen more are under way, including a bank building and one of the finest super-service stations in the city.

In the twelve months, a plaza has been completed, with a fountain as the central feature, and this was dedicated to public use. The event also marked the opening of the Leimert Business Center and the drive-in market.

The most remarkable feature of Leimert Park activity in 1928 was the demand for flats. The first four-family flat building was started in Leimert Park last April to try out the possibilities for income property. The demand for rentals was such that ground was broken for more flat buildings at once.

Today eighteen buildings of from four to six flats each are actually completed and six more are under way. Of those completed, it is said that everything is rented with the exception of two individual apartments.

BUILDING COST $192 MINUTE

Construction in Los Angeles Half of 1 Per Cent of Country

Angelenos spent $[illegible] for building construction every minute of every day last year!

This figure represents approximately ½ of 1 per cent of the total expenditure for building construction every minute throughout the United States during 1928, which was about $35,000, according to an analysis of building permit records made yesterday by Alfred T. Pelton, president of the Interstate Mortgage and Investment Company.

Excluding Sundays, this investment in new buildings per minute of every working day and holiday last year amounted to $223.54, Pelton study showed.

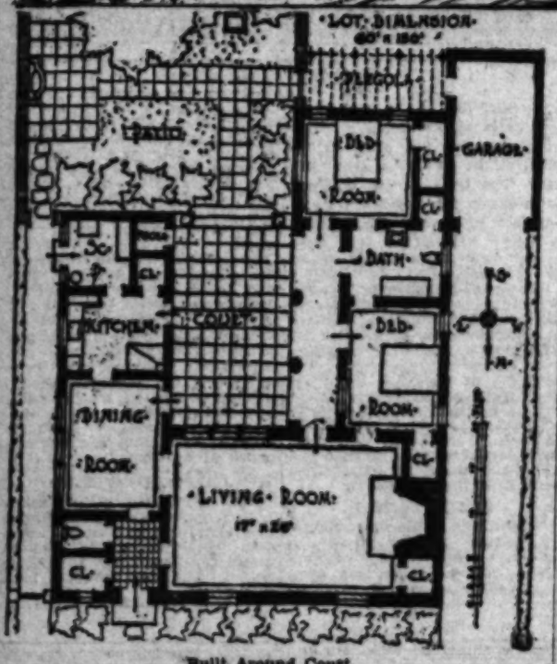
Spirit of California Reflected in Home



Built Around Court

Plans for this small home, built around a court and reflecting the spirit of California architecture, may be obtained from the Small House Plan Service, 6537 Lexington avenue.

foot frontage. There are about 2000 square feet of area, including the garage, and the building cost can probably be kept within $6000.

The design is by the Allied Architects' Association.

Public Asked to Bay Outing

In an announcement just issued by the Frank Meline Company through Donal M. Welch, general manager, the public at large is cordially invited to Pierpont Bay for an outing. The announcement adds that recreational advantages are open to the public, including bathhouse, fishing, wide board walk and the large children's playground.

Pierpont Bay is in Ventura county, immediately adjoining the city of Ventura and is easily accessible via Ventura Boulevard.

APARTMENTS PLANNED

A four-story apartment-house that will contain eighty rooms is to be built at 3623 Griffith Park avenue for Oliver Dorsey by the De Camp-Hudson Company, members of the Associated General Contractors. The structure will cost $85,000.

PRIZE AWARDS ANNOUNCED

Palos Verdes Estates Opens Competition to Select Ten Best Architectural Examples in Community

What are the ten most notable examples of architecture in Palos Verdes Estates? Valuable prizes have been offered by the art jury to anyone who sends in to the Central Editor (address: Palos Verdes Estates, Cal.) before February 1, lists of buildings corresponding most nearly to the selection which will be made by the jury at its annual meeting at Palos Verdes shortly after the first of February.

Each list must be submitted in a sealed envelope, bearing the name and address of the sender clearly written on the outside. The envelopes received will not be opened until after the jury selections have been made, and prize winners will be announced in March.

The prizes offered are as follows: First prize, $50 cash; second prize, $25 cash; third prize, fourth prize and fifth prize, each a copy of the Santa Barbara Book of Small House Plans or other art books of equivalent value at the option of the winner.

In case there is an exact duplication of winning lists the prizes may be divided proportionately. The art jury is to be final arbiter in awarding prizes. No member of the art jury or of the staff of Palos Verdes project, or of their families, may compete.

To aid those who desire to take part in this contest, attention is called to previous awards of the art jury in years past.

For 1925 the art jury selected, as the most notable structure built during the year, the Kerr residence at 3616 Via Ramon and the Gardner Building at Malaga Cove Pass. Honorable mention was also given the residence of Mrs. Caroline Johnson, 2904 Via La Selva, and Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Dorr, 1627 Via Arribs, with special mention to the Olmsted home on Rosita Place. For the year 1926 the Schmidt residence at 408 Paseo del Mar was chosen as the most notable example of architecture erected, and honorable mention was given to the residences of the Schellenbergs at 2604 Via Palomino, the Kincaids at 812 Via Conejo, the Jacksons at 1749 Granvia La Costa, and Miss Stella Smith at 2532 Via Anita, with special mention to Malaga Cove School.

The Gard home on Via Campesina at Via Elevada received the first award for 1927, and honorable mention was given to the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Donald K. Lawyer, 908 Via Coronel, Mr. and Mrs. Boyd Comstock, 736 Via Somonte, Mr. and Mrs. W. K. Sisson, 1705 Via Montemar, Mr. and Mrs. George W. Harrison, 1700 Via Arriba, Mr. and Mrs. George O. Schoolcraft, 749 Via Somonte, and to the house built by Mr. Schellenberg at 3825 Paseo del Campo. No selections for 1928 have yet been made. The Malaga Cove School and the Olmsted and Cheney residences are to be eliminated from consideration at this time as they were designed by members of the art jury.

As no attempt has heretofore been made to group the ten most notable ones of all the buildings in Palos Verdes Estates, the selections this year may be somewhat at variance with previous awards.

Selections are to be made by the jury without regard to cost, size, style, use or order of precedence, except that not more than ten in all shall be named. A small house or building may be more of a gem of architecture than a large, expensive one, it is declared. Consideration will be given by the jury to design, appropriateness of setting, color, arrangement or plan, and above all to the essential quality of charm, which may be called the "soul" of a building.

Contestants are advised to visit Palos Verdes, see all buildings and

Oak Knoll Deals Run to $145,500 With Inrush of Tourists

"The large inrush of eastern tourists to Southern California during the last week was responsible for sales in Oak Knoll estate unit, the new subdivision opened up in Oak Knoll Marino, lying directly east of the Huntington Estate in San Marino, amounting to $148,500," said P. L. Cowherd, general manager of the Frank Meline Company in the Pasadena and Alhambra division.

"This unit was opened up thirty days ago and now there are two homes under construction, which will cost $35,000 each," added Cowherd.

This subdivision contains a large number of old oak trees which have added greatly to the general appeal of this property. According to Cowherd, the lots in the Oak Knoll estate unit are generous in size, averaging 100 feet frontage with a depth of 200 feet. The property has been layed out in such a manner that the old oak trees, ranging in age from 250 to 300 years, will never have to be disturbed in building a home. A number of beautiful specimens have been preserved in the parkways by making the streets of a winding nature. Improvements in this new subdivision are of the highest type, including streets eighty to 100 feet in width, with ornamental street lights and underground conduits installed for telephones and electricity. The latest type of sewerage system has also been installed, added Cowherd.

AREA'S VALUATION JUMPS

Studio City-Ventura Boulevard Area Leading in Increase Over Last Year

Showing an increase of $13,686,190, or 18 per cent, the 1928-29 assessed valuation in the Studio City-Ventura Boulevard area, leads both city and county in the new tax levy, the average increase for the entire county being 7 per cent and in Los Angeles as a whole 8 per cent.

The 1928 assessed valuation of the entire San Fernando Valley is $97,239,435, as compared with $82,869,960 in 1927. For the Studio City-Ventura Boulevard-Sherman Oaks annexed section, the 1928 assessed valuation is $69,230,430, as against $55,553,245 in 1927. It is asserted that $13,686,190 of the $15,022,630 increased assessed valuation for the entire San Fernando Valley was in the annexed or Studio City-Ventura Boulevard-Sherman Oaks area.

According to County Assessor Hopkin's 1928-29 assessment list, San Fernando Valley, in the area between Burbank on the east and Calabasas on the west, and San Fernando on the north and the Santa Monica Mountains on the south, will pay taxes during 1929 in the total sum of $4,648,231. Of this amount, $1,627,617 will be used for municipal purposes, $1,587,936 for education in the public schools, $704,822 for county purposes, $78,313 for flood control, $1051 for county library use, and $648,231 for special improvement district interest and sinking fund requirements.

Burbank city will provide $949,728 of the total valley's tax levy, San Fernando city's share will be $190,367, while the balance, or the major share, will come from the Studio City-Ventura Boulevard-Sherman Oaks annexed area, amounting to $3,508,076. The increase in the total amount of taxes levied in the valley this year over last year is $870,647.

Realty experts attribute the heavy increase in assessed valuation to the Studio City development, the Ventura Boulevard widening and the Sepulveda and Beverly Glen, San Fernando Road, Riverside Drive, Cahuenga Pass east road and the $4,200,000 "five finger" projects. They referred to the fact that in 1852 the entire San Fernando Valley was sold for $14,000.

HOME BUILDING ACCELERATED

Seven Houses Started During Week

Recently Completed Residence

"SEVEN homes, totaling more than $70,000, were started in Moreno Highlands the first week of January," according to William Dickinson of Strong & Dickinson, developers of this close-in lake-view property.

"At the present time there are 137 occupied homes in this community. Only six vacant houses now remain in the entire tract. This gives some idea of the rapidity with which homes built by builders are snapped up.

"December, generally recognized as one of the slowest real estate sales months of the year, was 50 per cent ahead of December, 1926 and 1927. The week before Christmas alone eleven homesites totaling over $40,000 and two new homes valued at $31,000 were sold in this tract. We are anticipating another prosperous real estate period for 1929."

ROMANTIC DAYS LINKED TO PLAN

Home Now Retains Romance of Early California

Sturdy Simplicity Suggested by Exterior Design

Patio Could be Put to Use as Formal Garden

The charm and romance of the old world is embodied in this ultra modern small house of five rooms as pictured in the illustration from the Small Home Plan Bureau under the supervision of the Los Angeles Architectural Club. Modern in the convenience of its floor plan, the largeness of its rooms and the accessibility to the garage from the living room. Old world in the charm of its walled patio and grilled iron gateway.

PATIO OR GARDEN

This patio adapts itself readily to the formal type of small garden with flagged walks and placid lily pond or the carefree charm of a Mexican patio with palm-thatched ramada, wicker chairs and floor patterned with simlight.

The sturdy simplicity of whitewashed walls, shuttered windows and tiled roof is equally attractive whether built on a hillside overshadowed with pepper bows or on flat mesa land with eucalyptus tree etched against the sky. The very simplicity of its structure gives it dignity.

The living room with open fireplace suggests the romanticism of early California furniture or the hospitable depths of low-arm chairs.

FLAGGED COURTWAY

From the dining room one glimpses a flagged courtway which happily suggests enjoyable meals inside and out in a truly old-world manner. In fact, this little house has blended in-a-door and out-a-door life in a typically early California way which is not only livable and loveable but particularly adaptable to our climate.

This small home can be built on a forty-five-foot lot, covers only 855 square feet exclusive of garage and patio, and can be constructed for approximately $4600. The modern and youthful mind of Norene Nogle has made it easy to build and within modest reach.

RECORD FOR SALES MADE DURING 1928

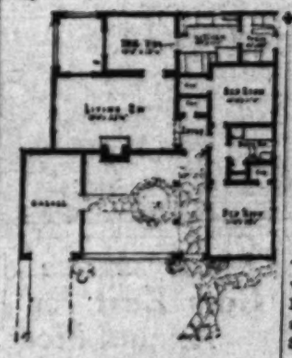
Westwood Hills Association Reports $4,500,125 in Deals With 1929 Prospects Good

Sales during 1928 by members of the Westwood Hills Realty Association totaled $4,500,125, the greatest in the history of the organization, according to a report made recently by F. F. Grose, president. This sum represents for the most part investments in unimproved lots, but also includes 119 homes in the Westwood Hills area.

The year just starting, according to the president, gives promise of setting a record in demand for homes and income property. Many income lots, recently sold, will be developed soon and the vacancies in the territory amount to only 2 per cent.

At the meeting of the organization F. T. Gleiforst was elected president and A. Frank Wilson, secretary.

Old World Charm in Modern Setting



Recently Acquired Plan

This recently acquired plan of the Small Home Plan Bureau, ground floor Architects' Building, is ultra modern in treatment, but retains the romanticism of early California days.

Orange Tinted Bottles to be Produced Here

An orange glass texture will soon be introduced to the country's bottle market by the Southern Glass Company, says Faye G. Bennison, general manager.

"Ever since we produced our patented jet black glass bottle, some months ago, inquiries, particularly from the East, have come to us, asking whether we are in a position to manufacture orange glass and the pink varieties," Bennison stated last night.

Chemists at the Southern Glass laboratory plant who were confronted with the problem last week announced that both orange and pink varieties can be manufactured and several formulas were evolved as a result of eastern inquiries, officials stated.

This department, which is conducted through the courtesy of W. Ross Campbell Company, business property brokers, at the service of Times readers. Questions, however, should be addressed to the Publicity Department of the above-mentioned firm at its offices at 712 South Spring street.—Editor's note.

Question: Is a restriction in deed, "that property can only be sold to white American citizen, excluding Mexican or African descent," valid and has there been any United States Supreme Court decisions?

Answer: A restriction as to sale is invalid, being an unlawful restraint upon alienation. A proper restriction may be imposed to prohibit the use by any except the limited class.

Q.: Where street improvements go to bond, when are payments due? Does notice come from bond company or from city treasurer? Can bonds be paid off before maturity? What is customary bonus, if any?

A.: Under usual street-bond acts, payments of interest are due on January 1 and July 1 of each year. Installment of principal is due on January 1 of each year. The practice as to notice differs, there being no requirement that city treasurer or bond company send out notices. Bonds may be paid off before maturity upon paying interest to the next interest date and six months' interest in advance.

CONTRACTORS TO DINE

RAIL PROJECTS WILL AID CITY

Union Pacific Starts Heavy Program of Year

Passenger Terminal, Bridges Among Major Items

Viaducts, Grade Separations to Be Constructed

Improvement projects aggregating millions of dollars in which the Union Pacific system is heavily interested are under way or are to be started during the current year in Los Angeles or vicinity. These involve, among major items, the completion of two bridges over the Rio Hondo and the San Gabriel River, the erection of a passenger station in East Los Angeles, participation in the construction of two viaducts over the Los Angeles River and a number of grade separations.

The bridges over the Rio Hondo and the San Gabriel River, in the vicinity of Montebello and Pico, respectively, will cost approximately $800,000, according to E. H. Knickerbocker, general manager of the Union Pacific. The structures will both be completed and put into operation during the year, probably in June. Both bridges will represent the last word in their respective types of railroad construction. Built of concrete and steel, each can be equipped for double-track operation in order to take care of the rapidly expanding traffic of the transcontinental system into and out of Southern California.

GROUND-BREAKING OBSERVED

The formal ground-breaking for the new East Los Angeles passenger station, which is being erected at the intersection of Telegraph Road and Atlantic Boulevard, in the heart of the fast-growing industrial area, was observed with proper ceremony during the past week. Prominent civic and business leaders of the city and of the adjacent municipalities participated with hundreds of citizens living in that section and with executives of the industries now located in the area as interested spectators. The first pouring of concrete for the foundations took place yesterday. The Lynch-Cannon Engineering Company, contractors for the depot, has a large force of men at work on the job under the supervision of J. C. Lane, and, according to present plans, the station will be placed in operation early in April. From it will radiate three routes of luxurious motor busses and serving the intermediate territory on all passengers to and from Los Angeles and points east. The motor busses, all of the most approved design of parlor coach construction, will not, however, engage in any intercity traffic, but will be for the exclusive use of the rail passengers. The three routes will terminate in Glendale and Pasadena, in East San Pedro and Long Beach, and in Anaheim, respectively.

CONVENIENCE TO PUBLIC

"The establishment of the East Los Angeles passenger station," said R. B. Robertson, assistant traffic manager of the Union Pacific, "will prove a welcome convenience to the traveling public, particularly to those people residing in or intending to visit in the area to be served under the new service. It will enable a passenger to leave his home in Glendale, Pasadena, Long Beach or Anaheim, or any of the intermediate points, and to reach the train faster than the trip can now be made to the Central Station and in greater comfort. The parking facilities will make it possible to avoid the heavy traffic conditions of the center of the city and the project will permit of the greatly desired more intimate greeting of friends upon arrival or of bidding farewell upon departure. It is, after all, just another evidence of the Union Pacific's constant desire to discharge its obligation to the public and to provide facilities that are second to none anywhere in the country."

Grade-separation projects, according to R. L. Adamson, chief engineer of the Union Pacific at Los Angeles, received considerable impetus during 1923 and since that time the road has participated in and completed thirteen projects, the total cost of which has amounted to $4,974,000 and of which the Union Pacific share aggregated $1,170,000. The principal ones of these have been the Los Angeles River viaduct and those of Macy, First, Seventh and Ninth streets.

PLANS FOR VIADUCTS

It is contemplated, Adamson declared, that construction will begin on the Fourth and Sixth-street viaducts during the present year, and also that grade separations will be constructed at Ninth and Lemon streets, Washington Boulevard and the State Highway at Wineville. The estimated cost of these projects is $5,730,000, of which the Union Pacific share will amount to an expected $1,110,000.

In addition to the above-mentioned projects the Union Pacific, said Adamson, has under consideration for future construction nine other grade separations, the company share of the cost of which will amount to about $1,000,000. These grade separations include the San Pedro branch track and Firestone Boulevard, the main line track and Garfield avenue, the main line track and Durfee avenue, the main line track and Siphon Road; the Butte street track and Washington Boulevard extension, the Butte street track and Santa Fe avenue, the I. C. I. lead tracks and Pico Boulevard extension, the Pasadena branch track and Alliso street, and the depression of the Pasadena branch track between Broadway and Avenue 18.

COUNTY FILINGS HIT HIGH POINT

Suburban Record Good Last Half of December

Long Beach Leads Outside of Metropolitan Area

Financing Operations Show $4,000,000 Total

During the last half of December there were nearly 900 property transfers in the six major communities within the Los Angeles metropolitan area, and financing operations in these communities were substantially in excess of $4,000,000, according to figures compiled bimonthly by the Security Title Insurance and Guarantee Company. Although there was a slight loss in number of transfers as indicated by deeds filed, this is regarded by officials of the title company as normal for the season of the year.

In Long Beach there were 321 deeds filed during the last half of December, this community ranking first in total number of transfers. Mortgages and trust deeds filed totaled 253, and there were 169 releases and reconveyances. Long Beach also ranked first in valuation of mortgages and trust deeds recorded, showing a total for the two weeks' period of $1,135,545.

GLENDALE SECOND HIGHEST

Glendale was the second most active community in volume of transfers with 165 deeds filed, but ranked fourth in financing with mortgages and trust deeds to the value of slightly less than $750,000.

In Pasadena there were 141 deeds filed and 144 mortgages and trust deeds valued at $913,515, placing this city second in volume of financing.

Burbank and Santa Monica were competitors for fourth place in transfers, the former having a total of eighty-eight deeds recorded, and the latter a total of eighty-seven. Santa Monica, however, led Burbank by a substantial margin in valuation of mortgages and trust deeds filed, this community having a total during the last two weeks of $443,961, as against $129,865 for Burbank. For Beverly Hills there were sixty-nine deeds recorded and eighty-six mortgages and trust deeds, involving $877,650.

FILING TOTALS

Total filings in the six communities for the last half of December numbered 2499, of which 871 were deeds, 767 mortgages and trust deeds, 603 releases and reconveyances and 258 miscellaneous instruments. The total valuation of financing operations in the six communities was $4,245,800, a gain of $112,552 over the corresponding period in November.

CHAPEL COMPLETED

REDLANDS, Jan. 12. (Exclusive) W. P. Greiner, owner of the Shrine Children's Home on West Palm avenue, has completed a beautiful chapel and four duplex apartment-houses. The total cost was more than $25,000.

STUDIO BUILDING COMPLETED

La Brea Avenue Structure Opened

Tower Feature of Unit

A SPANISH studio and shop building has recently been completed for Mrs. Lillian Grey, at 624 South La Brea avenue. The building was designed and supervised by Roy Seldon Price, architect of Beverly Hills. Frank C. Curry reperesnting Mrs. Grey in the construction and operation of the building.

The design is rather an innovation in that quite a monumental effect and many renting units have been obtained on an interior lot with only a sixty-foot frontage. Crowning the building is a tower which not only adds dignity to the building, but gives a valuable wall surface for illuminated signs.

Facing the court on the ground floor are six shops and a Spanish cafe. On the mezzanine are four studios and two mezzanines for the cafe. On the second floor are ten offices.

One of the decorative features of the building is the fine craftsmanship in wrought iron and lighting fixtures by Hayrold Russ Glick of Pasadena. There is also an attractive patio with Spanish pool and ornamental planting.

FINER CLASS HOME ASKED BY BUILDER

Owners Putting Additional Funds Into Construction, Survey Shows

The people of the United States are increasing their expenditures for better living accommodations at a much more rapidly than the population itself is growing. This is indicated by an investigation of the most recent data covering construction of new homes and apartments throughout the country, just completed by the research department of the Bowman Sons Investment Company.

Residential construction during 1928 called for an outlay of approximately 39 per cent greater than the amount expended for the same purpose in 1924. During the same period the population of the country gained only about 11 per cent, which would indicate a distinct trend toward American tastes and standards in the matter of housing, as well as an increased demand for more up-to-date and comfortable, and incidentally, more expensive homes. It would also indicate that American purchasing power is well supplied to permit the indulgence of these tastes.

The percentage increase in residential expenditures and population since 1924 are given in the following table:

Year	Residential Construction	Population
1924	100	100
1925	107	101
1926	116	103
1927	127	105

How would you like to receive in tomorrow's mail a beautiful 36-page book in a leatherette cover containing rotogravure reproductions of more than 30 attractive moderately-priced California common brick homes? These houses have actually been built and lived in...the book contains large photographs of each with floor plans and sketches of interior features. It also presents a plan for supplying at nominal cost complete working plans and specifications for any house you may happen to select. . . . .

These books have been selling regularly at 50c per copy. We have a very limited number which we will mail free and postpaid while they last to those who will send for them on the coupon below. You may send for a copy without the slightest obligation, but because of its unusual value and the very limited number available, we ask that inquiries be confined to those who are definitely planning building a moderately-priced home during the coming year and who are genuinely interested in considering the many advantages of common brick for residences. . . . .

REAL PROGRESS ACHIEVED SINCE WAR, SAYS TAFT

Industrial Relations Improved and Peace Efforts Gaining in World; Firmer Drive on Crime Urged

"What progress has the United States made in the ten years since the World war?"

"What tendencies of the present day should concern us as good American citizens?"

"Is the current trend of civilization forward or backward?"

These three vital questions were put to former President Taft, now Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court, and are answered by him in the following interview he gave to Basil Manly. Mr. Manly served with Chief Justice Taft as joint chairman of the War Labor Board in 1918-19, and it is their long friendship which made it possible for Mr. Manly to get the interview.

In the interview, written exclusively for The Times and the North American Newspaper Alliance, is presented an informal but illuminating view on matters of great concern in 1929—the crime problem in the great cities, the dominance of materialism, relations of capital and labor, and the movement for world peace, this last with particular reference to the significance of the Locarno Pact and the Kellogg Treaty.

BY BASIL MANLY

[Copyright, 1928, by the North American Newspaper Alliance. All rights strictly reserved.]

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12. (Exclusive)—Visiting the Chief Justice of United States I found him seated at his desk in the comfortable office of his Washington home. Before him lay the manuscript of his decision in one of the important cases now pending before the Supreme Court.

Seventy-one years of age last fall, Chief Justice Taft today looks as hearty and almost as young as he did sixteen years ago when he left the White House.

What is the secret of his health and unflagging energy after half a century in the public service? The answer is easy: Careful diet, moderate exercise and a sense of humor which preserves the spirit of youth. The old, deep-throated chuckle and the wholesome laugh afford the relief which lightens the burden of presiding over the most august tribunal in the world.

The Chief Justice delights in this sense of humor. He pities and is amused by those who lack it.

DIARY PRAISED

"Have you read the diary of John Quincy Adams?" he asked. "It is charming. I am using it just now for my bedtime reading. I work until 9 o'clock and then read for an hour to put myself in the proper frame of mind for a good night's sleep. Adams was a great man, but he had no sense of humor. I get a good laugh out of almost every page of his self-revealing narrative."

After further pleasantries and reminiscences of war days and our experience on the war labor board, I broached the principal subject of my visit.

"It is ten years," I said, "since the end of the war. The world is still in a state of confusion caused by that tremendous upheaval. Many of us, whose function it is to view developments from day to day, are perplexed to know in what direction it is moving. Are we going forward or are we, as some pessimistic commentators proclaim, losing our hold upon the fundamentals of civilization and falling constantly backward? What developments or tendencies do you see that should particularly concern us as good American citizens?

"By virtue of your experience and the detached position which you occupy you have a perspective which most of us lack and which is necessary to any sound judgment."

ALL JUST A GUESS

"Any appraisal of the trend of our civilization," the Chief Justice replied, "can be nothing better than a guess. We are still too near the cataclysmic eruption that shook the whole world during the four years of the war for anyone to venture an assured opinion on the general trend of the great forces which sway the destiny of this and every other nation.

"As you know," Mr. Taft continued, "I am always an optimist, and I firmly believe that the American people will find a way to solve the perplexing problems which now beset them. Nevertheless, there are conditions confronting us today which merit the consideration of every citizen who has at heart the welfare of the nation and the future of his children and his children's children."

"What do you consider the most disturbing element in our national life?" I asked.

"It is difficult to describe precisely," the Chief Justice replied, "but it may be understood when I characterize it as the materialistic philosophy which places wealth and worldly success ahead of every other consideration in life. What can it profit a man to have accumulated millions if he has not at the same time maintained a clear conscience and acquired the good will and esteem of his fellow citizens?"

"What relation, if any," I asked, "do you see between this lust for wealth at any cost and the problem of organized crime that is today challenging the government of every large city in the country?"

"There is a problem," the Chief Justice replied, "which unquestionably menaces our civilization. Our entire machinery of justice must be geared up to cope with it. Our police forces, our prosecuting organizations and our court system must all be improved until we are able to subdue these criminal organizations.

CRIME ORGANIZED

"The aftermath of war, which made the destruction of human life a commonplace, and the great profits to be gained by preying upon our post-war prosperity, have combined to create a system of organized crime which should arouse every responsible American citizen.

"The nation does not yet appear to be fully awakened to the seriousness of this problem. As a people we seem incapable of effective action until we are approaching a crisis. Do you remember Kipling's caustic lines giving his view of the American spirit?

"That bids him flout the law he makes,
That bids him make the law he flouts,
Till, dazed by many doubts, he takes
The drumming guns that have no doubts.'

"Unfortunately, there is some truth in them. It is only too clearly manifested in the flippant views of those who advocate or complacently condone the nullification of prohibition and other laws. To preach disrespect and disregard of laws duly enacted, even though they may be unwise, can have no other result than to encourage criminals.

CO-OPERATION NEEDED

"We shall come through this crisis as we have through others even more grave, but to do so we must have the effective co-operation of all the forces of law and justice.

"First of all, we must detect and capture the criminals. This means a larger and better organized police force in every State and city. It will cost some money, but in proportion to the menace that confronts us it will be cheap at almost any price.

"Every State should, in my opinion, have an efficient constabulary," Mr. Taft asserted, with a resounding thump on the desk to emphasize his point. "It should be organized not only to patrol the rural districts and the State highways, which have become of such great importance with the development of the automobile, but also to reinforce the police forces of towns and cities whenever conditions may make it necessary."

"But, is it not true," I asked, "that the problem of convicting a criminal, especially if he is rich and powerful, is at least as difficult as catching him?"

JURY SYSTEM BLAMED

"Unfortunately, it is," the chief justice replied. "It is a disgrace to our country that so many criminals with large resources at their command have been able to avoid paying the penalty for their misdeeds. At the basis of this situation lies our jury system, which must be improved if we are to obtain effective justice. We must find a means of getting intelligent and conscientious jurors who will not be misled by ingenious attorneys or swayed by maudlin appeals to sympathy.

"The administration of justice is the very basis of orderly government, and should command the support and co-operation of every thoughtful citizen, regardless of any temporary sacrifice or inconvenience which service upon grand juries or trial juries may entail.

"If we can perfect our police systems and our court procedure, I have no doubt that within a reasonable time we can bring under control even the most aggressive gangs which are now preying upon our cities and States."

Turning aside for the moment from this question of crime and legal administration, which naturally is of peculiar interest to the chief justice, and reverting to the important part he played in maintaining the nation's industrial stability during the war, I asked: "Do you not regard the apparently steady improvement in the relations between employers and employees as a hopeful sign for the future?"

AMITY NEARER

"I do," the former joint chairman of the war labor board replied. "It seems to me that American employers and the men whom they employ are nearer to an understanding of their common interests than at any time within our history. We still have bourbon business men and extremists among the labor leaders, but the number of both these types fortunately appears to be decreasing year by year.

"One of America's greatest contributions to human progress has been the demonstration in a number of our industries that good wages and reasonable hours of labor are compatible with low costs of production. Thus the way has been opened for a constant improvement in the standard of living and the ultimate elimination of that abject poverty which was the curse of earlier centuries.

"The constant extension of voluntary conferences between employers and employees and the growing use of mediation and arbitration as a means of settling industrial disputes seem to indicate that the day may soon come when the old, wasteful methods of industrial warfare will be practically abandoned for more intelligent plans of adjustment."

"Do you feel that equally satisfactory progress has been made since the end of the war in the field of international relations?" I asked.

MILLENNIUM NOT REACHED

"No intelligent man can view that field with complete satisfaction or complacency," replied the chief justice, who during the twenty years before he was appointed to the Supreme Court was one of the leading advocates of international arbitration and world peace.

"Nevertheless, we must have the patience to realize that the habits and traditions of centuries cannot be changed in a day. Our system of civil and criminal jurisprudence, which is still far from perfection, was not created overnight, but was the product of the earnest thought of many generations. How can we, therefore, expect immediately satisfactory results in the international field, where every forward step is dependent upon the voluntary action of many nations with widely divergent interests and foreign policies?

"What is most important is not how fast we are moving, but whether on the whole we are going in the right direction. I believe we are. We can see in the events of each year new evidences that the masses of the people throughout the world have an ever-increasing appreciation of the horror, waste and futility of war, and are determined to find peaceful means of settling their international disputes.

"The nations are moving to a sense of obligation that nothing should be done of a critical nature until their authorized representatives have had an opportunity to sit down around a conference table and attempt to reconcile their differences.

"That is the significance of the Locarno conference and the Kellog pact for the outlawry of war. Both of these are important steps in the right direction. They have been taken because the governments of the leading nations have come to realize that the people want peace.

"We have no right to expect the millenium, but our present progress should lend encouragement to the thoughtful citizens of every nation to continue unabated their efforts to promote world peace and procure enduring international understandings."

Monkey Farm Will be Open for Visitors

Every species of the Simian family, from huge anthropoid apes to tiny monkeys, are to be "at home" to the public at the Los Angeles Monkey Farms, Inc., to be opened formally next Saturday, according to an announcement made by W. H. Rice, president of the corporation.

Located on Washington Boulenear Culver City, the farm will be open from 10 a.m. until 5:30 p.m.

Included among the farm residents will be more than 200 monkeys, the majority of which are being imported from Hagenbeck's Zoo in Hamburg, Germany. Elaborate quarters have been erected to house the collection of monkeys.

HUSBAND TOO FRIENDLY

Mrs. Velma Barnett wanted her husband, Eric Barnett, to be nice and courteous to her women friends, but when he began showing them ardent attention and neglected her she balked and hastened to court for a divorce, it was revealed at the hearing on her petition held before Superior Judge Westover. Mrs. Barnett testified that when she gave a bridge party for some of her women friends her husband came in and joined the party and greatly embarrassed her by his attentions to the women in the group. When she remonstrated he told her she was a "jealous little cat," she said.

Actress Gives Attorney Kiss After Divorce

Marie Prevost, motion picture actress, has set a new example for

Since the beginning of time a couple are married the minister or judge who performs the ceremony kisses the bride, or is supposed to.

Yesterday Miss Prevost appeared before Superior Judge Stutsman pace for divorces when she threw up her cheek for her attorney, Roger Marchetti, to kiss after he was granted her final decree of divorce separating her from Kenneth Harlan, actor. The decree was signed by Superior Judge Stutsman.

Asked how soon it would be before she appeared at the altar in a house again, this time for a marriage license, the actress merely shrugged her shoulders expressively.

"Not very soon, I assure you. Anyway that is the way I feel about it."

Miss Prevost obtained her divorce from Harlan a little more than a year ago on the ground of cruelty.

HARLAN ASSERTS THEY'RE STILL FRIENDS

CHICAGO, Jan. 12. (AP)—Kenneth Harlan, here on business, said today when informed that his wife, Marie Prevost, has been granted a final divorce decree in Los Angeles they are "the best of friends" and simply could not get on together.

"Miss Prevost is a fine woman and I hope we will always remain friends," Harlan said.

Wife of Former Fighter, Hellman Granted Divorce

Asserting that her husband, Tom K. Hellman, former contender for the heavyweight boxing championship of the world, refused to work and was careless in his dress, Vivian G. Hellman asked for and Judge Stutsman to grant her a divorce.

Mrs. Hellman contended that while her husband was employed his own habits he looked on as neglecting her clothes and failing to how to dress.

In another portion of her complaint the wife asserted that on one occasion when it was necessary for her to undergo an operation for her life her husband objected to spending the money for it, declaring that he wanted to buy a new car.

The couple married in October, 1922 and separated in December, 1928.

At the close of the hearing Judge Stutsman granted the decree.

Leaders Named for Actors' Ball

Stage and screen notables are comprising committees in charge of the Actors' Equity ball were announced yesterday by Miss Margaret Severn, who will supervise the affair at the Biltmore on the 31st inst.

This first Equity ball to be held in the West has as its committee arrangements Lionel Barrymore, Warner Baxter, Reginald Denny, Ralph Forbes, Milton Sills, Conrad Nagel, James Spottswood, Lilyan Tashman, Lois Moran has charge of the floor program. Conrad Nagel heads the floor committee and Lionel Barrymore is to be in charge of the decorations.

Entertainment will be furnished by Belle Bennett, Edmund Breese, Clive Brook, Louise Brooks, Irene Craven, Robert Edeson, Percy Ikerrin, Fawcett, Edward E. Horton, Colleen Moore, Ernest Torrence, Rudolph Ware and others.

BOYS VISIT PLANE SHOP

Two hundred and fifty Boy Scouts and near-by communities made a tour of Los Angeles Harbor yesterday, visiting the U.S.S. Saratoga, naval airplane carrier, as a special feature.

Saturday excursions are to be made to industrial plants and other points of interest by the scouts as an educational activity of the organization, which is sponsored by the Community Chest. It is announced by Thomas L. Bisset, executive manager.

NEWS OF SOUTHERN COUNTIES

SHOW TO NAME LEMON CHAMP

San Bernardino Classic Has New Feature

Exposition Opens February 14 for Ten Days

More Than 300,000 Visitors Expected to Attend

SAN BERNARDINO, Jan 12.—San Bernardino's "Valentine" gift to the nation will be the formal opening of the Nineteenth National Orange Show.

Starting on February 14, the show this year will run eleven days, to and including February 24. Thus it will embrace two Saturdays, two Sundays and George Washington's Birthday, not to mention St. Valentine's Day. Holidayed and doubly week-ended, the huge exposition of citrus fruit is expected to attract a record-wrecking attendance, possibly in excess of the 300,000 mark.

"Who is the world's lemon champion?"

That is the new question which this year's show will answer, in addition to naming the orange champion as inaugurated last year. And, according to the show management, interest among growers in being awarded the title of world's champion lemon grower promises to equal that of champion grower of oranges.

The high interest which obtains in the yearly classic exposition of the orange is best illustrated by the fact that already—a month in advance of the opening day—all the space has been reserved for the gigantic industrial division.

This fact was pointed out here yesterday by Roy H. Mack of San Bernardino, veteran general manager of the show, who has been in Los Angeles this last week in conference with officials who are arranging for special entertainment talent and other show plans.

Mr. Mack said that ordinarily there is space available in the industrial division well up to show time, whereas the entire space allotted to this important section was gone a week ago. Another indication of record-breaking interest, he stated, was the fact that more communities than ever before have definitely signified their intention of entering feature exhibits made of oranges.

These feature exhibits, built up entirely of citrus fruit—oranges, lemons, grapefruit—have become more elaborate year after year until their fame and beauty spread world-wide by the news pictures, the distinctive displays of Southern California's communities are internationally famous. This publicity alone causes the various communities entering exhibits to seek the most attractive designs, especially exhibits which embrace motion features to catch the eyes of the movie cameramen on opening night.

The entertainment on the big stage in the main show department of the permanent orange show building will be even more elaborate than usual, it is announced.

Daily and nightly concerts by Creatore's famous band from New York will be the stellar feature of the programs. These concerts will be augmented by music from various other musical organizations representing communities for which special days at the show are to be set aside. There will, too, be vaudeville acts of various sorts—a diversified array of "eye and ear entertainment" in addition to the interesting array of blue ribbon fruit.

Within the annex building, newly finished last year, and connecting with the main structure, will be a "side show" of by-products of the citrus industry; examples of the lesser members of the citrus kingdom, together with all the many products made from citrus fruit—jams, jellies, flavors, cosmetics, soaps, etc. As usual, there will be a complete "Orange Trail" lined with carnival attractions and resort features.

"We are spending more money than ever before on this great nonprofit exposition," explained Manager Mack, "because we intend that this year's show truly shall be bigger and better and illustrative of the prosperity of California's most successful citrus season."

Plan Church as Inspiration

PASADENA, Jan. 12.—Plans for the establishment at Washington of a Presbyterian Church that would serve as an inspiration for Presbyterian congregations throughout the United States were discussed here today by Dr. Charles Wood, chairman of the National Presbyterian Church Foundation. Dr. Wood, who recently retired as pastor of the Church of the Covenant of Washington, is a guest at the home of Dr. and Mrs. John Carruthers of 1015 Prospect Boulevard.

Residents of this city who have been selected to serve on the committee sponsoring the national church project are Dr. Robert Freeman, Dr. John Willis Baer, Mrs. Robert J. Burdette and Dr. Carruthers.

"I believe," said Dr. Wood, "that the opportunity is now at hand for co-operating with the Assembly so effectively as to give the capital city a national Presbyterian church."

"Chief Justice Taft is in favor of the project, and it is hoped that this national church may do, in part, at least, what the two Episcopal cathedrals in New York and Washington are doing for an aggressive Christianity and vital Protestantism."

LUMBERMEN ELECT

SAN FERNANDO, Jan. 12.—J. W. Wrightson of North Hollywood was elected president of the San Fernando Valley Lumbermen's Association at their monthly meeting here. H. C. Clampitt of San Fernando was chosen vice-president and Tony Hanson, secretary-treasurer.

POMONA CHAMBER FEASTS

Annual Meeting and Banquet Largely Attended by Representative Citizens

POMONA, Jan. 12.—Featured by a timely address by Alexander R. Heron, of Sacramento, State Director of Finance, on the subject, "Business in Government," the annual Pomona Chamber of Commerce banquet, held in the Ebell clubhouse last night was the most successful in the organization's history, some 300, including county officials, representatives from a dozen neighboring cities, and a large percentage of the local membership, having been seated at the banquet table to partake of a turkey dinner and listen to stirring addresses. Entertainment throughout the feast was furnished by the Troubadours of the Pasadena Legion Post.

Introduced by J. M. Page, secretary of the local chamber, Mr. Heron at the outset of his speech spoke of the chamber's official program which said, "what are you going to do tomorrow?" and declared that it could very well be the subject of his talk. Giving his 1929 version of the Declaration of Independence, he said, "Notice is hereby served to the world that on and after a certain day this country will sever bonds of foreign supervision and thereafter will be operated on a basis of customer-ownership." He traced the development of government from the dim ages past up to the present time, and also the beginning of democracy which he said was now entering into public utilities, making the theory of customer-ownership a reality by permitting users to obtain stock in those concerns. "Bring democracy to your business at home and to your legislative interest abroad, demand the right things from your legislators for the year with your own voices," he said. "When the government of your State comes to the realization that a more vital part is being taken by the people in that government, those officials will become more intent and careful about spending money," was one of the strongest statements in his speech and brought a big applause from those assembled.

A. T. Richardson, newly elected president of the Pomona Chamber of Commerce, was presented with the official gavel by the retiring president, G. Earl Clark, and made a plea to "sell Pomona and Pomona Valley to Pomonans and others; arouse interest in our assets of education, communication, religion and transportation."

Senator Cadet Taylor of Pomona, when introduced, read a telegram from Congressman W. E. Evans from Washington which told of the passing in the House of the reapportionment bill, which announcement was greeted by the greatest applause of the evening.

Among the guests introduced were Mayor S. H. Park, Henry W. Wright, Los Angeles County Supervisor; W. A. Johnstone, chairman of the State Civil Service Commission; R. A. Condee, president of the State Fair; Ben W. Spencer, secretary Ontario Chamber of Commerce; George W. Reid, secretary Anaheim chamber; R. H. Cattle, president, and M. L. Birnie, secretary of the Chino chamber; William Avery, president of the Upland chamber; Fay Marchant, secretary of the San Dimas chamber; Bob Williams, secretary of the Laverne chamber; Dr. Gilbert N. Brink of the Claremont chamber; William Dunkerley, secretary-manager of the Pasadena chamber; J. E. Kirk, secretary of the Upland chamber; Burton Smith, State editor of the Los Angeles Times, and others.

SAILOR TO FACE MURDER CHARGE

SAN DIEGO, Jan. 12.—Walter Grant Hipple, signalman aboard the U.S.S. McDermott, was in the County Jail today on a murder charge, awaiting preliminary hearing on the accusation that he inflicted fatal injuries upon Lois Patricia Campbell, 3-months-old infant daughter of Mrs. Marjorie Campbell.

Hipple was arraigned on the murder charge before Justice Arthur L. Mundo in township court late yesterday afternoon after his release from the custody of naval authorities. Hearing will be held the 29th inst. at 10 o'clock a.m., Mundo ruled.

Police charge that Hipple beat the infant into unconsciousness as she lay in her crib last Sunday night at 1432 Sixth street. The baby died the next day.

Hipple has steadfastly denied the charges and was absolved of blame by a Coroner's jury which investigated the death Thursday.

MILLION DOLLARS FOR CITRUS FRUIT

FULLERTON, Jan. 12.—A gross return of $1,467,455 was realized by members of the Placentia Orange Growers' Association on 227,000 boxes of citrus fruit shipped through the local packing-house during the past year, it was reported to 500 members of the organization in their annual meeting in Fullerton Union High School Auditorium today. The shipments last year were the smallest since 1918, according to J. A. Prizer, secretary-manager of the association.

Valley Scouts Hear Address by Buron Fitts

RESEDA, Jan. 12.—Dist.-Atty. Fitts was principal speaker last night at the sixth annual banquet conducted by the San Fernando Valley Council of Boy Scouts in the new American Legion clubhouse here. His most interesting talk was along the lines of boy development. "Most of our serious crime condition today," he said, "is what we term juvenile crime, yet so far as I know there has never been a Boy Scout in either Folsom or San Quentin prisons." He also stated that the United States could never hope to solve its crime conditions, most of which is brought about by the acts of juvenile malefactors, until the government sees the economic need of spending a great deal of money in finding a way to develop that certain group of boys and girls who are not within the fine influence of a home with good parents. Another speaker was C. J. Carlson, regional executive of the National Council of Scouts, who in the course of his talk bestowed five five-year veteran medals. They were given to C. C. Knight, B. R. Holloway, C. H. Clarke, J. P. Inglis and William A. Thurmond. A fifteen-year veteran medal was given to Charles A. Bevis of Van Nuys, who has been connected with Scout work almost since its inception in the United States. Eagle badges, the highest Boy Scout honor, were given to Charles Cascales and Francis Haymaker. Following the banquet a program was enjoyed, including the reading of reports of the various officers of the organization.

ASSERTED FORGER IN PSYCHOPATHIC WARD

PASADENA, Jan. 12.—While Asa Keyes, her alleged victim in a bad-check plot, was on trial in Superior Court on charges of accepting bribes, Mrs. Ruth H. Horne, alias Mrs. Wanda C. Hudson, was taken to the psychopathic ward of the General Hospital for observation today.

Mrs. Horne, according to arresting officers, forged the former District Attorney's name to three checks totaling more than $12,000, and attempted to draw on the checks after depositing them in local banks.

In the course of her preliminary hearing in justice court, Mrs. Horne acted as her own attorney and questioned Keyes when he took the witness stand.

She told Keyes that she wanted to see the color of his eyes and when the witness removed his glasses, Mrs. Horne admitted that he was not the "Keyes" she asserted signed and gave her the checks.

Mrs. Horne's mother declared her daughter's mind became affected when she lost the notes of a book that was to have been her life work.

ANNOUNCE FUNERAL FOR NEXT MONDAY

REDONDO BEACH, Jan. 12.—Funeral services will be held on Monday for John Salamunovich, well-known local business man, whose death occurred on Thursday evening following a heart attack. Mr. Salamunovich had been a resident of Southern California for eighteen years, coming to this district five years ago. He was prominently identified with the Redondo Beach Chamber of Commerce, the Boosters' Association, and the Elks' Lodge, the latter organization having charge of the funeral arrangements. A widow, Mrs. Nina Salamunovich, and daughter, Annette, survive him. Services will be from St. James Catholic Church at 9 o'clock and interment will follow in Calvary Cemetery.

WILL H. HAYS TO BE PASADENA'S GUEST

PASADENA, Jan. 12.—Will H. Hays, former Postmaster General of the United States and present czar of filmdom, is expected to arrive here tomorrow morning and register at a local hotel for an indefinite sojourn.

Included in the party, which is making the trip on the Golden State Limited, is John Connery, owner of the Edgewater Beach Hotel of Chicago.

CAPTURE BIG GIN CARGO

Ventura Officers Stop Automobiles and Arrest Drivers on Liquor Charge

VENTURA, Jan. 12.—Harry Clein and Ralph Barton, who gave San Francisco as their home town, the most handsome asserted transporters of intoxicating beverages which the Sheriff's office has ever brought before a judge, appeared today in Judge Dimmick's justice court and pleaded not guilty to the charge. They were arrested this morning by Undersheriff Howard Durley and Deputy Sheriffs Pablo Ayala and Ray Ransdell on the Camarillo ranch as they waited, shielded by trees and shrubs, to take the highway either north or south.

Their two expensive, heavy, underslung roadsters, were arranged with trick compartments and held 120 quart bottles of White Satin gin, dry Martinis and Dunbar whisky, wrapped in straw. The men refused to say whether they had gathered loads in from a truck or had loaded it from a rum runner in the channel.

When approached by officers, Clein threw away the key to his car, necessitating some tinkering with the wires before the officers could start it toward the jail with its liquid load.

Their preliminary examination is set for the 28th inst. and their bail fixed at $500 cash for each.

WOMAN MAY MAKE RACE FOR MAYOR

Friends of San Diego Club President Urge Her to be Candidate This Spring

SAN DIEGO, Jan. 12.—A new interest has been injected into the Mayoralty race scheduled this spring by the introduction of a woman candidate for the city office. Mrs. Ella S. Robbins, 5028 Litchfield Road, president of the San Diego County Federation of Women's Clubs, announced today she has been approached by a number of prominent local clubwomen urging her to run for Mayor at the April primaries, and who have expressed the belief that she would have the support of the women voters of San Diego if she would become a candidate for Mayor.

As a result Mrs. Robbins said she is seriously considering the matter, but has not yet reached a decision. "I believe, however," she stated, "if the right woman should take a hand in the city government she could do much to help unravel some of the city's present tangles, much to the benefit of the citizens of San Diego. As to whether I am the right woman or not, I have not made up my mind."

Mrs. Robbins, who has been president of the county federation for the last two years, is a member of four of the city's most prominent women's clubs, the San Diego Club, the Women's Civic Center, the La Jolla Women's Club and the Daughters of the American Revolution.

She is a native of Iowa and came to San Diego in 1914. She is a property owner, and has for many years taken an active interest in civic affairs. She is a member of the First Methodist Episcopal Church of San Diego, in the activities of which she has been prominent for a long time. She lived in La Jolla for several years, from which suburb she returned about a year ago.

With her daughter at college, Mrs. Robbins says she would have the time to give to the affairs of the city.

VAN NUYS BANKER GIVEN PROMOTION

VAN NUYS, Jan. 12.—Walter E. Chisholm, resident manager of the local branch of the California Bank, has been elected a junior vice-president of the parent bank, it is announced here today. Mr. Chisholm came from the Citizens' Trust and Savings Bank of Los Angeles to the First National Bank here which later became the California Bank branch. His new appointment will not take him away from Van Nuys as he will act as managing supervisor of the several branch banks of his institution in San Fernando Valley, including the new branch that has just been opened at Reseda several miles west of here.

GLENDALE WOMAN IS HEART VICTIM

GLENDALE, Jan. 12.—Efforts of the inhalator squad of the fire department to restore Mrs. L. K. Strowger, 60, of 236 North Louise street, to consciousness after she had been stricken with illness today, failed, and a heart stimulant administered by Dr. L. L. Craven also proved powerless to revive her. Strowger told the police that his wife had been seized with sudden illness early this morning but she collapsed in his arms as he sought to carry her to the open air in the hope that she might revive, death ensuing almost immediately.

FARM ENGINEERS TALK ELECTRICITY

ONTARIO, Jan. 12.—Agriculturists of the Ontario district today are convinced that by proper use of electricity on the farm, greater results will be obtained, and less calllouses will develop on their hands.

This happy belief was inspired at the winter meeting of Pacific Coast division of the American Society of Agricultural Engineers at Chaffey Junior College yesterday and last night.

Speakers were A. W. Christie, G. B. Ridley, W. E. Lyon and A. R. Wood. Theme of the meeting was "Electricity in Agriculture."

OUTSMARTS BANDITS

SAN GABRIEL, Jan. 12.—Wesley Montgomery of Temple City doesn't sit still and allow hold-up men to relieve him of his money and watch.

Early today he was in his car on Las Tunas Drive when three youths in a roadster ordered him to stop. As they jumped out of their car and started toward Montgomery he threw his gears into reverse and backed away.

After bumping across the Pacific Electric tracks Montgomery turned up a side street and eluded the bandit trio, although they chased him for several blocks. The attempted hold-up was reported to the Sheriff's substation at Temple City.

LEGION POST INITIATES

OWENSMOUTH, Jan. 12.—At the regular meeting of the Owensmouth post, American Legion, conducted here, nineteen new members were initiated by the forty-five members present. The post is one of the largest and most active in San Fernando Valley. It now has in excess of the quota membership required by the State Department of the Legion.

NEW PHONE EXCHANGE

RESEDA, Jan. 12.—Work has been completed on the one-story Spanish stucco telephone building that is to house the new dial-system telephone exchange of the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company. Heretofore, Reseda subscribers have been served through the telephone exchange at Van Nuys. C. C. Campbell, manager of the Van Nuys exchange, will have supervision over the Reseda exchange.

DEBATE FATE OF MAN-GIRL

Orange County Authorities Undecided What Action to Take in Case of Katharine Wing

SANTA ANA, Jan. 12.—The indifference of the "I don't care" girl, Katherine Wing, pseudo "husband" of Eileen Garnett, 15, whom Miss Wing led to the altar in Santa Ana nearly two years ago while masquerading as a man, remained undisturbed today as the authorities announced no decision would be made regarding her case until Monday.

Prospect of facing a week-end of suspense in the County Jail with Miss Stella Harper, 15, the second girl for whom Miss Wing posed as a husband, apparently failed to affect the calmness with which Miss Wing has met the predicament confronting her.

Dist.-Atty. E. B. West, Jr., after a conference with Dep. Dist.-Atty. S. B. Kaufman, announced that he would not decide before Monday whether Miss Wing would be prosecuted on a felony charge in connection with her act in marrying the Garnett girl.

Following her arrival at the jail yesterday Miss Wing remarked that she didn't care what was done with her. She would go back to her 200-acre wheat ranch at Springville, Utah, should she be released, she said, because "the folks back home" are used to seeing her in male attire and would think nothing of it, she said. But whether she was prosecuted or not seemed to make little difference to her.

She married the Garnett girl because the latter, falling in love with a supposed man, was heartbroken and threatened suicide when she discovered Miss Wing was a girl, according to Miss Wing who has worn masculine clothing for four years.

Los Angeles officers arrested her in Los Angeles Wednesday with Miss Harper, the couple having posed as man and wife.

Second Doty Well in With 6000 Barrels

SANTA BARBARA, Jan. 12.—Doty No. 2, the fifth producing well of the Barnsdall and Rio Grande Oil Companies in the Elwood field, was brought in this afternoon with a flow of 6000 barrels the first hour and showing every tendency to build up a steadily increasing production. The well is producing from a depth of 3909 feet, having been cored into 169 feet of oil sand. The casing is set at 3386 feet.

Officials of the two companies gathered to see the well brought in included President R. A. Broomfield of the Barnsdall Company of California; L. M. Lockhart, vice-president of the Rio Grande; Charles S. Jones, vice-president of the Rio Grande, and Frank A. Morgan, geologist, who discovered the field.

Production from Doty No. 2 carries the total far above 20,000 barrels a day for the field. This well is located about 200 yards south, near the ocean, of Doty No. 1.

Call Police to Bag 'Possum

ALHAMBRA, Jan. 12.—An opossum, sleek, fat and a bit cocky, found a resting place last night on the porch railing of an undertaking establishment on Main street. Police were summoned and Officers Scobee and Kellogg arrived with the w. k. police dragnet in the form of a sack.

This time the dragnet worked. When the opossum had been driven from his perch into a corner, Officer Scobee advanced on his hands and knees and captured the opossum's tail. Kellogg held the sack and the rest was a mere matter of routine.

The Alhambra-San Gabriel Humane Society has the animal awaiting a call from its owner. Or from anyone who wants to adopt a nice big opossum for the children.

MASTER FORGERS IN JAIL AT ALHAMBRA

ALHAMBRA, Jan. 12.—Accused of having passed about fifty bad checks in amounts of $25 to $30 in Los Angeles county during the past few months, three men were arrested by Alhambra police today and are in the local jail awaiting arraignment. They are A. R. Dunham, 43 years of age, and Harry B. Connors, 45, both of 108 North Charlotte avenue, San Gabriel, and Ed Peterson, 37, of 726 Gladys avenue, Los Angeles.

The men were arrested after Dunham is said to have gone to the Security Bank of Alhambra and attempted to secure a draft. The cashier, Joseph Jones, became suspicious and summoned Lieutenant-Detective Joe Vigneau. Vigneau arrested Dunham who gave information which led to the arrest of the other two. Mrs. Dunham is also being held at the Alhambra jail for investigation.

BROTHERS FATALLY HURT IN WRECK

ONTARIO, Jan. 12.—Two men, thought to be brothers were dying this afternoon at San Bernardino County General Hospital from injuries received when their automobile was struck by a fast Union Pacific passenger train at Archibald avenue.

Cleo Baltierra, said to be an employee on a Chino ranch, was nearly dead when rushed to San Bernardino in a Draper Company ambulance.

He suffered a compound fracture of the skull and internal injuries. His brother received an injury of the back, which is believed broken. He is in a critical condition.

Council Acted in Bad Faith, Says Speaker

GLENDALE, Jan. 12.—Accusations that the Los Angeles City Council acted in bad faith in seeking to induce property owners on the proposed route for the extension of Glenoaks Boulevard to consent to a change of the line originally approved for the highway were made by C. C. Richards, secretary of the Allied Glenoaks Improvement Association, in an address before the Greater Northwest Improvement Association here last night.

Richards said that after deeds for the right of way had been given and had been reported, in good faith, representatives of the Los Angeles City Council had sought to persuade them to deed easements for the boulevard extension at some distance from those originally granted.

He charged that the Los Angeles city authorities had sought to block the plans for the extension of the boulevard after the county had spent thousands of dollars in securing rights of way and in surveys to map out the best route to carry the boulevard over the mountains north of San Fernando Valley, at a point east of Newhall tunnel. The Greater Northwest Improvement Association adopted a resolution to be addressed to the Los Angeles City Council, protesting against any plan to change the route as already defined.

SCHOOL ENTERTAINS HONOR SOCIETY

GARDENA, Jan. 12.—Members of the Athenian Scholarship Society for this district were the guests of the local high school at the quarterly meeting of the society last night. A dinner served in the school cafeteria at 6 o'clock was followed by a program presided over by Harold Black, president of the local chapter, in which a one-act play formed a part. The society is made up of students who have made A and B grades and junior and senior high schools of Long Beach, Lomita, San Pedro, Wilmington, Torrance, Compton, Redondo Beach, Venice, Huntington Park and Gardena are included in this federation district. Officers of the local chapter are Harry Black, president; Estella Shug, vice-president; Yacko Kuramato, secretary, and treasurer. Mrs. Gertrude Fairbanks is adviser.

SEWAGE PLANT BASIS OF SUIT

VENTURA, Jan. 12.—Charging that the air in the vicinity of their property is contaminated with flies and that the once wholesome and health giving stream which flows through the city of Ojai and their property has been made unhealthful and dangerous because of the sewage plant operated there by the city of Ojai, Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Hobson, Mr. and Mrs. Harold Chase, Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Cook, Mr. and Mrs. Williams, Dr. and Mrs. B. L. Saeger and Hannah Watts and the First Trust and Savings Bank of Pasadena have filed suit against the city to have the nuisance abated

CAMARILLO ESCAPES SERIOUS INJURY

VENTURA, Jan. 12.—Adolfo Camarillo, long-time president of the Ventura County Fair Association, narrowly escaped serious injury or death when his sedan collided with the Knob Hill tow car near Camarillo and was thrown against an oil tank truck and into a ditch. The two cars caught fire and both it and the Camarillo sedan were badly damaged. None of the occupants of the cars was seriously injured, however. Fire extinguishers brought from passing tank trucks extinguished the blaze which had started under the tow car.

NEW YORK IMPRESSED BY RECTOR

Ontario Divine is Invited to Return for Second Engagement

ONTARIO, Jan. 12.—There aren't many ministers in the United States whose congregation extends from coast to coast.

Members of the congregation of Christ Episcopal Church, Ontario, are confident their rector, Rev. Father Richard H. Gushee, is the only preacher on the continent who has a flock on the Pacific Coast and another on the Atlantic.

Four months ago Father Gushee was invited to New York to preach in Trinity Church at the head of Wall street, with a congregation made up of financial giants. The sermon created such a sensation that they want Rev. Gushee to return. They have secured his promise to cross the continent next month just to talk to the fashionable congregation for ninety minutes.

Rev. Dr. Stetson, rector of the church, issued the invitation to Rev. Gushee to talk for eighteen minutes on five successive days at the mid-day services, making a total of ninety minutes of preaching.

The New York church will pay all of Father Gushee's expenses, including his entertainment in New York, and in addition have promised to give him a substantial check for his services. Father Gushee has been asked to preach a sermon at St. James's Church in New York, also.

Murder Trial Opens Monday

SANTA ANA, Jan. 12. — Battle lines were drawn here today as prosecution and defense marshalled their forces for what is expected to be one of the bitterest murder trials ever conducted in the local Superior Court, set for Monday at 9:30 a.m. when J. W. Montgomery, California Gun Club watchman, will face a jury in Judge E. J. Marks's court, charged with the killing of two duck hunters, John D. Callicot and Orlie R. Mahon of Sunset Beach.

OFFICERS CAPTURE ESCAPED CONVICT

REDLANDS, Jan. 12.—Albert Martinez, wanted by Sheriff Walter Shay as an escape from the county road camp, a felony, failed to get away, for Officers W. H. Morrison, Dan Tripp and Hildreth Thomas of the Redlands police force surrounded his home on Third street today and arrested him.

Martinez was hidden and his relatives told the officers that he was not there. He escaped from the road camp two days ago and the police here had a tip that he had returned home.

They refused to take the word of his family and made a search. Finally Officer Tripp located him under a bed in a dark bedroom rolled up in some blankets. He was returned to the County Jail and will probably be sent to San Quentin, it is said. He was arrested and convicted here of indecent exposure.

VAN NUYS DE MOLAYS SEAT NEW OFFICERS

VAN NUYS, Jan. 12.—Lyle Brown acted as installing officer of the new De Molay officers in the local Masonic lodge rooms. Clyde Brandenberger, well-known Van Nuys youth, was seated as master councilor and Edwin Sutton as junior. Talks were made by Rev. David Farquharson, B. R. Holloway, Hugh C. Daugherty and T. E. Cleland. Eight past master councilors were at the ceremonies, including Brown, Kenneth and Wayne McCartney Draper Webb, Douglas Kelsey, Morton Colgrove, George Cowdrey and Stewart Albert. More than 150 Masons and De Molay members witnessed the installation.

POLICE PROTECT PIGEONS

HERMOSA BEACH, Jan. 12.—Persons found molesting pigeons which make their nests under the municipal pier will be summarily dealt with, according to notices issued by Chief of Police Eddie Messenger today, following the report that boys have been trapping the birds and destroying all nests within reach. The birds have been inhabiting the pier for years and attract many visitors.

AUXILIARY INSTALLS HEADS

Wives of Spanish War Soldiers Hold Open Meeting in Pasadena

PASADENA, Jan. 12.—More than 400 Spanish-American War veterans and their wives attended the installation of officers of Helen Gould Auxiliary No. 6 in Memorial Hall last night.

The local American Legion Drum Corps attended the meeting and played several numbers.

White, military instructor at Pasadena Junior College, and Dr. H. L. Trafford, past commander of Hollywood Camp, who acted as men's installing officer.

The flag parade and ceremonial preceding the installation were arranged by Mrs. Anna C. Jesmir, national patriotic instructor of Spanish War Veteran Auxiliaries, assisted by Mrs. Ann Anderson, retiring president of Helen Gould Auxiliary, and Mrs. Georgiana Cook, women's installing officer.

Officers who will serve for this year include: President, Mrs. Leona Kendall; senior vice-president, Mrs. Emma Elliott; junior vice-president, Mrs. Blanch Kingsbury; chaplain, Mrs. Amelia Miller; secretary, Estella Packard; treasurer, Mrs. Julia Swanstrom; patriotic instructor, Mrs. Nellie Hill; historian, Mrs. Bertha Scott; conductor, Mrs. Mildred Humphries; assistant conductor, Mrs. Margaret Jeffs; guard, Mrs. Alida Bleil; assistant guard, Mrs. Gertrude Hughes; musician, Mrs. Ione Elliott; color bearers, Mrs. Ada Williams, Mrs. Marion Barker, Mrs. Marie Hadley and Mrs. Ann Anderson.

MAKE GRAPES PAY DIVIDENDS

Growers Hold Meet at Ontario

Hear Growers' Problems Analyzed

Protection of Industry State Problem

ONTARIO, Jan. 12.—[illegible] 1929 grape industry is going to pay dividends if it is within human power to make it, and members of the California Vineyardists' Association are confident the new grape shippers' clearinghouse agreement will bring it back to the place it belongs, at the head of the list because of the tremendous betterment that has been made in California grapes.

Plans for carrying out both agreements in the sixteenth which embraces most of the California vineyards, were completed at a meeting of the district advisory committee of the Ontario today, with [illegible] Conn, managing director of the C.V.A., analyzing the [illegible]

Campaign to strengthen the California Vineyardists' Association and Southern California Fruit Exchange. The first thing needed is to put the industry on solid footing. Once that is to secure full control of the industry at the source.

The association must [illegible] on eastern transportation rates, arrangements to provide for divided sales and the spreading of chasing power. Before this is all done grower control must be secured.

Original markets for [illegible] are raisins and [illegible] grapes. The third channel for outlet of California grapes must be developed. This channel is grape by-products. A concentrated effort is to be made to create additional channels for grape by-products, and to bring greater use of the channels already available.

A more thorough understanding must be reached between producer and association as to the channels the grape may be used in by-product manufacture, it was indicated. California's grape industry will yield plentiful returns when it is developed into an all-year industry, according to [illegible] greater by-product manufacture this can be brought about.

Conn said, we must not only [illegible] up at least 90 per cent of the tonnage of California juice but business interests must back up this greatest of California industries, if for none other than selfish reasons involved in its purchasing power. Farmers must pay taxes for concrete roads, a heavy freight bill, buy a large volume of lumber and [illegible] whenever the buying power of the grower is destroyed, every industry reacts accordingly. This is a fine job.

The eastern buyer who comes to California fields with [illegible] to buy California grapes must get the impression that he will get [illegible] for nothing and fail to get it, growers, will find that California growers are well protected by the "Dealers' Act," which [illegible] Sacramento to get a bond that assures protection to the [illegible] try.

Ontario district growers and [illegible] pers present at the meeting [illegible] up both agreements at this meeting.

Avert Trouble at Jockey Club

SAN DIEGO, Jan. 12.—[illegible] that threatened to end the [illegible] race meeting at the Tia Juana [illegible] today was averted this afternoon when officers of the Tia Juana Jockey Club agreed to permit members of the Thoroughbred Horsemen's Association to buy feed wherever they please. The horsemen agreed to make entries for tomorrow's program following the decision.

The agreement means that horsemen obtain their feed in permission to buy hay as they [illegible] market and also entitles [illegible] ment to good standing at the track. Hay was formerly purchased exclusively to horsemen [illegible] Coffroth Hill by the firm of [illegible] Irwin and the price was [illegible] Horsemen have been [illegible] for several weeks about the [illegible] and quality of the hay [illegible]

DELAY IN PAVING IN LAUREL CANYON

NORTH HOLLYWOOD, Jan. 12.—The paving of Laurel Canyon [illegible] one of the most used between the San Fernando Valley and [illegible] through the Santa Monica Mountain range, has been completed [illegible] a week, between Pacific Coast [illegible] in the valley and Ludlow [illegible] tain, in order to obtain a [illegible] contribution from the County Supervisors. It is stated that [illegible] cent of the paving, which is to [illegible] forty feet wide, will be borne by the city and county, [illegible] owners will bear the remainder of costs.

SUBMIT SEWER PLAN

HARBOR CITY, Jan. 12.—[illegible] for a lateral sewer system to serve the entire district, as a part of the metropolitan sewer district, will be submitted to the City Council at its next meeting, following an favorable report of the Health and Sanitation Committee upon the petition filed by property owners asking the immediate consideration of the project. Several miles of laterals and mains are included in the improvement plans.

Travel Warned to Avoid Using Road in Canyon

The upper road into San Gabriel Canyon is not yet completed and the Los Angeles County Road Department, as well as the contractors, request through the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California, that travel keep off this highway as much as possible. George Jones, county road commissioner, makes that request of motorists and states that travel may use the lower road without difficulty.

Since preliminary work has begun and the contract let for the huge $25,000,000 San Gabriel dam, much interest has been developed in the San Gabriel Canyon and traffic is interfering with the construction.

A contract has been awarded for the paving of Highland avenue from Melrose avenue to Wilshire Boulevard, reports the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California.

BAY CITY PREPARES FOR SHOW

Automobile Offerings of Factories for 1929 to be on Display This Month

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 12. (Exclusive)—Special exhibits costing thousands of dollars are being prepared for the thirteenth annual Automobile Show which will hold the spotlight at the Civic Auditorium from the 26th inst. to the night of February 2.

Now that San Francisco's motor classic has taken a definite place as a major national trade exhibit, the manufacturers are co-operating more freely this year than ever before. Since the local show will be held at the same time as Chicago's, the producers are making duplicate exhibits for the far-western event.

Automobiles will not be the only attractions at the show. There will be the most complete display of commercial transportation ever seen in the West. The truck manufacturers, whose field has broadened in recent years, are preparing exhibits that will show every type of vehicle used in industry and commerce, from the swanky little light delivery car to the behemoth steed of steel that will handle ten tons. Airplanes also will be displayed.

DECISION FAVORS PEDESTRIAN

Los Angeles motorists should be interested in a decision handed down by the United States Court of Appeals, relating to the rights of pedestrians at signal-controlled intersections, according to W. L. Brent, president of the Traffic Commission.

"Under this decision," Mr. Bent said, "motorists are held responsible for the safety of pedestrians who are caught in the street through the changing of signals.

"In most cases here, the interval between the stop and go signals is sufficient to permit the pedestrian to reach the other side of the street before approaching machines reach the crosswalk, but in some situations, where the streets are particularly wide, or the pedestrian is unable to move quickly, a very serious hazard is created."

The Appellate Court decision included the following: "When a pedestrian steps from a curb to cross the street, having a green signal with him, he does so by way of invitation and he cannot be charged with contributory negligence if the signal switches when he is in the street. Caught in this position, the obligation rests upon the motorist not only to observe the situation, but to wait until the crossing is clear.

"Many automobile drivers seem to imagine that with a shift in the signal they are given the clear right of way against intersecting traffic. In this belief they recklessly start their machines regardless of persons who are already on the intersection. It is the duty of drivers to exercise greater vigilance and care under such circumstances, and not only have their machines under control, but to stop and wait until pedestrians have had an opportunity to clear the crossing. Failure to observe these precautions constitutes negligence on the part of the driver which, in case of accident, is chargable to him."

WHERE TO GO? THE DESERT

Route by Salton Sea, Imperial, Yuma and to Phoenix Beckons to Motorist

BY AL PARMENTER

Going somewhere but don't know where?

This is the desert season, go there. And if you have no idea how long you want to spend just start and when you have enough turn back. The desert is within reach for a trip of one day or life.

One of the available trips is that to the Coloradoo Desert and if you wish to extend the trip into several days the drive can be extended on through the Imperial Valley through Yuma and even on to Phoenix.

This trip has been logged for The Times auto section by the Greer-Robbins Company, distributors of Hupmobiles.

FROM MOJAVE'S EDGE

The Colorado Desert takes up its reign where the Mojave to the north leaves off. It stretches from the mesa land east of Redlands eastward to the Salt River Valley in Arizona. It extends south to the Imperial Valley. Some of the spots which will more easily identify it to the motorist are Palm Springs, Twenty Nine Palms, Indio, the Salton Sea, Palm Canyon. Further east in Arizona this desert land is bisected by the Colorado River.

The route to and through this area is the all-year highway which leads from the Atlantic to Pacific, the all-year snow free route.

From Los Angeles the route is to Redlands, 67 miles; Banning, 89

CONGRESS CONSIDERS ROAD WORK

Federal-Aid Construction Program Expansion and Continuation Sought

Motorists of California are deeply interested in the national legislative program of the present session of Congress, according to the Automobile Club of Southern California. Outstanding in motordom's program are appropriations for building roads through the nontaxable areas in the public land States.

It is pointed out that 40 per cent of the area of California, or 62,440 square miles, are public lands and as such not taxable by the State.

What motorists of the West are hoping for is outlined in the following highlights of the program they propose:

"Continuation of Federal Aid on an undiminished scale; development of a government plan for a new and expanded system of highways to be launched as soon as the present Federal Aid system is completed; maintenance of the free principle in road-building as against privately owned highways sponsored in some circles; against exploitation by privately owned toll bridges which do not contain provisions for later acquirement by the State; more lib-

GOLDEN STATE SHARE LARGE

California Given $2,495,345 for Twelve Months

Federal Aid Year to Start in Coming July

Texas Receives Largest Sum Totaling $4,531,126

Federal aid in highways for the fiscal year beginning July 11, next, will amount to $73,125,000, according to announcement reaching the Automobile Club of Southern California from the United States Department of Agriculture. This will be apportioned among the 48 States of the Union and the Territory of Hawaii.

Contrary to the general belief, the States of the East receive Federal aid for their roads in proportion to those of the West. California will receive the largest sum of any western State with $2,495,345. It ranks sixth among all the States in amount received.

TEXAS FUND LARGE

The largest sum will go to a southern State, Texas, which will receive $4,531,162. The second largest apportionment will go to New York State, which will receive $3,617,748. The third largest, $3,325,854, also goes to an eastern State as this the amount allowed to Pennsylvania. The Hawaiian Islands will receive $365,625 for their roads from the United States government.

The apportionments have been authorized by Congress for continuing the Federal aid program, and the funds will be expended according to the same provisions that have governed past expenditures. In general the States pay half the cost of Federal aid construction, but Federal aid funds are available only for routes on the Federal aid system, which includes the main highways of the nation.

Preparations Made for Work on Boulevard

CHATSWORTH, Jan. 12. (Exclusive)—Completion of surveys and the location of rights of way for the Valley Circle Boulevard skirting the western end of Chatsworth Lake and San Fernando Valley, and Glover's Lakeside Park have been made and plans for the improvement are about finished, according to report of L. O. Turner, district city engineer. W. W. Orcutt, oil magnate, has agreed to deed a right of way along Justice street. This will eliminate a bad curve in the boulevard.

This unit of the Valley Circle Boulevard will run from Santa Ana avenue, a paved street, west along Justice street, through Lakeside Park, circling the western and northern ends of Chatsworth Lake and traversing the Oakwood Cemetery properties to connect with Santa Susana avenue.

The improvement has been ordered by the Los Angeles City Council, following petitions from property owners and engineers have been at work on the surveys and rights-of-way locations for several months.

San Gorgonio, Cajon Passes to be Improved

REDLANDS, Jan. 12. (Exclusive) In an effort to put two entrances to Southern California in the best of condition for transcontinental travel, the Cajon Pass north of San Bernardino and San Gorgonio Pass east of Redlands, the State Highway Department is planning work in both places.

The San Gorgonio Pass road which was widened as far as Whitewater last year will be widened farther east this year and eventually to Indio. Many accidents on the heavily traveled road were due to its being narrow, it was stated.

Announcement has also been made that the famous "blue cut" in the Cajon Pass road is to be widened. The narrowest portion of the road has been widened and road crews are now working on curves and turns in the road. The old road was but fifteen feet wide in some places and is being widened to twenty feet and even thirty feet in places.

Your Dollar buys more with CHRYSLER

Chrysler makes it plain, to the eye, that the price of a Chrysler buys vastly more than it does elsewhere.

You never more brilliantly exemplified than in Chrysler cars—the Chrysler "65" models. They are more emphatically stamped with smartness and style.

They are more dashing in every line and little detail of performance.

They are richer than anything in their class ever has been—longer, roomier bodies with equipment and metal-ware of exclusive Chrysler pattern.

In short, from every angle, they point for comparison with cars far, far above them in price—cars costing hundreds, yes, even a thousand dollars more.

PEERLESS SHOWS NEW LINE EIGHT

Model Introduced at Annual New York Auto Exhibit

Among the new models exhibited this year at the New York Automobile Show is a new straight eight produced by the Peerless Motor Car Corporation, according to Harry A. Lord, president of the Lord Motor Car Company, Peerless dealer.

The car did not come as a complete surprise for it was known in automotive circles that Peerless engineers had been working on such an automobile for the last year, he stated.

"According to information that has come from the factory, the new Peerless straight eight is of very high quality and has a wheelbase of 135 inches," explained Mr. Lord. "Preliminary tests have indicated that the engine is the most powerful that has ever been built by the Peerless company. It is of the most advanced type and is outstanding because of its power, smoothness and silent operation."

prices, also a new bigger president eight.

The Olds Motor Works has announced price reductions on all Oldsmobile models. These reductions are quite liberal, varying from $50 to $70. The Willys-Knight Overland Company announces a price reduction. Its program calls for an output of 130,000 cars during the first quarter of 1929 as compared with less than 77,000 for the corresponding period of 1928.

Increased production at the Ford plant continues, the daily output now having passed the 6500 mark. Since the recent announcement that 30,000 men would be added to the pay rolls, an army of job-seekers has daily appeared in a effort to obtain work. Only a few hundred each day have been taken on, but this method will continue until the desired quota is reached. Ford now employs nearly 150,000 in the Detroit area, which is about one-fifth of the total employment of the entire State of Michigan.

FINANCING ARRANGED

E. A. Duncan, chairman of the board of the Commercial Credit Company, announces the closing of an exclusive long-term contract with the Chrysler Corporation for financing retail sales by dealers of Dodge Brothers passenger cars and trucks throughout the United States and Canada and foreign countries.

The contract also covers the products of the Chrysler Corporation, which will have full control over all plans and rates to be offered for the financing of retail sales of all Chrysler interests.

Trucks, busses and motor coaches built by Dodge Brothers under the name of Graham Brothers, are to be known in the future as Dodge Brothers trucks. The entire line will take the name of the makers immediately. They include forty-two types of truck chassis with wheelbases ranging from 110 to 185 inches.

The decline in employment which has been experienced weekly since the latter part of October, was halted last week with a substantial increase of 24,018 over the previous week. The total now stands at 368,601, which is 68,745 greater than for the corresponding period of one year ago.

Interest in the automobile market is sure to be stimulated by the annual shows and will result in a flood of orders for immediate delivery. This, too, will have good effect on the used-car market which will work to the financial advantage of those motorists who will be satisfied with a first-class used car.

A new four-passenger taxicab of the Ford Motor Company make was this week announced, on a Ford model A chassis, the body lines being strikingly different from the present familiar taxicab designs.

The driver's seat is fully inclosed, being separated from the passenger compartment by a metal and glass partition. The vehicle is said to be exceedingly economical to operate, its low cost per mile being one of its strongest factors. It is a four-cylinder car with twenty-five horsepower on a 103½-inch wheelbase.

Tire Retreading Company Moves

Two events are being celebrated by the Pacific Tire and Vulcanizing Company this week. One is the close of six successful years in the same business location and the other is the removal of their shop to new quarters in order to give more room for sales and service.

Six years ago, this firm was founded by two brothers, Joseph and Joshua Farber. They started with a daily production of fifteen or twenty retread tires and today have grown to a production of over 100 tires a day.

This growth is attributed, in part, to the careful selection of castings for retreading, and the absolute guarantee against defects in workmanship for the life of the tire.

eral application of the Federal aid principle in the case of the public-land States of the West; larger Federal appropriations for the construction of forest and park roads, the development of which has lamentably failed to keep pace with the road programs of States in which these recreational areas are located.

"Of prime importance is the continuation of the fight to secure passage of the Colton-Oddie bill to provide Federal aid funds for building roads through the nontaxable, government-owned lands of the West.

"Senator Trasker L. Oddie (Republican, Nevada) and Representative Don B. Colton (Republican, Utah) were the co-authors of this bill, which was passed at the last session of Congress and vetoed by the President. The Senate later overrode the veto, but the House failed to sustain its action. As drafted originally, the measure would provide $3,500,000 for each of three years. It was reintroduced at the present session of Congress and every effort will be made to secure its passage."

SIMPLIFICATION IN OILING WOULD BE AID

"Eighty per cent of all engine troubles would be eliminated if lubricating your motor were as simple a trick as filling the gas tank," says Dr. R. McBryde of the McBryde Lubricating Service of this city. Motor troubles persist simply because three fundamental principles of automotive lubrication are so generally misunderstood by motorists.

"In the first place," McBryde asserts, "there is the quality of oil to be considered. The second principle of correct lubrication is the application of the right grade for the motor to be lubricated. Then it must be applied and used correctly."

NEW FRANKLIN LINE OUT

Marked by more beauty, luxury, roominess and increased power, a complete new line of Franklin six air-cooled motor cars on three chassis has just been introduced here, announces Ralph Hamlin, president of Franklin Motors, Inc., Franklin distributor.

The line embraces a comprehensive selection of body types and colors, selling at prices on some types as much as $600 less than former prices of corresponding models, he stated.

"In performance the new Franklin introduces a new conception of smooth, powerful, fast, luxurious motoring described as the 'airplane feel.' The cars are entirely new in appearance and their fleetness is exemplified by proportion, line and style innovations," stated Mr. Hamlin. "One noteworthy feature is the silent second gear.

"Among outstanding features are more powerful air-cooled motors, increased size and roominess, quieter operation, 100 per cent positive lubrication; silent, quiet-shifting transmission; hydraulically controlled spring action and luxurious niceties.

THREE MODELS

"There are three models, the 130, 135 and 137 with wheelbases respectively of 120, 125 and 133 inches. The tread has been widened to fifty-eight inches on all models which adds to roominess, riding comfort, safety and road stability.

"Power plants are built in two sizes and numerous features fundamental in Franklin design have been retained. These are valve-in-head cylinders, case-hardened seven bearing counter-balanced crankshaft, aluminum pistons and duralumin connecting rods, recirculating force-feed lubrication, forced draft crankcase ventilation and double flywheel construction. Valves are now automatically lubricated.

"Models 135 and 137 have the larger motor with three and one-half-inch bore and four and three-quarter-inch stroke, giving piston displacement of 274 cubic inches. The model 130 power plant has three and one-quarter-inch bore, four and three-quarter-inch stroke and 236 cubic inches piston displacement. The power increases over former models range up to 20 per cent.

"Carburetors are built specially for Franklin by Stromberg. The carburetion group also embraces a fuel transformer, electric fuemer, air cleaner and gasoline filter. Exhaust gases are used in the fuel transformer to supply heat that vaporizes heavy ends of the mixture. The fuemer replaces an electric primer. Air cleaner, gasoline strainer and fuel pump are used.

"Following airplane engineering practice, Franklin uses steel-backed bearings for greater strength, longer wear and more permanent adjustment. Lubrication is by means of a metered pump gear.

"A device to assist good carburetion and keep the best operating temperature is the thermostatically controlled grille shutter on models 135 and 137.

"The silent transmission on models 135 and 137 is cited as one of the most advanced steps to provide quiet, smooth, powerful and luxurious travel. The system employs internal gears on direct drive and second speed, the latter being capable of developing as high as fifty miles an hour without noticeable gear noise. Shifting is silent regardless of speed.

"Franklin uses hydraulic, internal expanding four-wheel brakes with aluminum shoes that dissipate heat. They operate with slight toe pressure. The hand brake is on a drum on the drive line back of the transmission.

SAFETY GLASS

"The flexible Franklin frame is continued. Numerous improvements have been made in the body which add beauty and distinction. The roof is lower, the belt higher, with bodies longer and wider. A new treatment of window reveals is brought about by broadening the step panels and using a radius at the corners. Front pillars are of the clear vision, narrow corner type. Front doors now hinge on the front pillars and rear doors open toward the back. On models 135 and 137 perpendicular louvres give a new note to the hood. The radiator has a higher, narrower appearance. A new style motif is seen in the air-wing fenders.

"A distinguishing mark is the Ilco-Ryan headlamps of large diameter on models 135 and 137. New parking lights are mounted on the front fenders which also show width to oncoming drivers. Nonshatter glass is used in windshields and limousine partitions."

LITTLE VISITED SPOT

In search of the seldom publicized and, in the case of Belmont, seldom visited old camps of South Central and Central Nevada, a Nash advanced six "400" sedan was sent on a scouting tour by the Nash-Breyer Motor Company, Nash distributors for Southern California and Southern Nevada, which resulted in 1430 miles of travel in the course of four days.

From Los Angeles the route was through Owens Valley over Montgomery Pass at an elevation of 7150 feet to Tonopah via the snow-covered Columbus Marsh. From Tonopah, 6033 feet, the Midland Trail was followed six miles out of town, then the left - hand road north to Manhattan was traversed, the travelers pausing in the latter town (itself a famous producer among mining camps early in the present century) for dinner, though forced to continue on for eighteen miles to Round Mountain to secure overnight accommodations.

Next morning the route to Manhattan was retraced to secure breakfast, and then an off-shoot of eighteen miles followed to lonely Belmont, once the center of activity, including county government, of Nye county, being its second county seat, Ione, forty-five miles to the northwest in an airline, having been the seat of Nye county affairs from 1864 to 1867. With the rapid rise of Tonopah early in the present century Belmont, then sadly declining, was forced to relinquish the honor. Incidentally, Nye county today boasts an area of 18,294 square miles, being the third largest county in the United States in point of area, exceeded only by San Bernardino county in California and Coconino county in Arizona. However, at the time of its formation, Nye county embraced well over 30,000 square miles, being very nearly as large as the entire State of Indiana.

SILVER-LEAD DISTRICT

Belmont, the scene of a rich silver-lead strike in 1865, was first settled in that year by Antonio Bosques, and though its permanent population, according to United States Census Bureau figures, never exceeded 300 persons at any census-taking time (284 in 1880,) it has been credited with a floating population up to 5000 persons during the first ten years of its existence. Its situation at an altitude of 7500 feet is scenic, and, tucked away in the hills at the head of Ralston Valley as it is, well off the beaten track of modern motor travel, Belmont is a page from the brightest chapter in the history of Nevada—the period between 1860 and 1870. Up to the completion of the Central Pacific Railroad in 1869, good pine lumber cost $300 per 1000 feet in Belmont, one reason, no doubt, why brick made in the vicinity was quite popular.

From Belmont the Nash "400" travelers returned to Manhattan, thence journeyed northward through Round Mountain and up the vast Big Smoky Valley to Austin on the Lincoln highway, where the night was spent, Austin itself being a famous mining camp of the past and the present, now boasting a thousand or so residents. From Austin, the return was made by traveling eastward through Eureka to Ely, the copper center, through Pioche, Caliente and Alamo to Moapa and Glendale (the latter but a way-point on the Arrowhead Trail) and into Las Vegas and home.

Distributors Back From Trip

P. V. marshall and F. W. Clampett of the firm of Marshall & Clampett, distributor of Stutz motor cars, have arived home from the East, where they attended a gathering of distributors and leading Stutz dealers at the factory at Indianapolis, Ind.

Both are enthusiastic over the outlook for 1929 business and declared that factory executives expressed the belief that this year will eclipse all others in the demand for motor cars of the luxury and high grade types.

"Stutz is planning great things for this year," said Mr. Clampett. "Reports they have received from all over the country and abroad indicate a heavy demand for Stutz cars and preparations have been made for the largest production schedules the company has ever adopted.

"We were given demonstration of the 1929 line and found the cars to be even more attractive in appearance and giving higher class performance than advance information had indicated. These cars have just been shown for the first time at the New York automobile show and it will require a little time before production gets under way."

Cactus Forest Treat Offered by Arizona

FLORENCE (Ariz.) Jan. 12. (Exclusive)—One of the greatest of Arizona's sights, yet one little known, is a cactus forest that stretches for tihrty miles east and southeast of this city, penetrated by the main highway to Tucson. For much of the way the growth is dense, with long reaches of the brilliant cholla, an opuntia that bears the worst thorns of all its tribe.

The Yucca and its many relations extends away as far as the eye may reach, while there are square miles of prickly pear, of various classifications in the botanical world, all with marvelous blossoming in early summer. Enduring for months are the scarlet blossoms of the ocatillo, "coachman's whip," one of the freaks of the desert. Predominant, however, is the lord of the Arizona plains, the saguaro, the Cereus giganteus, deepest of green, whatever the weather, with its spines turning to pink as they absorb the moisture of the infrequent rains.

Near Florence, happily hidden from the casual and destructive tourist, are a number of fine specimens of the cruciform saguaro, bearing the cross aloft in a manner that must have been startling to the early and impressionable missionaries. In the lower reaches, the terrain bears groves of the feather-leafed mesquite, of the ironwood and of the palo verde, the last three in summer a giant bouquet of vivid yellow, most beautiful to behold.

VALLEY BOULEVARD AT POMONA TO BE PAVED

A section of 2.5 miles on the Valley Boulevard between Pomona and Ontario is scheduled for paving with cement concrete, the work to commence within the next two weeks, according to the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California.

MARMON

UNDER THE DIRECTION OF G. M. WILLIAMS

A reputation of twenty-six years in a car which thousands can now afford to own

You might still hear it said, "No, we didn't look at the Marmon; we couldn't possibly afford it"—so indelibly is Marmon stamped in the public mind as a builder of higher priced cars.

Now there is a Marmon as low as $1465—another which is priced slightly under $2000.

These new Marmons were made possible by the activities of the new and aggressive Marmon organization which recognized that there is a vast market existing for cars of the highest distinction at moderate cost.

These cars have about them an individuality not to be found in the usual "mass production" makes and are straight-eights, rather than sixes. Try a Marmon and see how much a moderate amount of money can really buy.

G. M. Williams, President Marmon Motor Car Company, under whose direction the opportunities of Marmon ownership have been extended to a vast new clientele

FIRST OF NEW LINE DELIVERED

Aviation Company Official Buys Car

The first of the new 1929 series Hudsons was delivered to A. R. Borne, president of California Airways, Inc.

THE first of the new 1929 series Hudsons to be delivered by the Walter M. Murphy Motors Company, Hudson and Essex distributors for Southern California went to a man that certainly should know motors, A. R. Borne, president of California Airways, Inc., with their flying field at 5400 Telegraph Road.

Mr. Borne told the Murphy Company that he had examined seven other makes of cars and this Hudson, in appearance and in performance was the only one that satisfied him completely. He judged the motor from an experience with motors over a period of eighteen years flying.

"Out here at California Airways," said Mr. Borne, "we have the greatest possible efficiency in the air and we want to be assured of the same in our ground travel. I took demonstration in seven other cars before buying my Hudson and the Hudson was the only car that completely satisfied me. It comes nearer to the sensation of flying than any other car I have ever driven."

DESERT BECKONS TO MOTORISTS

miles; Indio, 137 miles; El Centro, 219 miles; Yuma, 276 miles; Gila Bend, 393 miles; Phoenix, 470 miles. Mileages are approximate from Los Angeles to the point named.

Alternate routes are available but they cut out parts of the route that are attractive. For example, Yuma may be reached by way of San Diego, then to Imperial Valley, but this will eliminate the ride by the Salton Sea.

DESERT FLOWERS SOON

The desert flowers were first beginning to bloom last week when the Hupmobile trip to Phoenix was made. The ocotilla, though not blooming, was sending out its long shoots—six or eight feet—which will be soon capped by one of the most delicately colored desert flowers. The Colorado Desert is world famous in its flowering season.

From the city to Arizona the Hupmobile traveled over continuous paving, including that once dreaded stretch over the sand dunes near Yuma which were traversed over an old narrow plank road. This plank road has been history for two years now and the paving has successfully survived the test of four windy seasons, each spring and fall. Now the motorist speeds along the very crest of the highest dunes with always an expanse of beautiful though waste country before him. It is the moving-picture industry's first substitute for the Sahara dunes.

Reaching Yuma the paving has been extended another five miles out of that city to the graveled highway, a comfortable traveling road. Arizona has been working on an extensive road improvement program on this route. Near Wellton a viaduct over the railroad has been completed, another is near completion, between Hassayampa and the Gillespie Dam. Oiled paving is nearly ready to be opened to traffic. At the dam a new bridge was opened to traffic last summer. This is where autos were forced to cross the river via the apron of the dam, driving through water if it was not too high, when the motorist could, if he chose, be hauled through the current rushing over the apron by a tractor.

MORE PAVING TO DO

Gila Bend lies about 120 miles east of Yuma. The sixty-five miles of this nearest Gila Bend is soon to be oil paved.

This improvement program is carried on similarly on the route east of Phoenix.

What is to be seen on such a trip? The desert flowers in their season have been mentioned. The cement mountain at Colton. The Salton Sea and the marks made by the flooding waters on the mountain sides when the sea was created but a few years ago. The renowned agricultural district, Imperial Valley. The sand dunes. Yuma, the old fort and the Indian school, the Indians. The Colorado River. Salt River Valley, another Imperial, enriched by the series of dams built near Phoenix. There are more but the foregoing gives an idea.

Coupe Models of Collapsible Type Offered

Collapsible coupes of new and original design have been added by the Marmon Motor Car Company to its two lines of straight eights, the new series Marmon 68 and the new series Marmon 78, according to Bill Wright, wholesale sales manager of Felton Motor Company, Marmon distributors.

The new series 68 collapsible has a wheelbase of 114 inches and the series 78 has a wheelbase of 120 inches.

"The two new collapsible coupes are stream-lined with the characteristic Marmon appearance of lowness that has proved so popular this year," Wright says. "An entirely new effect has been obtained in the design of the top with a complete departure from the inharmonious lines which are usually found in models of this type. Symmetry of line has been obtained, whether the top is raised or lowered, and in either position the collapsible top blends into the body design in a most attractive manner.

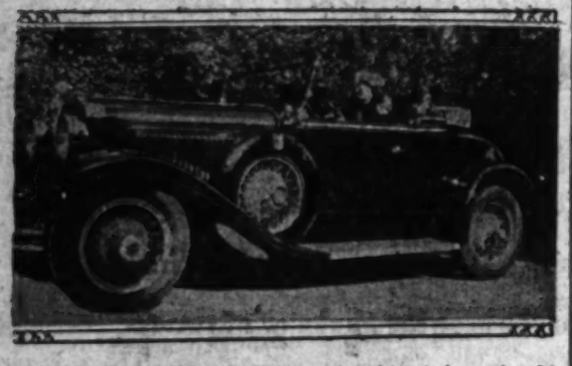
Starting Easy With Lubricator

"Easier starting for cold motors is one of the accomplishments of the new improved Jay Lubricator," according to J. N. Joerger, head of the Jay Manufacturing Company.

"As soon as a motorist installs the lubricator, the first turn of the motor sprays a heavy vapor of special lubricating oil on the cylinder walls and rings, reaching all the top motor parts. Proper lubrication of these sluggish, top-motor parts puts them into double-quick action with the first step on the starter.

"By instantly lubricating the dry walls, the lubricator also reduces the need for choking which often causes scored cylinders, ring wear and thins the oil in the crank case."

First of New Sport Roadsters



The first of the new Dodge Senior six sport roadsters to be purchased in Los Angeles is owned by Miss Eva Burnett, manager of the Weber Apartments at 1938 Argyle avenue.

SPEED LIMIT REMOVAL REDUCES ACCIDENT INJURIES

A 22 per cent decrease in the number of people injured in automobile accidents has followed the operation of the new "no speed-limit law" in Michigan, according to unofficial reports quoted by the General Tire and Rubber Company at Akron.

The number of accidents which resulted in property damage but which did not involve pedestrians showed a decrease of 16 per cent.

Commenting on the report, A. H. Rude, head of A. H. Rude & Co., General tire distributors, said, "The success of the Michigan "no speed limit" experiment tends to show that the general speeding-up of traffic will eliminate accidents caused by traffic congestion. Today, with four-wheel brakes capable of stopping the most powerful car in a very short distance supplemented by skid-proof tires, the reason for low-speed limits has vanished.

"Good brakes, good tires and reasonable care are the factors which make for road safety. The careless speeder, of course, will always cause trouble, but he will be treated firmly, even under the no-limit rule. The Michigan law states 'No person shall drive any vehicle upon a highway at a speed greater than will permit him to bring it to a stop within the assured clear distance ahead.' Penalties for reckless driving are severe enough to discourage drivers who attempt to violate the spirit of the law."

SALES MARK FOR DAY SET

Seventy-eight new Buicks sold in one day! This is the midseason record set last week by the retail sales department of the Howard Automobile Company of Los Angeles. There have been bigger days at the time of introduction of new models, but the seventy-eight orders establish a new high mark for this period of the year and measure, according to Harold W. Tuttle, assistant general manager of the Howard organization here, the popularity increase of the new silver anniversary Buicks.

Guided by the experience gained from the already large fleet of Buicks in service, the Hertz Drv-Ur-Self Stations, Inc., of the Pacific Coast, placed an order for sixty-four new models, consisting of sedans, coupes and roadsters. These are being added to the rental service in this city to meet the public call for Buicks.

Neal Begley, president of Hertz Driv-Ur-Self Stations, Inc., of the Coast, in placing the order said that the increase in the number of Buicks was in keeping with the policy of giving the public what it wanted. As is known, the immense Hertz organization rents cars to the public and has become one of the important transportation factors.

"We must at all times provide our customers with reliable transportation," said President Begley. "Safety must be one of the first factors for we have many women driving our cars. The trips may be of some distance and when we send a customer out we have to do so with the certainty that the car will meet the varied driving demands.

"We have been increasing our Buicks through the last several years. If the public demand for Buicks was not increasing correspondingly this, of course, would not be necessary. But the customers of today are just as shrewd in selecting cars for their rent purposes as they are in making purchases. They not only want performance, stamina and safety, but they are attracted by style as well. Buicks seem to meet these requirements in such satisfactory manner that we have been adding Buicks in large numbers to our service, not only in Los Angeles, but at all Pacific Coast points as well."

It is pointed out by Assistant General Manager Tuttle of the Howard Automobile Company of Los Angeles that a rigid check is kept on every car in the Hertz service. Cost of maintenance is one of the items. Every day that a car is out of service because of mechanical attention a certain charge is made against that automobile.

"The Hertz organization must operate for profits," said Tuttle. "The cars that require the least mechanical attention and therefore are in service the most continuously provide the best returns on the investment. That applies equally to the private owner. But aside from this very important factor, the Hertz organization could not operate on such a gigantic scale if it did not offer cars that appealed to the public. In other words, it would be difficult to rent an automobile that the customer did not care to drive.

"The experience of the Hertz organization is paralleled by other large purchasers. In many large firms where Buicks are being used under careful check, we receive some highly interesting letters showing low operation costs plus the unfailing reliability. A very striking example of this is the Los Angeles Police Department and the fire department, both of which have materially increased the number of Buicks in service. Thirty-three new Buicks have been added to the police service, while the fire department has purchased seventeen more.

"We have been interested in receiving reports from the New York show, showing the influence of the new style that Buick introduced last August. At the time the new silver anniversary Buicks were brought out last August the announcement was made that here was a definite new style introduced into automobile manufacture. Since that time there has been a very definite trend toward wider bodies and the displacing of the former straight lines with curves.

PELTON PAYS VISIT TO AUTO FACTORY

Following his visit to the twenty-sixth annual national automobile show at New York, George S. Pelton left for Indianapolis to visit the Marmon Motor Car Company factory there.

Pelton, head of Pelton Motor Car Company, Marmon distributors, attended the Marmon dealer meeting and luncheon Thursday at the Hotel Commodore.

Cross-Country Tourist Drives Latest Model

The distinction of being the first cross-country tourist in a new Chevrolet six probably belongs to Evangelist R. D. Spencer of St. Louis, Mo., who reached Los Angeles last week after a remarkably fast trip across midwinter roads. His trip, incidentally, as well as being the first, was as severe a test of the stamina of a new car as could well be imagined.

Fortunate enough to get delivery of a new Chevrolet six coach on the same day they were first shown by dealers, Spencer took his new car home and idled the motor for a day to break it in, loaded it with 600 pounds of luggage and with three passengers besides himself set out for Los Angeles. He was in a hurry and had no time to break the car in slowly.

"Once out on the open road, I drove fifty-five and sixty miles an hour most of the time. At one time I touched sixty-seven miles an hour, even with that excessive load," Spencer told Winslow B. Felix last week, when he stopped at the local Chevrolet dealer's headquarters. "I never drove a car that seem so eager to run at high speeds. And it had a get-away like these long-eared jackrabbits you see out on the plains.

"We had eleven inches of snow on the road at Kansas City, and snow again in the mountains in Arizona, with plenty of roads that were none too good. In spite of it, we reached Los Angeles in six days with an average of better than 400 miles per day. We would have made it in five days, except for a mishap near Kingman, where a large rock had been left in the road, and I struck it at high speed and knocked a hole in my crank case. My repairs for that accident cost me $5.25, but aside from that I spent just 25 cents for a valve adjustment as my only mechanical expense en route. I did not touch a tire.

"I kept careful track of my gasoline mileage. It figures just a trifle over twenty miles to the gallon."

Glendale Auto Agency Joined by Roy Stuart

Roy G. Stuart who has been connected with the automobile business for the last fourteen years, much of which time has been spent in the Southern California territory, announces that he has obtained an interest in Glendale-Knight Motors, Glendale, and has taken the position of general manager. He is associated with Frank C. Ayars.

Mr. Stuart has held executive positions with automobile companies for several years. He was with General Motors for six years in various positions and more recently was manufacturer's representative in Southern California.

In joining Glendale-Knight Motors he is returning to a line of cars with which he is familiar. For five years he had been connected with Willys-Overland, Inc., as wholesale manager and assistant to the manager in Los Angeles. Some time ago he became identified with another big automobile manufacturing company which he represented here as wholesale manager in Southern California. He resigned to enter the present business.

Change Made in Carburetor of 1929 Model

New type carburetor and finer air cleaner are two unusual standard equipment features of Chrysler's new "75."

The company's extensive study and pioneering both into carburetion and varying fuel conditions, taking the entire country into consideration, have desulted in the new carburetor. Its design was worked out by collaboration of Chrysler with Ball & Ball, engineers. Owners of all 1928 Chrysler "72" models may also have the new carburetor and air cleaner installed at nominal cost at Chrysler service stations.

Frank B. Hughes, sales manager of the Greer-Robbins Company, Chrysler distributor here, points out that the new carburetor embodies not only a new application of the principle of carburetion, but also the means of counteracting successfully the effects of fuel surging without sacrificing economy or any other of a carburetor's successful attributes. A degree of efficient carburetion has now been attained which surpasses any previous achievement along that line, he says. Its additional advantages he summarizes as:

Greater capacity, which permits added power, acceleration and speed; newly-designed method of adjustment at idling speeds for smoother operation without the usual hissing; more efficient control of the mixture just above the idling range, insuring a smooth transfer from idling to running speed; requirement of one nozzle only for delivery of fuel from both the primary and secondary stages; parallel air intakes for both stages, with intakes one above the other, permitting thorough functioning of the air cleaner on the secondary as well as the primary air intake; new accelerating device which operates at any throttle opening and is adjustable for condition of temperature and altitude.

FOOTHILL BOULEVARD PAVING CONTINUES

The tremendous improvement which has been made on the Foothill Boulevard will be further extended within the next month, inasmuch as a distance of 10.4 miles between Claremont and Cherry avenue is to be widened and paved with asphaltic concrete and a further section of 5.5 miles between Glendora and Claremont will also be improved, according to reports reaching the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California.

Food for Men Who Associate With the Angels

During the latter part of the Question Mark's record-breaking flight, food to its valiant crew was prepared under special direction. The reloading of the food from the Chrysler "65" sedan to the plane which supplied the Question Mark is pictured here.

Price Reduced on All Closed Models in Line

Prices on all Plymouth closed cars were reduced, effective December 21, by the Plymouth Motor Corporation, division of the Chrysler Corporation. The savings are from $25 for the two-door sedan, and $30 for the coupe with rumble seat, to $40 for the four-door sedan and de luxe coupe.

New economies in manufacture, almost revolutionary even to the building of motor cars, together with the big demand the Plymouth has created ever since its introduction to the public last July, make this action possible, said J. W. Fraser, Plymouth sales manager.

"The economy in buying and operating a Plymouth, its full size and quality features, have created for that car such a demand that we can pass the savings on to every potential buyer in the field of lowest-priced cars," said Mr. Fraser. "In all Chrysler history, no product it has ever built offers so large a proportion of the public the opportunity for ownership of a Chrysler-built car as does the Plymouth at this new price—a full-sized car with weather-proof hydraulic four-wheel brakes, established economy of operation and modern engineering."

THE NEW SUPERIOR Whippet

WORLD'S GREATEST SEDAN VALUES!

WITH THE NEW
"FINGER-TIP CONTROL"

The greatest advance in driving convenience since the self-starter. A single button in the center of the steering wheel controls all functions of starting the motor, sounding the horn and operating the lights.

WITH all its many improvements, with its greater beauty, longer wheelbase, larger body, new "Finger-Tip Control" and higher compression engine, the Superior Whippet Four Sedan is still the world's lowest-priced four-door enclosed car.

And the new Superior Whippet Six Sedan is the world's lowest-priced six-cylinder four-door enclosed car to offer the important advantages of seven-bearing crankshaft, "Finger-Tip Control," silent timing chain, full force-feed lubrication and Nelson type aluminum alloy invar-strut pistons.

Never have Fours and light Sixes been distinguished by such beauty and style as are now winning nation-wide praise for the new Superior Whippet. Its grace of line, its harmony of color, its longer bodies, its higher radiator and hood, its sweeping one-piece full crown fenders, make the new Superior Whippet the style triumph of master designers.

The larger bodies give more spacious interiors, with broader seats and extra leg room. Other important factors in riding comfort are the oversize balloon tires, snubbers and longer springs both front and rear.

In performance, the new Superior Whippet is speedier, livelier and more powerful. Long service will prove its dependability and economical operation.

See and examine the new Superior Whippet at your first opportunity! An immediate order will aid in obtaining early delivery.

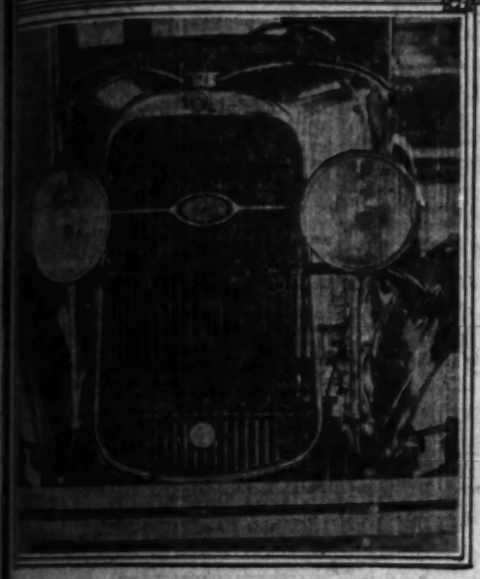
OLDSMOBILE FOR 1929 NOW SHOWING

Twenty-one Models Offered in New Line



Front and rear views of the new Oldsmobile landau sedan featuring, above, the new cadet visor and metal roof shoulders. Below the new cadet and chrome nameplate are seen.

THE new Oldsmobile six for 1929, with new styles, greater beauty and improved performance is being displayed by the local dealers, it is announced by Thomas M. Ray, manager of the Los Angeles branch, Olds Motor Works. Los Angeles dealers having the new cars on display are L. A. Jackson, Inc., Lane C. Dodge Company and Paul A. Ziegler, Inc.

"Seven standard, seven special and seven de luxe models are offered in the new line," Mr. Ray said in his announcement. "Each of the three lines includes a landau sedan, two-door sedan, sport coupe, business coupe, sport roadster and a sport phaeton. The special line and two de luxe models are new additions to the line.

"Sharing attention with the details of the new cars is the recent reduction made in prices. Reductions range from $50 to $70 a car and bring the base prices of the standard two-door sedan to $675, f.o.b. Lansing, Mich.

"The most apparent change in the outward appearance of the 1929 Oldsmobile is the addition of a heraldic crest on the radiator and the removal of the nameplate to a chromium plated bar connecting the larger headlamps, which are now supported by chromium-plated standards. Other exterior refinements include an advancement in design of the radiator shutters, a new cadet type windshield visor which is designed to harmonize with the graceful saddle on the hood and cowl, and the changing of the finish of the roof shoulders from fabric to sheet metal lacquered in body colors.

"Adjustable front seats are now included in all closed models. These, with an even finer grade of mohair upholstery increase the comfort and beauty of the Fisher-built body interiors.

"Continuous research work by our engineers has resulted in an increase in horsepower and a corresponding improvement in mechanical performance for the 1929 Oldsmobile. The high-compression engine now develops sixty-two horsepower. This added power has brought greater speed and smoothness of performance. Connecting rods have been fully machined and rifle drilled so that oil under pressure is injected through the rods to the piston pins. This is technically known as full-pressure lubrication.

"A new air cleaner with a mineral wool content replaces the former cleaner of a centrifugal type. A larger carburetor is now employed. Crank case ventilation is retained, as are the oil filter and gasoline pump and filter. Additional driving ease and comfort have been attained through a new and improved steering gear and improved adjustments of the clutch and brake pedals.

"The inlet and exhaust valves are now using a 30 deg. valve seat, by which an increase in turbulence in the gas charge at high speeds has been attained. The efficiency of the cooling system has been increased by the adoption of an adjustable fan belt pulley which may be kept at proper tension at all times to insure against slippage.

"The doors of both the standard and sport coupes have been widened three and one-half inches, making the total width of the doors thirty-four and three-sixteenths inches. The special models are equipped with two spare rims, tires and tubes, which are carried in fender wells at the side and a folding trunk rack. The special two-door sedan and coupe are now priced at $950, and the four-door sedan at $1050.

"In the de luxe line, cars have in addition to the standard equipment, six wire wheels, tubes and tires, the two spares being mounted in fender wells with special wheel supports and locks, chromium plated bumpers front and rear and a folding trunk platform. The de luxe two-door sedan is priced at $1005, and the de luxe sport coupe and roadster at $1075."

Schedule for Production of Line Increased

The Willys-Overland, Inc., manufacturer of Willys-Knight and Overland automobiles has entered its August production schedule in full history, is the information released here by Chair B. Savage, general manager of J. W. Leavitt, Los Angeles distributor of the Willys-Overland line.

Last year the total production of Willys-Overland, Inc., was 315,000 cars, but plans have been perfected to have this number far be- during 1929, he stated.

The production planned for the first six months of this year is 180,000 cars. Records show that the largest previous six-months' record was 156,000 units. At the present time the company is producing 1400 of the 1929 Whippet four and 1600 Overland six cars daily. December production of these new cars exceeded 35,000 and the January schedule calls for more than 38,000 cars.

Early production will be graduated to more than 1500 cars during the latter part of this month. Vice-President John N. Willys stated that the company's plants are now employing 30,000 workers and that 10,000 more will be added to the pay roll within the next month or two.

EIGHTY-FOUR MILES OF NEW PAVEMENT LAID

SAN JOSE, Jan. 12. (Exclusive)—Eighty-four miles of paving were laid in Santa Clara Valley, at a cost of $3,220,000, according to report of L. O. Shurtleff, county engineer, working under the city engineer of Los Altos. At the present time about eighty miles additional are under construction, which when completed will total another $1,000,000 for the last few years. Several hundred miles of highways have been laid in the valley, making it now one of the best-paved districts in the Los Angeles metropolitan area.

WORK STILL GOES ON AT LEE'S FERRY SPAN

The new bridge across the Colorado River at Lee's Ferry is still under construction and the completion date is as yet indefinite, it is reported by the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California.

Company Offers Most Complete Line of Autos

This year sees the Packard Motor Car Company exhibiting with the most complete line of cars in the company's history, according to Earle C. Anthony, Inc., California Packard distributors. Packard now is building straight eights exclusively in three distinct price classes, actually with four, if individual custom cars are to be considered.

The Packard "line" embraces the standard eight, built on two different wheel bases; the custom eight with a slightly larger and more powerful motor than that of the standard eight and with a wheel base of 140 inches; and the de luxe eight, called the most luxurious car Packard has ever built.

The de luxe eight is a new car just announced last month with a surprise showing at the automobile salons. It is one of the largest cars built having a wheel base of 145½ inches. With such a chassis and the long rakish Packard lines the custom body builders were given, it was remarked at the salon, an opportunity to outdo all their previous efforts in luxurious body building.

The Packard standard eight since its introduction last summer has been proving one of the most popular cars the company has ever built and the Detroit factory has been present harder, than ever before in its history, because of this popularity, in an effort to make the supply somewhere near equal the demand.

Planes Bought on Installments

Airplanes may be purchased at present "on time." Terms similar to those used in purchasing automobiles may be had in purchasing airplanes. While insurance rates are slightly higher, other carrying charges are similar to those on the usual automobile contract.

Those who do not pay cash for airplanes are usually required to hold pilots' licenses issued by the Department of Commerce and to show by their past record that they are safe pilots.

PAVING SCHEDULED

On the Pacheco Pass route between Fresno and Gilroy there will be sixteen miles of new pavement added this summer, leaving only fourteen miles of oiled-gravel surface, according to the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California.

Sportsmen Must Renew Licenses

Motorists who hunt and fish are reminded that they must obtain new licenses immediately, according to the Automobile Club of Southern California. Under a new law all hunting and fishing licenses expired December 31, last, and hereafter licenses will date from the beginning of each calendar year instead of July 1.

For the benefit of motorists the Automobile Club of Southern California issues licenses from all of its thirty-four offices in the population centers of Southern California.

Golden State Paving Planned

The rapid progress of the California State Highway system will be seen in the fact that within the next six months a distance of sixty-eight miles will be reconstructed on the Golden State Highway in addition to 8.9 miles of new highway between Newhall and the tunnel, nine new bridges, one grade separation, twenty-one miles of shoulder improvement and the widening of turns on the Ridge Route, it is pointed out by the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California.

Six-Wheel Trucks Draw Praise

CHEVROLET

"Beyond all Expectations!"

-say those who have seen the Outstanding Chevrolet of Chevrolet History

-a Six in the price range of the four!

The Outstanding Chevrolet of Chevrolet History has now been seen and inspected by millions of people in every section of America — and everywhere it has been hailed as exceeding all expectations.

Many looked forward to finding a motor of exceptional design—but none expected a six-cylinder valve-in-head engine which develops 32% more power than its famous predecessor, which displays correspondingly higher speed and faster acceleration and which delivers better than 20 miles to the gallon of gasoline.

Many anticipated seeing numerous factors that contribute to ease and safety of control—but were amazed at such quality car features as full ball-bearing steering mechanism with latest flat-type wheel, foot controlled headlamps and newly designed, quiet, easy-acting four-wheel brakes.

Many were confident that the new Chevrolet would be a comfortable car—but were delightfully surprised to find such outstanding comfort features as adjustable driver's seat in all closed models, fully cushioned seat backs and larger, roomier bodies.

And although everyone expected that Fisher genius would contribute a new note of beauty to the new Chevrolet Six—no one ever dreamed that it would be possible to achieve in any low-priced car elements of beauty, luxury and safety so worthy of direct comparison with the finest and costliest automobiles. Revealing low, sweeping lines and graceful contours, upholstered in rich fabrics that come from the world's foremost looms, and built of hardwood and steel, the new bodies represent an achievement in keeping with Fisher's reputation as world leaders in fine coachwork.

If you have not already made a personal inspection of the new Chevrolet Six, we urge you to do so at your earliest convenience—for not until you have seen and inspected this remarkable car, can you appreciate what the buyer of a low-priced automobile is now entitled to expect for his money. We now have the beautiful new models on display—and you are cordially invited to call and see them.

Read what these leading automobile editors said after seeing and riding in the new Chevrolet Six.

"In appearance, performance and mechanical nicety the new Chevrolet Six presents actual values far beyond its price range."
—HAZEN CONKLIN, New York World

"One of the greatest automobiles I have ever seen. In performance, construction and beauty it is phenomenal. Never saw so much car for the money."
—NORTH BIGBEE, Dallas News

"The new Chevrolet Six was conclusively demonstrated to me in a convincing ride. The marked improvements and beautiful body designs are the greatest dollar value ever offered."
—J. LEO SUGRUE, Washington Times

"The Chevrolet Six brings a new standard of comparison to the low-price field. It is an exceptional value in every respect."
—ROBERT COPELAND, Chicago Herald and Examiner

"Aside from beauty in body lines and attractiveness in finish, the outstanding feature of the new Chevrolet Six is its powerful and flexible motor. One will have to go far to equal the high performance of this new Chevrolet in general road and traffic use."
—LEON J. PINKSON, San Francisco Chronicle

"Introducing new style, beauty and smoothness, the new Chevrolet Six certainly meets the requirements of the most exacting buyer."
—H. M. VAN DEVENDER, Atlanta Constitution

"St. Louis motordom is tremendously enthused over the new Chevrolet Six. Personally I have never seen the public so interested in a new car. The factory should be congratulated on the truly monumental engineering feat it has accomplished."
ROBERT HENRY HALL, St. Louis Post-Dispatch

"The new Chevrolet Six is a sensational value. Not only is it a fine Six at the price of a four, but also it is an unusually good looking car."
—HAROLD F. BLANCHARD, Motor, New York

"In speed and acceleration, the new Chevrolet will more than satisfy the average person. In design, Fisher offers the car appearance. In short, the new car is by far Chevrolet's outstanding achievement."
—EDWARD M. MILLER, Portland Oregonian

"The new Chevrolet Six is a triumph for volume production. The car at its price is one of the greatest achievements ever recorded in the automobile industry. Its beauty is a event its riding comfort a never delight and its performance a new sensation."
RAY PRIEST, Detroit Times

QUESTION MARK RECORD TO STAY

Costly Feat Will be Difficult of Duplication

Fokker and Goebel Plan 'Round World Trip

Army and Navy Offer Best Chance of Success

BY BILL HENRY

The Question Mark has a new meaning.

Two weeks ago it meant "How long will the big trimotored Fokker be able to stay up?"

Now the question is "How long will it be before somebody comes along and breaks that record?"

Maj. Spatz and his crew had hardly set foot on the ground before flyers all over the world were planning to make use of this new system of refueling to fly around the world and break his record.

AROUND THE WORLD

Over in Paris representatives of the Fokker company were reported to be making plans to carry out the first round-the-world flight without a stop and on a hospital cot in Kansas Art Goebel, the intrepid Hawaiian flight winner, was figuring out ways and means of carrying out the same job ahead of anybody else.

Those who know most about refueling, its hazards and—of equal importance if not most—its cost, believe that it will be some little time before anybody eclipses the feat of the Question Mark much less flies nonstop around the world.

As far as this round-the-world flight is concerned it ought to be remembered that when Capt. Lowell Smith and his companions made the flight five years ago they did such a good job of it that nobody has been able to duplicate it. It was a great bit of flying, a fine piece of organization and a mighty expensive project all around.

ELEVEN-PLANE JOB

And the nonstop flight around the world will be more so.

To accomplish this feat will require at least ten refueling planes and crews. It will require a remarkable crew for the nonstop plane itself and it will require a stupendous ground organization. On top of all that it will require a lot of good luck.

Nobody knows—or if they do they won't tell—exactly what the flight of the Question Mark cost but the chances are that it was not less than $100,000 and the only reason it was kept to this figure was the fact that the United States Air Service is in the business of flying day in and day out and carried out this experiment as part of its daily routine.

NOT SO LIKELY

There is no other organization capable of carrying out such a feat at so comparatively small a cost except a similar organization and it is very doubtful if any of them would try it.

The logical organization to make an attempt at such a flight would be the United States Navy or the Army and the Navy in combination, although such a thing is not very likely. With the big aircraft carriers available through the co-operation of the Navy the flight could be made over a much more reasonable route than would be necessary if the airplane carriers were not used.

In any event it is not very likely that private capital will be organized in time to put the thing across this summer. It takes too much money and it is too much of a job.

The Army might do it or the Navy might do it or they might get together and do it. But they aren't likely to.

Here Are Drums That Can't Be Beat

Drums of Richfield

They're empty now, but they were filled with thousands of gallons of Richfield gasoline for the gas-thirsty Question Mark during its successful quest for an all-embracing aeronautical endurance record.

AIR CRUISING SPEED GOES UP

Aviation Has Jumped From 90 Miles Per Hour to Its Present 150 and Is Going Hurriedly to Rate of 200 Average

Two things have contributed primarily to this marked and beneficial change in airplane speeds. They are the radical advance—not yet at its fullest expression—in streamlining and the use of greater power.

Not long ago, the aviation industry heralded the development of a new type of cowling for the air-cooled radial engine. By providing an easy means of slipping the air stream over this power plant, the new device developed by the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, made possible a sharp increase in the speed at which planes thus powered could travel, further than this, the "inverted boiler," as the cowling has been called, made possible a big economy in the amount of fuel consumed by the engine.

Because the public still knows little about the design of airplanes, it failed to appreciate the meaning of the new cowling. In its way, however, it is equally as radical as the development of four-wheel brakes for motor cars, and is a more important change than that represented in the substitution of pressure oiling in automobile engines, the adoption of high compression engines, and a majority of the other engineering improvements about which the motor-car owner gloats today.

TEN MILES MORE

A virtue of the new device that is of tremendous advantage is that it may be manufactured at a very small cost, thus bringing it within the range of every plane maker's present production costs. A sweeping, progressive step, whose benefits may be enjoyed by all, sums up the case for the latest contribution of the N.A.C.A.'s remarkable laboratories.

Wind resistance, something that terrestrial vehicles makers in the main never worry about, is of tremendous concern to the airplane designer. A slight change in the contour of this feature or another of the plane may add five or ten miles an hour to its speed. Not so long ago, the maker of a popular commercial ship slightly narrowed the fuselage of the craft and made an invisible change or two in its form. Then he put the plane through a speed test, and found it to be ten miles an hour faster. His experience is fairly typical.

One of the fastest of commercial craft, incidentally the plane that Art Goebel used in setting his transcontinental speed record, gets a great deal of its success from the design of the fuselage which offers fairly close to the last word in streamline construction.

LARGER MOTORS

The trimness of appearance that characterizes the military airplane is being made a feature of those planes whose function it is to increase the pace of commerce. And, as it adds to the dispatch with which these craft annihilate space, it contributes to their improvement in another way, namely, by enhancing their appearance.

Beyond the improvements in streamlining, there is apparent in the greater airplane speeds of the moment the effect of the adoption of larger power plants and, in the case of the big ships, of more engines. Down in the lower price class, the surplus war-time engine has become extinct. The ninety-horsepower engine with its very limited ability to develop plane speed has given place to more efficient and modern engines ranging in power from 110 horsepower to 200. An increase in speed is a natural product of the change.

It is not in the case of these planes, however, that the higher speed is most significant, but rather in those which are in the business of transporting mail, passengers and express. From a cruising speed of 100 miles an hour, and a top of around 115, one of the best known of the big ships has been jumped to a cruising speed of 135 and a top of 150. The three 200-horsepower engines which formerly powered it have given way to three of 425 horsepower each, more than doubling the power.

CRUISING SPEED SOUGHT

Another huge craft that is quite popular with passenger line operators has made a similar change with reference to its power equipment and with an identical effect. A new one to be put in service in the spring will have three motors of 525 horsepower each, and will be capable of traveling at 150 miles an hour with twelve passengers and a heavy cargo of mail and express.

On every side, it is obvious that aircraft designers are going to make the most of the plane's chief advantage over other transportation media.

As a result up goes the cruising speed.

Airplane May Rival Autos in College Favor

COLORADO SPRINGS, Jan. 12. (Exclusive)—Will the airplane rival the sports roadster in the favor of modern collegians? Are intercollegiate air meets to become as commonplace as present-day track meets? Apparently so.

For the undergraduate student body of America is taking to aircraft with a rush that presages drastic changes in the sales policies of leading commercial aircraft manufacturers.

Indicating the widespread interest, students of eighty-three colleges and universities have entered the nation-wide aeronautical scholarship contest, which an aircraft company of this city is holding in 1929 to crystallize this collegiate enthusiasm. The winner will be awarded a four-year university course in aeronautics, or as alternate award, a complete airplane.

Oakland Builds Road to Airport

OAKLAND, Jan. 12. (Exclusive)—Construction of Hegenberger Road, the $75,000 speedway which will connect downtown Oakland with the municipal airport is now under way.

This route will be two and one-half miles shorter than present highways to the airport. A further improvement over existing routes will be the absence of cross streets on Hegenberger Road. Engineers say the new road will be ready for use early next summer.

PURSUIT PLANE BEST DEFENSE

Nation's Safety Depends on Barrier to Invasion

Fast Climbing and Capable of 165-Mile Speed

Machine Guns and Bombs Fighting Equipment

(This is No. 1 of a series of eight articles describing the aerial fighting equipment of the United States.)

The Army P1-B pursuit plane is the backbone of the nation's aerial defense, and the only weapon that could offset an aerial invasion. It is one of two pursuit types standardized for and in widespread use by the army, navy and marine air services, the other being the Boeing pursuit plane of somewhat the same performance.

The P1-B or Curtiss Hawk, fully loaded with gasoline and oil, machine guns, bombs and carrying but one person, the pilot, weighs about 2500 pounds. It has a high speed of 165 miles an hour, cruises at 130 miles an hour, can climb to 23,000 feet without supercharger, and lands at about fifty-five miles per hour. The span of the upper wing is 31½ feet and the length of the plane from nose to tail is 22 feet 5½ inches.

The Hawk is powered with a Curtiss D-12 water-cooled engine of twelve cylinders, V type, and about 450 horsepower. The D-12 engine differs from the Liberty in that it gives improved reliability and durability, weighs less per horsepower and is smaller in general dimensions.

Fuel is carried in a big tank between the engine and the pilot's cockpit, and also in a "belly tank," located under the fuselage and behind the wheels. For long-distance work this tank can be disconnected and dropped while in flight after it is empty, thereby reducing the head resistance produced by it. With full gasoline load the plane can cruise for seven hours without landing.

The radiator is slung under the engine bed in streamline form and is known as a "tunnel" type. The entire ship is streamlined to give it the maximum speed. The upper wing is cantilever and extends out beyond the two lower panels. The plane derives most of its lift from the upper wing. As a biplane, better visibility is accorded the pilot and greater opportunity for wing bracing is offered by using the two lower panels. The plane is highly maneuverable and has been put through performances that have brought as high as 27,000 pounds of pressure on it without incident.

FLOOD OF FUEL IN FLEET

Airplane Carriers Stow 400,000 Gallons of Gasoline to Supply Flying Auxiliary

When the battle fleet, accompanied by the giant airplane carriers, Saratoga, Lexington and Langley, steams from Los Angeles and San Diego harbors January 15 to join the scouting fleet from the Atlantic Coast for the annual winter maneuvers off Central America, it will take into action the greatest aerial force ever carried to sea. Aboard the three carriers and the battleships will be fourteen squadrons of more than 200 planes, all of which have been put into service within the past nine months. The planes carried by the scouting fleet will bring the total up to approximately 250.

To keep his brood of war birds in the air during the period of the maneuvers, which will take place 5000 miles from their home base, the carriers and battleships took aboard from the Union Oil Company barges while loading supplies in Los Angeles Harbor 400,000 gallons of gasoline. It is estimated that this amount of fuel will be sufficient to keep all 250 planes in the air continuously for a period of 140 hours, which at the speed they travel would enable them to go halfway around the world. The two big carriers, the Saratoga and the Lexington, alone loaded 280,000 gallons of gasoline, each filling up to its capacity of 140,000 gallons.

The handling of this huge store of gasoline aboard the carriers is in itself highly interesting. In taking gasoline aboard from a barge a hose leading from the tanks of the barge is fastened to the pipe on the side of the ship leading to the distributing tank, and the barge pumps started. The gasoline is permitted to flow by gravity from the distributing tank to the fourteen storage tanks, the capacity of which range from 15,000 to 30,000 gallons. In a test conducted while loading from the Union barges for this cruise it was demonstrated that gasoline can be transmitted from the barges to the carriers at the rate of 25,000 gallons an hour.

As a safety measure, the storage tanks are always kept full, either of gasoline or salt water or both. This prevents sloshing or the building up of dangerous fumes that might wreck the ships. Gasoline displaces water when the tanks are being filled and water displaces gasoline when the tanks are being emptied. The gasoline, being of lighter specific gravity than water, always rides on top. This makes it possible to draw the water off from the bottom without draining the gasoline.

All planes are fueled on the flight deck. When a plane is to be put in the air it is taken from the big hangar below decks and put on one of the two huge elevators and shot up to the flight deck. A long hose is then brought over the side of the ship from the storage tanks and the plane "gassed." After the flight the gasoline tank is drained before the plane is sent back to the hangar. When speed is essential a whole squadron of planes can be brought on the flight deck and "gassed" and sent on its way in a few minutes.

IN THE AIR AT LOCAL AIRPORTS

Col. Perry M. Smoot, adjutant-general for Hawaii, and chairman of the Territorial Aeronautical Commission is in Los Angeles, investigating West Coast aeronautical conditions. In this capacity, he was recently the guest of the Aero Corporation of California, flying with Paul Richter, vice-president of the corporation, on a survey of Los Angeles county airports.

Accompanying Col. Smoot were Capt. M. G. Nemo and Lieut. Nathan Newby, Jr.

At the Western States Metal and Machinery Exposition held the week of the 14th and 17th inst. in Shrine Auditorium, Aero Corporation of California has registered for exhibition a Hisso-motored Eaglerock biplane. It will be placed to specially feature the metal motor mount and fuselage construction.

A new type of signaling has been introduced on the Aero Corporation of California field for planes overhead. A red flag indicates "do not land;" a white one, "field clear;" while a green one signals "land immediately."

Vera Walker, 20 years of age, completed her aerial instruction at Aero Corporation of California last week and soloed for the first time. She states that it is for sport alone that her course in aviation was undertaken.

With more than twelve years' service in the radio division of the United States Navy, R. G. Horton, radio engineer assumes his duties as head of radio equipment for the Aero Corporation of California.

Burrel Smith, pilot for Aero Corporation of California has left on a tour of California. He plans to visit each high school in the State to organize aero clubs among the students.

With the ninth Ford monoplane, which is also the first sixteen-passenger Ford to arrive on the West Coast, delivered to the Maddux Airlines for use on their Los Angeles-to-Mexico City route shortly to be opened, comes the news that a tenth Ford, another sixteen-place job, leaves the Detroit factory shortly.

Larry Fritz, veteran pilot for Maddux, is to leave the Middle West with the plane within ten days. Immediately upon its arrival, the extended schedule will go into effect, according to company officials.

With the steel construction for hangars at the Grand Terminal Airport of Glendale completed, work is going forward for their final completion. One concrete runway is entirely finished. It measures 2500 feet in length, and seventy-two feet in width.

Incorporation of the Pacific Aeromotive Company is announced this week for $250,000. The directors of the company include Charles R. Hadley, Palmer Nicholls, W. E. Thomas, Theodore H. Shepherd and E. S. Brown.

The City Council of Imperial, Cal., leased two and one-half acres on the Municipal Airport to the Richfield Oil Company last week. Construction of a service station and installation of beacon lights will proceed immediately.

The Commercial Airplane Corporation has applied for permit to build a factory on a five-acre site at the Metropolitan Airport, near Burbank, according to recent announcement. Officers of the company include W. M. Griffith, president; Charles R. Francis, vice-president; John A. Clow, secretary; Ross Younglove, treasurer, and Arthur B. Green, general manager.

Western Air Gets Fourth of New Ships

The fourth of ten new $80,000 trimotored, twelve-passenger planes ordered by Western Air Express, Inc., from Fokker Aircraft Corporation of America, is expected to leave the factory within the next two weeks, according to officials of the local company. Three of the giant planes have already been received and are in service on the Los Angeles-Salt Lake and Los Angeles-San Francisco lines.

The planes are similar, although much larger as to cabin size, wing spread and motor power, to the Army's "Question Mark."

Carrying twelve passengers in addition to 1000 pounds cargo, the Western Air Express planes are known as F10A's, equipped with three Pratt & Whitney Wasp motors, capable of developing a total of 1275 horsepower. Maximum speed averages better than 150 miles per hour.

GLIDER IN MAKING AT NORTHERN PLANT

OAKLAND, Jan. 12. (Exclusive) Aircraft Industries, Inc., is turning out a glider in their factory near the Oakland Municipal Airport. It will have a wing span of 36ft. 6in. and an overall length of 18ft. 6in. It is to be used by the San Francisco Glider Club for the instruction of students. This organization plans to go out for the world glider record now held by Germany.

Rich in the Big Things leading to Value

Everywhere they're talking about the New All-American . . . a car that's new as this morning's dawn . . . rich in the big things leading to value.

* * *

Rich in its wealth of fine car features. Magnificent new bodies by Fisher . . . big powerful engine . . . dynamically balanced counter-weighted crankshaft . . . squeakless internal four-wheel brakes.

* * *

Rare in its air of distinction . . . in the triumphant manner in which it differs from other cars. In that elusive something which has served to lift it high above everything else in its field.

There's no mistaking a New All-American . . . whether you see it in the showroom or passing you on the road. There's no such thing as comparing its performance with anything else available at $1145.

* * *

Quickly and surely the New All-American is winning America . . . achieving a splendid success. All because it's different . . . and triumphantly new.

THE great group of manufacturing properties under our personal direction is hereafter to be known as Chrysler Motors.

We feel that the one and only justification for a grouping of motor car properties is to render a better public service.

Chrysler Motors is already accomplishing mutual efficiency and savings which are giving new benefits to the buyer of individual and commercial transportation in quality, service and economy. That is its sole purpose.

All of the products of Chrysler Motors are manufactured in one great group of plants and therein, we believe, rest the economic possibilities for overhead reduction, conservation of facilities and the application to all units of a common policy of engineering, purchasing and quality manufacturing.

Chrysler Motors' manufacturing facilities and financial resources are so vast and its combined distributing outlets so numerous that every price class in every country in the world is supplied with a Chrysler Motors product—and each the finest in its class.

Each of these products partakes of the advantages accruing to all the others, the cardinal principle of the grouping of these properties being the one thought—to benefit the buyer by a uniform basic quality and an enviable standard of value in every price field.

In the precise form in which it is operated, Chrysler Motors represents a new economic force in the industry because, while preserving a complete separate identity in the products and their distribution, it welds together the advantages resulting from the common policy of engineering, purchasing, manufacturing and financing under one personal head.

Thus, a quality manufacturing ideal is made practical for the first time in the history of the motor car industry.

Thus, a series of gigantic operations is made absolutely one—in research and engineering skill, in buying, in basic materials, in mutual processes and practices, in time- and money-saving machinery.

A great group of cars; all branches on the same tree and all growing out of the Chrysler root principle of standardized quality, originated and first applied by Chrysler—a principle which inevitably lifts both quality and value—each car contributing and sharing the manufacturing efficiencies of all the rest.

Chrysler Motors is the practical culmination of a long-cherished ambition which operates as an absolute guarantee of unapproached value to every motorist who buys a Chrysler-built product.

RESORT AND HOTEL NOTES

A REVIVAL of the annual Mt. Wilson trail climb, which has not been staged for a number of years, will take place on Saturday, March 16, in the form of a trail race, open and free to all amateur hikers, from Sierra Madre to Orchard Camp, the Half Way House on Mt. Wilson.

The course is over the old Mt. Wilson trail and covers a distance of three and one-half miles.

The run is sponsored by the management of Orchard Camp. Six cups in all have been purchased to be given to the winners in groups arranged according to age and sex and are on exhibition in The Times Branch Office Resort Bureau window in South Spring street, between Sixth and Seventh streets.

Entry blanks for the climb are available to the public there.

A PARTIAL list of guests recently registered at Glen Ivy Mineral Hot Springs, near Corona, are: T. P. Endicott and son Thomas, G. L. Strand, Mrs. L. W. Andrews, Miss Isabel McFadden, Mrs. A. B. Shields, Miss M. Bessie Davis, Jack Turner, George R. Giroux, Dr. Lottie Davidson, Miss Ruth Eyre, E. A. Lynch, Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Showalter, R. H. Edwards and son Gilbert, Mrs. Al Silver, Miss Eleanor Slobodien, R. B. Dickinson, Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Milne, Miss A. Handlen, Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Kearns, Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Insley, Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Conner and Mrs. A. L. Black, all of Los Angeles; T. Hagaman of Laguna Beach, Mr. and Mrs. M. I. Richmond and son and Mrs. F. M. Cox of Long Beach, Mr. and Mrs. F. M. Penny of Redondo Beach, Mr. and Mrs. Fred W. Sabin of Hollywood, Dr. Isabelle Biddle and Miss Marjorie Biddle of Glendale and Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Miller of Hollywood.

BEAUTIFUL weather and an abundance of snow at the Forest Home Mountain Resort afforded winter frolics and sports to a joyful capacity crowd over the holiday season just passed, according to G. E. Schmidt, manager of that popular resort.

The welcome large open fires, the closed pavilion with an orchestra for dancing and a delicious turkey dinner were added attractions. Trout fishing was enjoyed by many at the Forst Home Trout Preserve, which is open all the year. Skiing and sledding furnished sport for many prominent guests, including William Boyd of picture fame and party. Forest Home, with good paved roads all the way, also is open all year and is a delightfully accessible spot to enjoy all outdoor winter sports.

THE following is a partial list of the recent arrivals at Mt. Wilson Hotel, situated on the summit of Mt. Wilson: The Misses Marjorie and Ethel Van Duesen, Bessie Goren, Ada Rosenfelt, Helen Garber, Bernice Harker, Catherine Hasten, Shirley Goodman, Dr. and Mrs. A. Goodman, Mrs. Emma Goodman, Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Lowrie, Mr. and Mrs. M. Prisa, Mr. and Mrs. F. Richards, Mr. and Mrs. K. P. Whitaker and Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Long, all of Los Angeles; Mr. and Mrs. H. R. Pomeroy and family, Ray M. Hobbs, Mr. and Mrs. William Leister, Lolita B. Pierson, Jane K. Pollard, Mrs. F. S. Miller and daughter and Mr. and Mrs. G. E. Nall and Betty, all of Pasadena; Mrs. S. Louise Grosvenor of Petersham, Mass.; Miss Nellie Louise Grosvenor of Berkeley and Mr. and Mrs. James Roberts of Frankfort, Ky., and F. C. Bradley of Pine Orchard, Ct.

LAST Sunday a party of over fifty employees of the California Bank enjoyed a ten-mile hiking trip from Hanson's Lodge in the Big Tujunga to Switzer-Land Resort, in the upper Arroyo Seco, where they had dinner, returning from Switzer-Land via Camp Oak Wilde and the Arroyo Seco Canyon to Pasadena.

Dr. M. H. Moore of Occidental College will speak at the Switzer-Land Chapel this morning at 11 o'clock. Next Sunday a large group of Camp Fire Girls will conduct the chapel service, it is announced by Lloyd B. Austin, popular manager of Switzer-Land Resort.

"WINTER RESORTS," a new resort guide covering mountain resorts, where the snow flies, and desert roads, and issued by the Peck-Judah Company, well-known resort representatives, is now available to the public without charge at the office of that company in South Hill street, between Seventh and Eighth streets.

The guide is quite comprehensive and contains much valuable data.

COMPLETION of the new servants' and staff building at Arrowhead Springs has been announced by Manager R. W. Larritt. The new building, containing twenty-one rooms and erected at a cost of $50,000, is a structure embodying every newly devised comfort and planned along the lines of the new popular Spanish domestic architecture.

From the outside the building resembles a private stucco residence perched on a near-by knoll and surrounded by towering eucalypti. The interior is a model of cunning arrangement, the rooms being broken up in apartment suites, singles and doubles. A community lounge and drawing-room complete the unit.

SAN MARCOS PASS BAD

The scenic San Marcos Pass route from Goleta to Santa Ynez in Santa Barbara county is not advisable at the present time due to construction, although when completed this will be one of the most attractive trips in Southern California, reports the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California.

Old Baldy Slopes Furnish High-Gear Test

Chandler taking on tank of Gilmore Blu-Green for high-gear climbing test to Wrightwood.

Grade Pulled in High Gears

Over the top of the grade from Cajon Pass to Wrightswood on the north slopes of Old Baldy at thirty-seven miles an hour in high gear with three passengers in the Chandler eight is the way Blu-Green gasoline is performing, according to B. A. Rowell, manager of refined oil sales for the Gilmore Oil Company.

"On ten consecutive round trips between Los Angeles and Wrightswood, 6000 feet above sea level, Blu-Green gasoline has powered the Chandler eight with such efficiency that the car, with its load of driver and three passengers has topped the summit of the eleven-mile pull at thirty-seven miles per hour," says Rowell. "Eighty-five per cent of the cars that make the climb have to use second gear even when not as heavily loaded as the Chandler.

"The car is expected to make fifteen round trips and will continue for another fifteen if nothing occurs to mar the performance."

Automobiles Use Over Half of Plate Glass

"The wide influence the automobile industry has upon the economic picture of this country is explained by the large amount of materials that go into the making of an automobile body," states H. E. Franklin, general manager for the local Oakland-Pontiac dealers, Reeve Gartzmann, Inc.

Interesting facts on the quantity of raw material required for the construction of a single automobile body are related by Franklin, who states that every five-passenger sedan in the new Oakland all-American line required for its construction 286 board feet of lumber, 21.9 square feet of plate glass, and 252 square feet of sheet metal.

"The materials used in an automobile have a wide effect on the number of people directly or indirectly affected by the industry. The automobile industry, statistics show, annually absorbs more than 60 per cent of all plate glass produced in the United States, 14 per cent of all the steel, and more than 1,000,000,000 board feet of hard and soft wood," Franklin said.

ANOTHER AIRPORT NOW IN OPERATION

Another airport was added to the evergrowing list with the recent official dedication of Harmon Field, one and one-fourth miles south of San Jacinto, advises the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California.

Squadron maneuvers by army planes from March Field were part of the demonstration above the new landing field, and Cliff Henderson, superintendent of airports for Los Angeles county, officially dedicated the grounds.

NEW CARS HERE THIS WEEK

What is the new Dodge six going to be like?

That question will be answered here next Saturday when the first of the new models to be received in Southern California will be ready for display. Thompson De Jarnette Company, local dealers for Dodge Brothers' products, have received word from the railroads that several carloads of the new cars will be ready to unload here the latter part of this week, and all preparations are being made for a public display of the cars by Saturday. It is expected that enough of them will be on hand so that each dealer in Southern California will be able to show them at the same time they are being displayed in Los Angeles.

While visitors to the New York show have seen the car, there has been very little information received here concerning its mechanical details, although officials have been advised that several important improvements have been made.

The main showroom will be illuminated at night with the big searchlights which have come to be a regular part of Southern California's introduction of anything new, and the entire motoring public is to be invited to see and ride in the new Dodge six.

Lubricant Gets Test in Flight

When the giant Question Mark of the Army Air Service roared through Southern California skies to shatter all world's aviation endurance records, it turned one "question mark" into an everlasting exclamation point, according to Carlton W. Christian, district sales manager of the Pennzoil Company, Los Angeles.

"Pennzoil was selected to lubricate the three great Wright Whirlwind motors by Army Air Service experts," continued Mr. Christian. "When the test was contemplated, it was obvious that only a lubricant of the finest obtainable quality could be satisfactory. The Army Air Service purchased Pennzoil only after exhaustive tests which showed it to be supreme in quality.

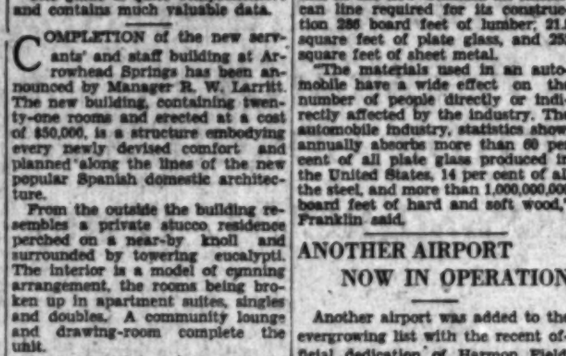
INSURANCE OFFICIALS NAMED

Auto Dealers Directors of Company



Los Angeles Men Enter New Business

A. C. Robbins and Robert S. Breyer, newly named to board of directors of West American Commercial Insurance Company

THE election of Robert S. Breyer, president of the Nash-Breyer Motor Company, and A. C. Robbins, of the Greer-Robbins Company, as directors of the West American Commercial Insurance Company, has been announced. Breyer and Robbins are among the outstanding automobile dealers of the West.

The West American Commercial specializes in automobile insurance sold through the automobile dealer. It recognizes the dealer as the most logically situated to serve the new or used-car buyer because of his ability to give instant protection.

The company confines its writings to the State of California, and all of its capital is local. The total assets of the company are approximately $1,400,000.

J. E. Coberly, executive vice-president of the West American Commercial, was for many years a leading automobile dealer in Los Angeles. The company has achieved its present outstanding position in the automobile insurance field because of the practical understanding of the dealer's needs by its officers and personnel, gained through actual experience in the automobile business.

SUIT FOR MR GUMP

IT'S ABOUT TIME - YOU'RE GOING TO GET PINCHED FOR SPEEDING SOMETIME BOY - YOU WANT TO WATCH THOSE RED LIGHTS

I KNEW IT THAT TAILOR SWIPED FIFTY DOLLARS FROM ME

ARE YOU SURE ANDY?

I LEFT A $50.00 BILL IN THIS SUIT AND IT'S GONE

DID YOU LOOK IN ALL THE POCKETS?

I NEVER DID LIKE HIS LOOKS - I WISH I HAD HIM BY THE NECK

IT'S NOT HERE - ARE YOU SURE YOU DIDN'T PUT IT IN SOME OTHER SUIT?

NAW - HE TOOK IT STOLE IT

HE KNOWS AND I KNOW — HE KNOWS THAT HE'S GOT IT - AND HE KNOWS THAT I KNOW THAT HE KNOWS THAT HE'S GOT IT — I DON'T KNOW WHETHER HE KNOWS THAT NOBODY KNOWS - LIKE I KNOW — THAT I'LL PUNCH HIS NOSE

TRY TO GET AWAY WITH THAT STUFF - I'LL TELL THAT OLD FLINT LOCK - I'LL CHASE THAT BUCCANEER OFF THE HIGH SEAS

HELLO!! IS THAT FLAT FOOTED HAWK EYED CLAM OF A PIRATE AROUND? IS THIS THE DEN OF THIEVES? WELL - IS THE TAILOR IN? ?

SORRY BUT HE JUST STEPPED OUT FOR A MOMENT HE'LL BE RIGHT BACK

WELL - THIS IS ANDY GUMP TALKING - AND TELL HIM FOR ME WHEN HE RETURNS - THAT I'M COMING DOWN THERE AND CLEAN OUT THAT CLEANING AND PRESSING ESTABLISHMENT - AND I'M GOING TO LEHIM FOR A MOP - NEVER MIND WHAT'S THE MATTER - I'LL EXPLAIN WHEN I GET THERE

SOME ONE AT THE DOOR TO SEE YOU ANDY

ME - WHO IS IT?

I DON'T KNOW A MAN WANTS TO SEE YOU THAT'S ALL I KNOW

MR GUMP - LOOK WHAT I FOUND WHEN I PRESSED YOUR PANTS - I WAS AFRAID TO TRUST IT WITH THE BOY - SO I BROUGHT IT TO YOU MYSELF - I'M SORRY I COULDN'T GET AWAY SOONER -

-NOW THEY'RE IN A CLINCH - THEY BREAK - A RIGHT - A LEFT - BLACKIE HAS BULL AGAINST THE ROPES - A TERRIFIC SOCK TO THE JAW - THE BULL IS GROGGY - HE'S DOWN - ONE TWO - THREE -

Blackie's in military school now, you know.....

QUIT PICKING ON LITTLE RONALD, YOU BULLY, OR I'LL KNOCK YOU OUT OF UNIFORM!

YOU WILL, HUH? WELL, MEET ME IN THE GYM TONIGHT, AND I'LL GIVE YOU A MOUTHFUL OF LOOSE TEETH!

OKAY— I'LL BE THERE!

THANKS, BLACKIE— I WISH I COULD DO SOMETHING FOR YOU!

YOU CAN HELP ME SOME TIME WITH MY CHEMISTRY— THEY SAY YOU'RE A SHARK AT IT!

I GOT AN IDEA TO FIX THIS CINDERS KID— YOU MAKE RONALD GET TWO CAPSULES OF ETHER FROM THE LAB— I'LL PUT THEM IN MY RIGHT GLOVE—

AND THEN WHEN YOU SOCK HIM IN THE NOSE— DREAMLAND!

REMEMBER, BULL— THE ETHER'S IN YOUR RIGHT GLOVE. POKE HIM A COUPLA TIMES WITH YOUR LEFT, THEN LET HIM HAVE IT!

I'LL SOCK YOU SO HARD THEY'LL HAVE TO PRY YOUR NOSE OFF YOUR CHIN!

YOU TALK A GREAT FIGHT!

NOW THE RIGHT AND PUT HIM TO SLEEP!

PARDON MY GLOVE! SWEET DREAMS, CINDERS! SLEEP WELL!

I SLEEP WELL, BUT NOT EASY— AND YOU'RE NO SANDMAN!

GREAT EIGHT— I KNEW YOU'D WIN!

HE DAZED ME WITH HIS LEFT— BUT HIS RIGHT SORT OF WOKE ME UP— FUNNY!

I WONDER IF IT HAD ANYTHING TO DO WITH THE MISTAKE I MADE TODAY— A BOY ASKED ME FOR SOME ETHER IN CAPSULES AND I GAVE HIM SPIRITS OF AMMONIA! I CAN'T UNDERSTAND HOW IT HAPPENED!

HANCE TO WIN PRIZE AND LETTER

PPORTUNITY PRESENTED IN OUR THRIFT AND STORY CONTESTS

BY AUNT DOLLY

Ten points for four lines. Four ttle insignificant lines on the sub-et of thrift. Wise spending, wise ving, economical use of time. hat could be pleasanter than com-sing jingles, snappy, stay-in-the-ind poems that may help some y or girl to get on their feet. r one thing is sure, if you can't ve, there's no use earning money. rogress is the outstanding law of fe. Better remember this, and try t our Thrift Jingle Contest, now full swing. You will find count-ss rhymes in this issue, submit-d by livewire poets, who are tak-g advantage of our special contest fer. Ten points for all jingles ublished, and five for those that re not. At the close of our con-st, all poems printed in our thrift olumn will be judged, and the best ngle selected. The winning author ill receive an additional twenty oints.

And here's one for story writers. ellers of yarns, true and other-ise, will have a chance to test their alent. No matter where you may ve, or who you may be, if you can rite short stories you have an ex-ellent opportunity to sell your ares. We are offering ten points r published material, five for sec-nd-class yarns, and two and one-alf for stories falling in the B di-ision. Our rules are as follows: ou may write on any subject you ish, but please let us know the ivision your story is intended for, unior or senior. Let us have your ull name, age, address, school, and rade. There is a word limit of 50. Also be sure to type manu-cripts whenever it is possible. Keep our stuff bright and clean-cut. teer away from morbidness; the orld has enough of it, without laying up tragedies. Watch plot onstruction and flowery expres-ions.

Words are magical things; they ither tear down or build up. Some imes an overdose is worse than revity. Therefore, take the hint; opy-read your material carefully. o over it, not once, but many imes. Look for weak spots, then liminate them.

Also remember the jim-crack story udged from among those published, rill receive an additional forty oints at the close of our contest. nd this means not only a cash rize, but your literary, letter and membership card as well.

Line up, gang! Grab your ink-rell and give three whoops and a iger for our short-story contest.

Papa Bear threw the bed covers back with a loud puffing sound. "My specs," he grumbled, feeling among the pillows. "Bless my heart. Goldilocks, where are my specks? I'm blind as a bat after sleeping so long."

Lila-Lee pressed close to Gandy-Goose. "He hasn't seen us," she whispered; "shall we run?" The Rabbit shook his head, and nudged the fish. "Stay where you are. Bears don't like to have people leave; they are most particular."

"Well," began Squirmy, "I don't like his looks, but I suppose we're in for it."

"Ah, ha," cried Papa Bear, "here are my glasses, "and he put them on upside down, never looking through the rims at all. Suddenly he discovered Cinderella and Lila-Lee. "Girls," he growled, "I don't like 'em. Take 'em away, Rabbit; they spoil my food."

The fish puffed out his silver chest. "You mind your biz," he said; "if you make Lila cry, we'll be angry with you."

"Angry?" roared the largest bear, pulling on his trousers. "Bless me, who is talking? Where are you?"

Squirmy hid behind Gandy's tail feathers. "Find me if you can," he chuckled. The bear frowned and let out a growl that sent Rabbit scurrying beside Lila-Lee. "No foolishness," he warned, "especially when I'm sleepy. Where's my porridge, Goldie? I hope there's cream, and that middle-sized bear, where is he?"

"Washing my paws," said a deep voice, and a very slick-looking creature with hair parted in the middle of his head, strode toward them. He wore a white shirt with blue stripes, baggy trousers and a geranium in his third buttonhole.

"Howdy?" he said to the strange group clustered in the door way. "I wish you'd go 'way; we want to eat." Goldilocks apologized for their rudeness, but Lila-Lee was only too happy to leave. She gave Baby Bear a kiss, then ran into the dark tunnel, with Squirmy leaping close beside her.

"Golly," he said, fumbling for his watch. "I've had enough of bears. How cross they are. Hump yourself, Rabbit; let's find Alice, that is, if she isn't fond of cooking things." A thin high voice interrupted him:

"Ha! Ha! you make me giggle,
My eyes are wet with tears.
I like to see you squirm about
In strange and tourtured fears.

For you'd be more than pretty,
Upon a china dish, with taters
Brown, and salad green, piled
Round our little fish!

A cucumber, so plump and white
Sliced on your dimpled side,
Would help to still your nimble tongue,
And check your stubborn pride!

"Hump," said Squirmy, "it's still with us."

"What?" asked the Rabbit. "This is very strange. Whatever it is, I don't like it. I never did like things I couldn't see. Once I fell in a trap covered with leaves."

"This is worse than a trap," whispered the fish; "It's a key that can make faces like old sixty, and dump you wherever it wishes. It's always hungry, too, and especially fond of fish."

"Thank goodness," said the Rabbit, "then I'm safe."

"Selfish," fumbled Gandy-Goose, "you can't expect to be lucky feeling like that."

"Well," said the Rabbit, "we don't fuss and scold. Doubtless you are right. Dear, dear, here we are." The tunnel suddenly ended in a bright and glittering door. On its surface Gandy-Goose and the trembling fish saw themselves for the first time. It was a looking glass.

THRIFT JINGLES

A penny for pennies,
A dime and dime
Put them in the bank
They grow into many times.—[Esther Mansfield, Hollywood.

A well-known adage to all of you
I've found out lately is very true:
That when we save a dime
We earn it, every time!

When I get money in the mail
I always must relate;
"Cast your bread upon the water
And it will come back, cake!"
Nickel, Nickel, dollar!
Where do you wander?
Up the street and to the bank?
Nickel, nickel, dollar!—[Helen Siebenthal, Morenci, Ariz.

Be safe and save
Be your creed.
Save and be safe
Be your deed.—[Margaret Blaettler, Puente.

When Johnny had some money,
He put it in the bank;
When he became a millionaire,
He had himself to thank.—[Alice Ginsburg, Garfield High School.

Save and Save, and save until
The day when times are rough
Then you can laugh at bills,
For you have money enough.—[Scott Crosby, Beverly Hills.

They say that eating an apple a day
Will keep the doctor away
But saving a penny or more
Will keep the gray wolf from the door.—[Ted Seitz, Tugunga.

Are you the type
That spends what you earn;
If you are
Your doom will come in turn.—[Edward Benedict, Hollywood.

Tuck away some money
Each day a wee bit more—
Don't you feel vastly different
When your spirits begin to soar.—[Jack Hardie, Pontana.

Eddie had some pennies,
So he saved up for a dime,
That grew to a quarter
In a very short time.—[Ed Shultz, Pasadena.

"Save us, save us,"
The pennies cry,
"For if you save us
You will not sigh."—[Dora Truel, Los Angeles.

MOTHER GOOSE REVISED

Ring around a savings bank
Vaults are full of honey,
Four and twenty sixpence
Is quite a lot o' money.

Old Mother Hubbard went to her cupboard
Only to find it bare!
While I've been slavin' if I'd been savin'
There'd have been plenty there!

Little Boy Blue
Come save your dime,
It'll grow to a dollar
If you'll give it time.—[Evangeline E. Marleau, Compton.

You may hate to skimp and save,
When those about you freely spend,
But when tempted, stop to weigh
It's worth, and you'll do well, my friend.—[Virginia Lee Clay, Ontario.

Save today,
Have tomorrow.
Wasting brings
Naught but sorrow.
Dollars, quarters,
Nickels, dimes
Come from making
Up these rhymes.
Every dime
You've thrown away,
You'll wish you had,
Some rainy day. — [Jack Hardie, Pontana.

Save, and be happy;
Spend, and incure many debts;
Hold onto your purse!
And you'll have no regrets.—[Virginia Lee Clay, Ontario

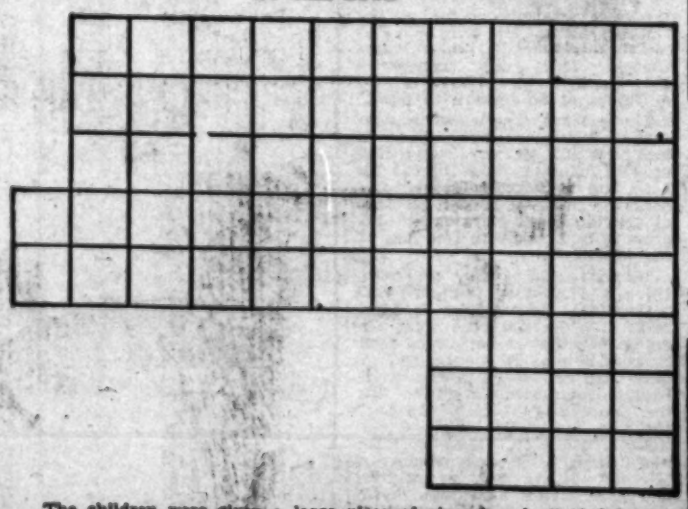
The Christmas Gingerbread

BY SAM LOYD



The children were given a large piece of gingerbread, divided into many small squares so that it could be broken off in bits and distributed. One of the youngsters, a greedy lad, I regret to say, found the goody first and ate a number of the squares, leaving only the arrangement shown above. As can be seen, there are just sixty-four squares of gingerbread left in the piece.

To punish the child for his greediness, his uncle sternly told him that he could have no more gingerbread, or any other Christmas treat, until he had shown how to divide the piece that was left by cutting along the lines between small squares, into two pieces that would fit together to make a perfect square, eight by eight of the small ones.

I am happy to record that the youth, who was clever at puzzles, solved his problem and enjoyed the rest of his Christmas in the usual manner. If the happiness of your Christmas Day should depend on your succeeding where he did—which happily it does not—could you save the situation? See if by looking at the design you can trace the proper cuts with your eye before trying to make the actual division. It is a very pretty and ingenious problem in the division of squares.

BURGESS BEDTIME STORIES

BOBBY COON GROWS ANGRY

BY THORNTON W. BURGESS

Disappointment often will Make short tempers shorter still.
—Old Mother Nature.

Inside a hollow log crouched Whitefoot and Wood Mouse. It was a small log and it was a very small hollow. Whitefoot had darted into it through a knothole that was just big enough for him to squeeze through. "It's a lucky thing for me that this old log was right handy," said Whitefoot to himself as he pulled his long tail in after him. "Bobby Coon would have had me, I'm afraid, if this old log hadn't been right here."

A moment later Whitefoot was by no means sure that Booby Coon wouldn't have him anyway. Bobby had seen just where he went. He came over to the old log and sniffed at the knothole. Of course, he got his nose full of the scent of Mouse. That scent was so strong that Bobby knew that Whitefoot couldn't be very far inside that hollow log. He suspected that it was a small hollow.

"I wonder if I could pull him out of there. If I can once get my claws into him he'll come out," muttered Bobby.

So he thrust in through the knothole one of his paws, which was very like a hand. Then he began to feel about. He felt all around very carefully. Once something smooth and round slipped out from under his fingers. He knew what it was, it was Whitefoot's tail. He knew then that that hollow was so small that Whitefoot was having hard work to keep out of reach. Two or three times he felt the touch of fur, but there was nothing he could get hold of. It was very exasperating. Yes, indeed, it was very exasperating. He pulled his arm out. "Come out of there!" he commanded. "I'll get you anyway, so you may as well save me the trouble of pulling you out."

Of course, Whitefoot didn't come out. He simply tried to make himself smaller than ever. He was terribly frightened. How he did wish that that hollow was just a little bit larger. If he could only have had another inch he would have felt entire safe. How he did wish he could shrink! Yes, Whitefoot was a badly scared little Mouse.

Bobby Coon reached in with his other arm and felt about as before. He felt and felt, this way and that way. As before, he just touched Whitefoot once or twice. And then something happened. Bobby Coon gave a yelp of pain and yanked

Puzzle: Find the Four Missing Men

Match Squares

Above we see Mr. Alligator pointing out to Mr. Goat how fifteen matches may be formed into five squares. This is of itself, of course, no puzzle at all. But Mr. Goat, who is a pretty smart person himself, wants Mr. Alligator to take away only three of the matches and leave only three squares—the three remaining being of the same size as the original ones. Of course the matches may not be rearranged—just take away three without moving any of the others, leaving three squares and no more. It is not so easy as it might appear, for the solution is not apparent at first glance.

We hear about people
  Who have the grandest things Happen to them
  Like falling heir
To a million
  Or striking oil
Or getting movie contracts.
  And so we feel
Very despondent
  To think that nothing
Ever happens to us
  But that we just go on
From day to day
  And never fall heir
To anything.
  And yet when we think
Of the misfortunes
  That befall some people
It makes us feel brimful
  Of thanks-giving
And we can add contentment
  To our store
Of vast treasures.

POINT-WINNING STORIES OF WEEK

So many excellent manuscripts have been received in our short-story contest that we are publishing a double-decker this Sunday. One is for seniors, "In the Swim," by Alex Melancon, our star writer in Louisiana, and the other, "The Tale of the Wee Shadow Boy," is for juniors, by an up-and-coming junior contributor. The two tales should serve as an eye-opener. Alex is 17; Betty is 13. Consider their talent!

THE TALE OF THE WEE SHADOW BOY

By Betty Violet Binkley, 13 years of age, Eagle Rock High School. Illustrated by Bob Depew, Eagle Rock.

Once, not so very long ago, far away in the Land of the Shadow People, there lived a little fellow called Dickee Dee, the Wee Small Shadow. Everyday the Old Man of the Shadow Gate would send one of his people out into the Big World to be some child's shadow playmate, and every day Dickee Dee would ask, "Isn't there someone that wants a wee, small shadow like me?" But the Old Man would only smile and shake his head.

"No one wants a wee, small shadow like you," teased the other shadows.

So one day Dickee Dee decided to run away. He ran and he ran and he ran 'til he came to the Great City. But there it was so dark and friendless that the Wee Small Shadow hurried away as fast as he could. Soon he came to a beautiful street lined with big houses and children p laying on the lawns.

"I will go and play with these children," thought Dickee Dee, but they cried out to him as he came near, "Go 'way! Go 'way! We don't want any such small shadows as you." So he turned and walked sadly away. He walked and walked and walked until he came to the Sparkling Brook which gurgled along under the trees alongside of the road. As Dickee Dee stopped to drink, he heard a queer sound. He turned around and there in the shade of a huge toadstool sat a tiny rag doll, crying as if her raggedy heart would break.

"What's the matter?" asked Dickee Dee, but the doll kept right on crying.

"Are you lost?" he politely inquired. The doll didn't answer.

"How can you expect me to help you if you will not tell me what's the matter?" roared Dickee Dee. "What's your name?"

"My name is Audee-Wodee-Wee, the Tiny Rag Doll," she said in a

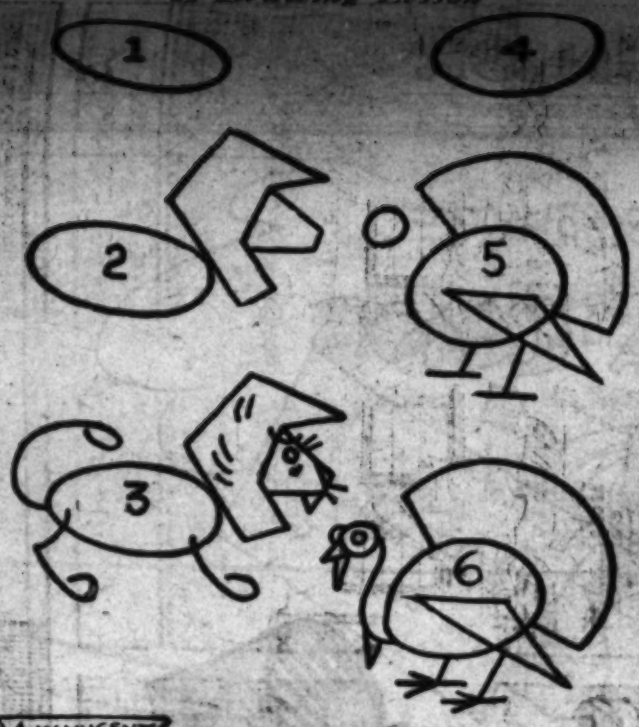
A Drawing Lesson



A. W. NUGENT

The drawings above show how the artist "builds up" the pictures of animals. Nos. 1, 2 and 3 show how to draw a lion; Nos. 4, 5 and 6 how to draw a turkey. Try copying these pictures and then see what you can do by yourself, using this system of building up by means of circles and lines. You can shade and color the drawings when you have finished.

LETTER BOX

Dearest Pal:

Your "Magic City" is delicious. It's like ice cream and cake. I've never read anything like it before; how I do gobble it up. It makes me laugh every time I read about those three silly, yet lovable creatures, Squirmy, Gandy-Goose and dear little Lila-Lee. The story grows more exciting each Sunday. In fact, I get scolded by Grandpa, because I rush out on the porch before it is light, to get The Times. By and by, after he sits out in the sun, he forgives me, because I read him all about the "Magic City" and he laughs as hard as I do.

Mother wants to know if it is in book form. She wants to send three copies back east. And please, Aunt Dolly, could I buy a complete set of them from the very first? I have a cousin who missed the first issues, and my scrapbook is almost torn to pieces, my friends look it over so much.

Perhaps you would like to know about a game we play in school, and call the "Magic City." We play it this way, sort of like charades: Some one walks in front of a line of playmates, acting and talking as Gandy-Goose does; or may be they are Squirmy or Cross-Patch. I was Lila-Lee, spinning in the tower and no one guessed it. Then I was the fish, swimming in the pool. Roger who is 10, and mighty clever, made up a lot of funny rhymes about everyone and drew wrinkles on his forehead. It took us ten minutes to know he was the Magic Key.

My, this letter is long, but I wanted to tell you how we all love your wonderful story. Please write it forever and ever; and when you get to the end of this book, write another one. What I mean is, have it sort of like the Oz stories, only I like yours better—it's funnier. It just makes me giggle until my sides ache. I'm going to make some fudge, so will say good-night.

With lots of love,
  Your loving niece,
[Signed]
  MARGEY BROWN.

My dear Aunt Dolly:

I was quite pleased to get your tips, and you may be sure that I will take two of the hints. It made me very sad to realize that I never possessed any poetic abilities, but who knows? I may develop some just to enter that contest.

See what your dare is bringing you, just see! I have a plan to write you up a number of stories,

WHAT'S YOUR HOBBY

COLLECTING AUTOGRAPHS

Dear Aunt Dolly:

Like most boys and girls, I have a hobby, and a most interesting one it is. My hobby is collecting autographs.

About a year ago I became interested in the works of Rudyard Kipling, and I wondered how I could obtain a souvenir from him. Finally, it occurred to me I could write and request his autograph. I wrote, and inclosed a dime for return postage. About a month later I received his autograph. It was written out on a tiny piece of paper, but you may be sure I was very proud of it. Since then, I have added many autographs to my collection, as those of Thomas Edison, Charles Curtis, William H. Taft, and many other eminent authors and statesmen.

I would suggest when writing for autographs one should inclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope, and also to be very careful about the spelling and punctuation of the letter. You should never be disappointed if you do not receive a reply, for often busy men have no time to answer requests for their autographs.

My thoughts are working overtime,
  My pen is black with ink

  My well-known writing sprees.

HERE'S ALL ABOUT OUR POINT SYSTEM

Has everyone a thorough understanding of The Junior Times point system? If not, the following information will help you out. All art and literary work falls, as a rule, in one or two classes. The cream stuff, the material being held for future use, is listed in the "A" group, whereas stories, poems and drawings that are not quite up to the standard, are listed in our "B" division. Should your work be carelessly done, and effort mark low, your name will not appear in our honor roll at all.

Please remember that all manuscripts and drawings must have your full name, age, address, school and grade placed upon it. This is most important. Also write on one side of paper only, using ink, not pencil. If you are submitting art work, use white bristol board and black ink only. No crayons or water-color sketches are accepted. The following is a table of points, showing exactly what you may expect if your work comes up to the scratch:

LITERARY DIVISION

Stories, poems, editorials, book reviews, articles of interest, exceptionally clever letters, 10 points each.

ART DIVISION

Front-page drawings, 15 points.
Comic strips, 10 points.
One, two and three-column cuts, 10 points.
Mazes and puzzles, 10 points.
Editorial cartoons, 10 points.

You must remember, of course, that only half the full number of points is awarded "A" contributors. They receive the other half when their material goes to press.

Thirty points win you a cash prize of $2.

Sixty points means another check, of course, with your felt letter and membership card in the special division to which you wish to belong. Three hundred points wins that gold star, the apple of your eye. When your precious emblem gleams in your lapel, you can count it as a diploma, a reference of the highest caliber from the school of hard, practical knocks. In other words, possessing this star, means you have had wide experience as an author or artist.

WHAT JUNIORS ARE THINKING ABOUT

LOST TIME IS NEVER FOUND

By Jane L. Sitherwood, 15 Years of Age, Redondo Union High School

When people are wasting time it never seems to bother them. But when they need time they never can find it. If people would use the time for doing something good they would want more time and would never waste a minute. Keep busy, it will keep you out of trouble.

Children that waste time when they are young will continue to do so when they are grown. The parents of such children did not make them use their time. Probably the children would sit and look out of the window for hours, instead of doing their school work. On the way home they would play and take their time.

Children do not know what time is until they get into school and have to work to be promoted. Then when they get home they have school work and home work to do. Work has never killed anyone. Remember lost time can never be found.

Nearly 140 delegates from forty-two countries attended the recent triennial congress of the International Spiritualists' Federation at London.

EVERYDAY ENGLISH

By Grace W. Hall, A.B., A.M.

LESSON XV. WORDS THAT FREQUENTLY GIVE TROUBLE

(1.) Balance. Remainder.

Balance means to have equal weight on each side, as the scales balance. Please balance the account.

Remainder. The portion of a thing remaining or left after separation and removal of a part. We had holiday the remainder of the week. The remainder of the evening was very pleasantly spent.

(2.) Avocation and Vocation.

Vocation applies to our regular business. Avocation engages a person's attention when he is called away from his regular business. "A" is a prefix meaning from.

Smith's vocation is that of a merchant. His avocation is fishing.

(3.) Further and Farther.

Farther is used generally of distance (literal or figurative.) Further, of something additional. He sailed to the farther shore. You wait for further notice. The same applies to farthest and furthest.

(4.) Party and Person.

The witness said that he saw a short party (meaning person) go over the bridge. He meant a person. It takes several persons to make a party.

(5.) "I have got" and "I have."

Possession is completely expressed by "have." "Get" expresses attainment by voluntary exertion. I have $5, means that I have $5 in possession. "I have got $5" means that I secured it by hard work.

(6.) "Differ with" and "Differ from." The authority is on the side of "differ from." I differ from my neighbors.

(7.) Name and Mention.

Name is properly used in the sense of giving a name to. They named the child John. I never mentioned the matter to anyone.

HOW TO MAKE BEAD FLOWERS

ARTICLE II

Dorothy Levy, Age 14½ Years Los Angeles

Materials: One bunch white opaque beads, one green, one bunch each of blue, lavender and pink, or any other three colors; three rhinestones, white or colored, for trimmings.

On a seventeen-inch wire put one blue bead. Slip to center of wire. Put one end of wire through bead. Pull tight, keeping bead in center. Put on two beads. Put other end of wire through them. Pull tight. Make a row each of three, four, five and six blue beads. Make a row each of three blue, one white, three blue, two blue, two white, two blue; one blue, three white, one blue, four white; three white, two white, and one white. Make four other petals. Put petals together by twisting wire several times. Spread petals out and bend slightly back. Attach rhinestones to ten-inch wire and fasten in center of flower by twisting wires about petals. Twist wire with stem to the end. Make two other flowers each of a different color.

Make leaves in the same manner as petals, but only going to six beads, instead of seven. Make nine leaves. Twist together in sprigs of three. Put bouquet together. Wind with wire. Clip stems off evenly. Stems may be wrapped in green stemming tissue. The bouquet may be made up of more flowers. Each additional flower calls for one extra sprig of leaves.

squeeky ragged voice, "and I am crying because there aren't any shadows small enough to fit me."

"Well," said Dickee, "my name is Dickee Dee, the Wee Small Shadow and I've just been looking for someone to be a shadow to. So if you want me to, I'll be your shadow."

The Tiny Rag Doll clapped her raggedy hands in delight.

"That will be just lovely, for you are just my size and I am just yours."

So all through the long summer the doll and the shadow played with the birds and the bees and the butterflies out in the lovely country. When winter began to come on, Peter, the Big Bird took them on his back to a warm country and brought them back next summer. So I hope you will be as happy with your shadow as Audee-Wodee-Wee, the Tiny Rag Doll was with her Dickee Dee, the Wee Small Shadow.

IN THE SWIM

By Alex Melaneon

Two miles offshore, Ginn Gurney fell into the waters of the lake. The darkness made it impossible for his companions to notice his disappearance from the deck of the speeding boat, and his cries were covered by the roar of the engine. Soon the powerful craft was beyond hearing, its lights unseen.

For many minutes panic took the better of his reason, and he struggled wildly, sinking beneath the waves, then emerging free of them, and swallowing much water in the process. The one thought occupied his mind: "Nobody can help me. Nobody can help me."

After a while he grew more clear-headed, and saw fully the seriousness of his situation. But that merely made matters worse, for fright seized him again, and he started threshing the water blindly, a vague idea urging him to cover distance as fast as possible. The pace was too much for his muscles, and soon he was laboring to remain on the surface. Treading water while his breath returned, he reined his faculties, and attempted to reason.

A glance at every point around him showed there were lights in only one place, and where lights were, so was the shore, he told himself. He realized he had been swimming away from it.

"Nobody can help me," the thought returned. But with an effort, he changed it to: "Nobody but myself."

He turned toward the lights, and pushed through the water, keeping as low as he could. Each succeeding wave lifted him up, and he dropped into the following troughs with maddening regularity. Up and down. Up and down. It seemed as though he were stationary, and only the waves moving.

Thoughts came to him, thoughts trivial and serious. The tennis game that morning which had almost been his until the final set; what had caused him to slump in the end, and lose it? In the office last Friday, Mr. Belcher had said: "You're a good boy, but you can't go far. You drop out just before the battle's won. You have the talent, but not the will to carry through."

"Haven't the will to carry through." The lights did not change, he seemed to make no headway at all. Up and down. The waves lifted him, cast him low. "Haven't the will to carry through." His arm muscles were tiring, his body feeling soggy.

On and on. On and on. Thoughts rushing through his head, the water rushing past his body. Those two facts stood out plainly, all the rest was blank. His arms and legs moved mechanically, he no longer thought about their movement. Even the lights on the shore seemed as things of no concern to him.

The moment came when his arms ceased their paddling, when his legs grew still. A wave tossed him up, the following crest covered his head, and he choked as he went under. The sense of sudden pressure at his lungs and ears caused his arms to beat wildly to free him of the water.

"Haven't the will to carry through." Another thought cast that aside. "Must make it. Must make it." He did not want to drown, now that he had tasted a bit of what it was. He wanted to live, never had he wanted to so strongly. His brain sent a call to his tired muscles: "Go on! Go on!" His arms moved, his legs beat the water. "Move on. Move on." He was numbed of all other thoughts. "Go on." It was as if his faculties had been frozen, and that desire crystallized into a command that must be obeyed until the end.

Once or twice his arms ceased their flailing, once or twice he swallowed water. The inward cold started the message flying through his fibers. "Go on. Go on."

"Haven't the will to carry through." He'd show them. He'd show them, old Belcher and the others. He could carry through!

"I'll make it!" he gasped, as the lights seemed to rush toward him at last. "I'll make it!"

But it was not only the shore he meant. Something in him had been developed by his struggle. It was the will to carry through.

AUNT DOLLY'S OWN DIARY

It is bitter cold. A fine snow is falling over the Hudson, and jaunty blocks of ice are forming about smaller vessels lying inland. The streets are coated with white; motors are honking; dim lights showing overhead. Trees growing beside the water look strangely naked and forlorn, except where ice has crusted them, and then they take on a Cinderella beauty.

Had a long walk after school, which did me a world of good. Thoughts raced like wine through my brain. A dozen stories shaped up, and by the time I had made my way through the poorer section of New York, jostling through tenement shops, I had seized upon a great idea. "A series of articles," thought I, "entitled, 'The Other Side of the Fence,' might sell. No sooner was the idea devised than I bought paper and pencil, and dashed off a couple of them in one of the lounging rooms. I liked my work immensely; these tabloid editorials dealing with the curious, everyday people about me, shabby men in bulging coats, holding weeping babies, tired mothers with sacks of bread and vegetables under their arms, painted girls with thin coats and high heels.

While I was enthused and filled with courage, I dashed into the nearest newspaper, and after interminable hours, contacted an editor who was a grumpy beast. He peered at me over gold-rimmed spectacles, and told me to run home to mamma. I could have slaughtered the gent where he stood. Tears came into my eyes. Don't know why; disappointment, I guess. It was such a cruel turn-down. He might have been pleasant at least. I backed away from him, and found myself in a heavy snowstorm, with a raging wind. Thoughts of a warm fire and dinner tugged me toward the subway, but something else, that flair and love of a good scrap, drove me on. I made the next paper, and after endless hours, during which I said I was everyone from Bernhardt to my grandmother, I finally crashed the inner sanctum. I found a more kindly editor; a fussy old man, with a tuft of whiskers on the top of a very shiny head. He hemmed and bawed, and chewed on his cigar, and finally said: "It has possibilities, but does not fit our immediate need . . ." and so on. He talked gently and kindly, and said he had a daughter of his own, but it didn't make any sense to me. My heart was cold as the snow outside. I thanked him, and escaped without disgracing myself. Years afterward, he said he never saw anyone smile such a frozen smile. No wonder, if he had known how hurt and crushed I was.

I found myself on Broadway once more, with a high gale ripping around Forty-second street. Everyone was hurrying to get out of it, but I was oblivious of discomfort. I walked for blocks, with snow oozing down my collar, then automatically, turned in at the next newspaper office. I'll admit I felt choky as I went up in the elevator. I could hardly say, "Two, please" . . . When I stepped out I dropped my old bluff and said in a very meek tone of voice, "I am So-and-So, and may I see the editor?" Just then he came hurling through the door, almost into my arms. Perhaps the blank surprise; the inner shrinking I felt, caught his attention. Anyway, he was a dear, and invited me into the sanctum of sanctums. He read my articles and "hummed" a good deal, then pushed a bell. A red-headed, grinning youngster appeared, who grabbed the proffered papers. I heard this kindly wizard say something about a certain city editor, and a particular edition, but it meant nothing to me. I was stunned. He stood up, drew on his gloves, and said, "We'll try them out and mail you a check. If they go over, you can give us this column as a regular feature." I gaped and stared, and felt an irresistible impulse to catch hold of this adorable gentleman and give him a gigantic hug, but common sense soon came to my rescue. I mumbled something about being grateful, and he wished me success. I was too happy to speak. I walked on amber clouds and rosy heights, oblivious to wind and snow and howling blizzards. What did I care; once more I had won on my own!

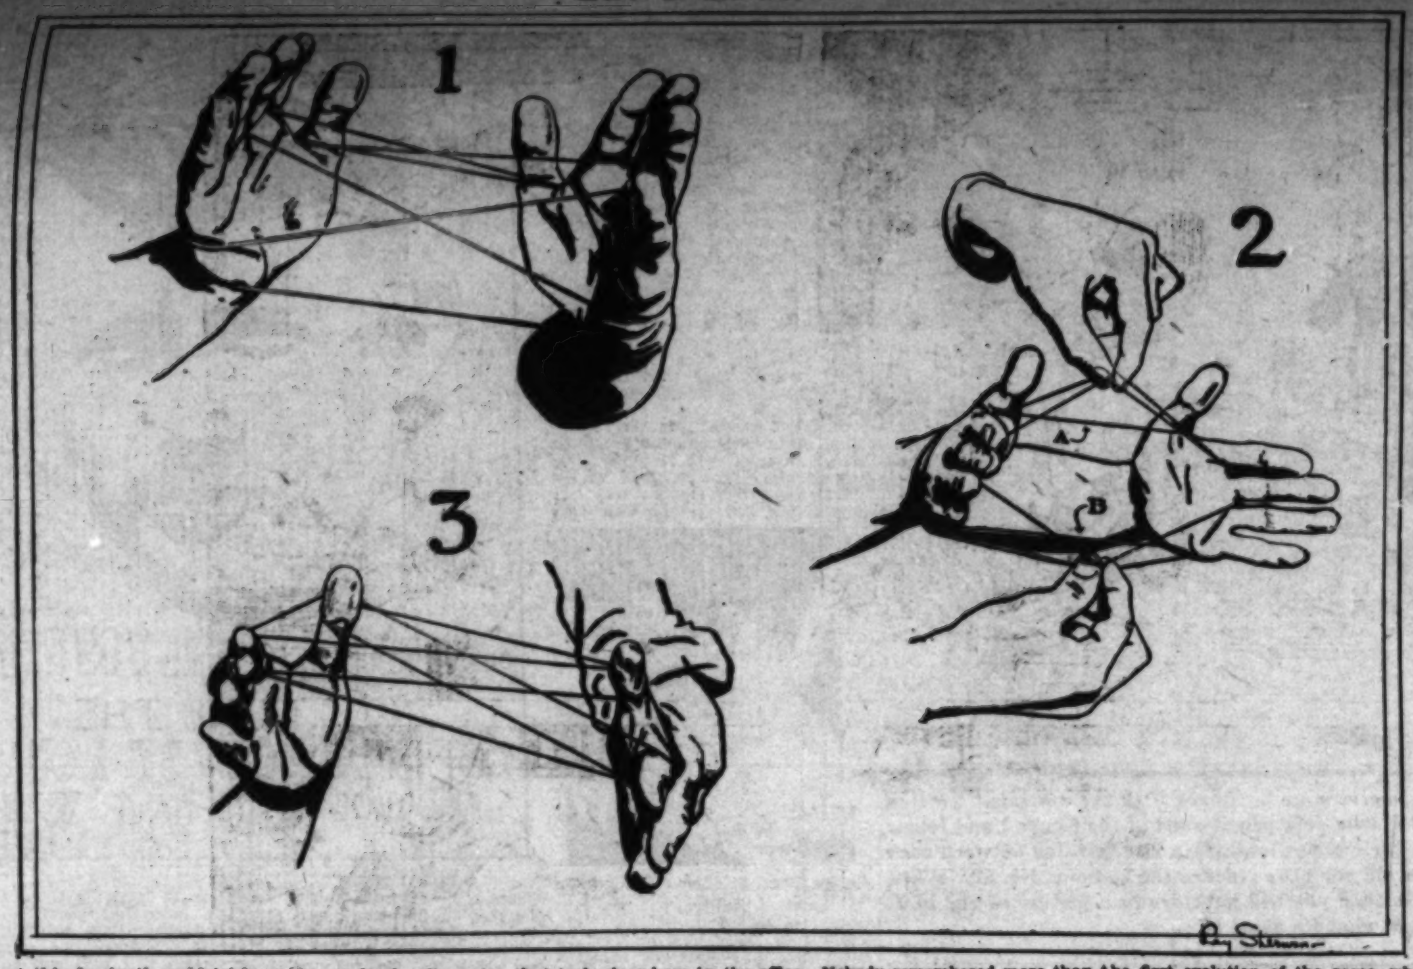
Cat's Cradle



We present this fascinating old trick as the result of a discussion that took place here in the office. Nobody remembered more than the first evolution of the game, which we give here. We hope that our readers will recall some of the other complications, for as we remember it the game was productive of some beautiful tricks. Here is the way you begin it:

Take a piece of cord about three feet long and make it into a loop. Pass this loop around your hands, making a turn around each hand. Then hold the hands with their palms facing each other and pass the middle fingers of each hand under the loops around the opposite hands. Pull the hands apart and you will get the figure shown in Fig. No. 1.

Now have a friend take the strings at the points where they cross at the sides, drawing them apart as shown in Fig. No. 2. Let the friend pass her hands under the two strings marked A and B in the same figure, and lift the whole arrangement from your fingers, at the same time spreading her forefingers and thumbs apart. If this maneuver is executed correctly the result will be as shown in Fig. No. 3. This, as we recall it, is the first evolution.

That's as far as we could go. However, we feel that "Cat's Cradle," far from being a children's game, is capable of many interesting variations that young and old alike can enjoy.

his arm out of there in a hurry. Whitefoot had bitten one of Bobby's fingers. Yes, sir, Whitefoot had used his sharp little teeth.

"I wonder if I could pull him out of there"

My, such a rage as Bobby Coon flew into! He snarled and growled and threatened to do all sorts of dreadful things to Whitefoot. But Whitefoot noticed that he didn't put his arm in there again. Then Bobby began to claw at that old log. He was trying to tear it apart. But he soon found he couldn't do this. That old log was not old enough and decayed enough. Then he tried to roll it over. He thought there might be an opening on the under side. He pulled and he hauled and he hauled and he pulled. As I said before, the log was a small one. Bobby found that he could move it. It wasn't heavy. Presently it suddenly rolled over so that the knothole was down against the ground. Whitefoot was a prisoner.

"If I can't get in you can't get out," growled Bobby Coon, and licked the finger that Whitefoot had bitten. Then, very well satisfied with what he had done, Bobby Coon headed for the Laughing Brook to wash his hands, for you know Bobby Coon is very neat.

"I'll come back by and by," muttered Bobby to himself, "and have another try for that Wood Mouse."

BOBBY COON MEETS CUBBY BEAR

BY THORNTON W. BURGESS

Suspect the gift too freely offered;
Find first the reason it is proffered.
—Old Mother Nature

Bobby Coon had gone over to the Laughing Brook. Bobby is very fond of the Laughing Brook. He loves to play in the water. He loves to catch fish and he likes to eat them as well as he likes to catch them. He is never happier than when he is prowling along the bank of the Laughing Brook.

Now Bobby Coon is a happy-go-lucky fellow. By the time he reached the Laughing Brook he had forgotten all about Whitefoot, the Wood Mouse, whom he had vainly tried to get out of the hollow log. He washed his hands, combed his hair and then decided he would see if he could catch a few minnows in a certain little pool. He knew all about that little pool. He knew that the minnows dearly loved to play about in it where it was very shallow. If one were quick enough a minnow could be scooped out of that little pool. Bobby had a favorite spot from which he fished. He stole to this very softly. The moonlight lay on the little pool, but Bobby was in the blackest of black shadows. Bobby had been there only a little while when a school of minnows began to play about. They would come to the surface and make little rings in the water. Bobby's eyes sparkled. Fish would be better than a Wood Mouse. Just as Bobby was about to try for one of those minnows he heard the shuffling of feet and out on the bank stepped Cubby Bear. In the moonlight he looked like a living Black Shadow. When he stepped out that way all the minnows disappeared in a hurry. Bobby Coon was provoked. He wasn't afraid of Cubby Bear. He wouldn't want to get in a fight with Cubby, but Cubby was not yet big enough for Bobby to respect him, as he did great big Buster Bear. Bobby stepped out of his hiding-place.

"What do you mean by spoiling my fishing?" he demanded angrily.

Cubby Bear merely grinned. "Why didn't you tell me you were fishing?" said he. "How do you suppose that I knew you were fishing? Did you get any fish?"

"No," replied Bobby shortly. "I would have if you hadn't come along and frightened them all away. What right have you to go prowling around and meddling with other people's business?"

Cubby was feeling good-natured. He usually is good natured. "Next time," said he, "you let me know when you're fishing and I'll keep away. I like fish myself. Fish are very nice eating. I would rather have some nice tender Mice, but fish will do very well."

At the mention of Mice Bobby Coon suddenly remembered Whitefoot the Wood Mouse. A plan suddenly popped into his head. "Would you really like a Mouse if you could get it?" said he.

Cubby's eyes sparkled. "Would I?" he explained. "I should say I would!" Cubby licked his lips.

"If I show you where there is one will you keep away from the Laughing Brook until I am through fishing?" Bobby asked.

Cubby Bear looked at Bobby a little suspiciously. "If you know where there is one why don't you get one yourself?" he demanded.

"I can't," replied Bobby promptly. "He's in a hollow log that I can't tear open, but I think you can."

"Just show me that log!" exclaimed Cubby. "Just show me that log!"

"If I do will you promise to keep away from the Laughing Brook until I get through fishing?" demanded Bobby.

"I certainly will," replied Cubby. "It's a bargain."

of which the two mentioned are surprise. If you think you can reserve me some two-column space, I can go on indefinitely, and Charles will illustrate them for me. He wants to earn one of those letters, so be sure to give him all his credits. A gold star apiece is our mark, in fact. His address is Kentwood, La. now.

Talk about a thrill when I saw reverses! Thanks awfully for that "one and only." I shall do you some others with the same location if you wish. And as soon as I get the idea, I will dash you one story for the contest.

But don't be so welcomey in your gestures to me. That's a warning, because I will flood you so heavily you will think my other name is Mississippi. Just watch the bulge in your mail bag!

I hope that the big serial reached you safely. You did not mention it, so I feel a bit sick about it. Do tell me that it has got there, even if you did have to fill your wastebasket with it. And criticisms are always welcomed here. Don't think you can hurt me with them. I have developed a skin as thick as an elephant when it starts to pan.

[Signed] ALEX MELANCON,
Larose, La.

Dear Aunt Dolly:

Just to think I am a member of one of your wonderful clubs is enough to dream about all day. It's glorious. I want to tell you I was so happy to receive your letter that I forgot to eat my breakfast. I haven't much to say except that I'm glad, I'm glad, I'm glad, I'm glad. I ought to know how to spell it now.

Your new pal,
[Signed] JEWELL DUDLEY,
Los Angeles.

Dear Aunt Dolly:

I would like very much to join one of your Junior Times Clubs. The more I read your little paper, the more I like it. If there are any membership fees, I am willing to pay them, for I am very anxious to join your club.

I have always been quite highly praised on my story writing by my teachers and classmates. I would enjoy it very much if I could be eligible to send in some of my stories.

Hoping to hear from you soon.
Love,
[Signed] ELVIRA HUBER,
Long Beach.

Dear Aunt Dolly:

I can't wait any longer to send you this thrift jingle. I certainly like your Magic City, and I think Ed Shults is certainly clever to draw the cut-outs. You know what I think we need more of, Aunt Dolly? I think we need more paper dolls. Laura Brock used to draw such cute ones that all the little children used to want some, and even the big kids.

Can we send more than one jingle? I have written four, and I am now writing a long poem. I also have a story which I will send in soon. At school one day, we had to write an original posture poem. The teacher liked it, so I'm sending it to you. Is it all right?

You can count on me as an all-over-the-town booster.

With heaps of love,
[Signed] DORA IZUEL,
Los Angeles.

Dearest Aunt Dolly:

Every week our paper gets more interesting. And now the big contest! Last night my light went on and out oftener than it ever has before in its six-year history. In the middle of the night I'd wake up with another idea, and at 5 o'clock this morning, by starlight, I was writing thrift jingles. I've just got to earn some points 'cause I haven't a cent of Christmas money. I'm sending you the results of my "sudden inspiration" and "midnight ideas." I've a few questions to ask you. If a poem or an article is published in The Junior Times, may the writer also send his article or poem to be published in their school paper? And, as I am German, and can read and write German as well as English, I know some darling old German fairy tales and the loveliest stories for our juniors. Would it be fair if I read these stories and translated them, making them shorter, and using my own words, and send them to you as my work? I think that it would be a good idea to pass the stories on in this way that they may delight American as well as German children. Please answer real soon, 'cause I want to start working.

Lots of really truly love,
[Signed]
URSEL PETERS,
Eagle Rock.

BEDTIME STORY

CUBBY BEAR'S DISAPPOINTMENT

BY THORNTON W. BURGESS

Set not your heart on anything
Lest it but disappointment bring.
—Old Mother Nature.

Cubby Bear had his mouth all made up for a fat Wood Mouse. Bobby Coon was going to show him where it was. Of course, that Wood Mouse was none other than Whitefoot. Bobby had almost caught him and Whitefoot had escaped by darting through a knothole into an old log. Bobby had tried to get him out and couldn't. Then Bobby had rolled the log over, so that the knothole was against the ground and Whitefoot was a prisoner. Now Bobby was going to show Cubby Bear that log. You see, Cubby Bear thought that with his stout claws he might be able to tear it open.

Bobby Coon led the way, shuffling along up from the Laughing Brook. Cubby Bear shuffled along behind him. Both of them walked flat-footed, which is something very few of the little people who wear fur can do. Most of them walk on their toes. But bears and raccoons put their whole foot down touching the heel to the ground.

Cubby Bear shuffled along behind him

"Where is this mouse?" grumbled Cubby Bear, as he noticed the direction in which Bobby Coon was going.

"It's up near the sugar-house," replied Bobby Coon.

Cubby Bear said nothing, but he looked a little uneasy. You see, the last time he was up there he had been badly frightened by his father, great big Buster Bear.

Presently they reached the little clearing around the sugar-house. They stopped to make sure that the way was clear. Then Bobby Coon led the way to the little log in which he had left Whitefoot the Wood Mouse. It was a small log. Cubby Bear could pick it up easily. "I don't see any knothole," said he.

"It's underneath," explained Bobby. "I rolled the log over."

"All right, we'll roll it back," said Cubby Bear, and he did just that thing.

When the log was rolled over there was the little knothole. Cubby Bear sniffed at it. There was the fresh scent of mouse. Yes, sir, there was the fresh scent of mouse. There certainly had been a mouse in there. Cubby Bear wasted no time.

"I'll soon get that fellow out of there," said he.

He hooked his stout claws in the edge of that knothole. The wood was old and somewhat decayed around the knothole. Cubby Bear pulled. He pulled and he pulled. A splinter of wood gave way, making a crack. The scent of mouse was stronger. You should have seen Cubby go to work then. He hooked his claw in that crack and tugged and pulled and ripped back another big splinter. Bobby Coon sat close by watching. To tell the truth, Bobby was hoping that Whitefoot would jump out and try to run away. If he did Bobby Coon intended to have Whitefoot for himself.

Cubby Bear grunted and tugged and pulled and tugged and pretty soon he had opened that little hollow log so you could see all of it. There was no mouse there! No, sir, there wasn't a mouse there! All there was was the smell of mouse, and that was most tantalizing and not at all satisfying. Cubby Bear was disappointed. He was bitterly disappointed.

"Where is that mouse?" he demanded.

Bobby Coon looked puzzled. He backed off to a safe distance. "I don't know," said he. "I left him there. He was a prisoner. You saw for yourself that the log was lying with that opening against the ground. That mouse was in there when I left."

"Then why isn't he here now?" demanded Cubby.

But that was something that Bobby Coon couldn't answer. He wished he could.

Just then Cubby Bear happened to look down at the ground. Right where that old log had been there was a little shallow hole in the ground. Cubby sniffed again. He followed it along the ground with his nose. It led straight away toward the little sugar-house.

"Huh!" exclaimed Cubby in disgust. "All he had to do was dig out. He just dug right out while you were down there fishing at the Laughing Brook. If you were not so old and tough I'd take you in place of that mouse."

Bobby Coon backed away hurriedly. Then he grinned. "You mean if I were not quite so big," said he. "You don't dare try it."

"Don't I?" cried Cubby, and made a rush toward Bobby. But Bobby had taken to his heels.

GOLD---and THE MOUNTED

By James B. Hendryx

CHAPTER I

"I TELL yer the old fool's cuckoo," growled Less Hoose, glancing up with smoke-bleared eyes into the face of his employer, who stood beside the tiny camp fire over which Hoose was laboring in the preparation of supper. "He ain't done a blame' thing sence you was here a couple of weeks ago but hammer an' peck around them rocks, an' dig another hole in the sand an' fill it up agin."

Felix Martineau smiled, showing a double row of white, even teeth that contrasted sharply with the broken yellow snags that showed beneath the bristling mustache of his henchman. A rather striking figure, this Felix Martineau, with the lithe leanness of the panther, black eyes dominating a thin, ascetic face. The face was laughing now: "So ugly one, you think our friend Holt is a little touched in the head, eh?"

The other scowled as he turned the salt pork in the frying pan. "He hain't no friend of mine, nor neither yourn. He don't buy no licker off'n us, nor neither he don't even do his tradin' down to yer post. 'Druther go a hundred mile further to trade to a Company post. An' I don't think he's 'touched in the head'—I know he's loony as hell—just plumb crazy! Who'n hell ever heered of fillin' up a prospect hole?"

"What you know will never hurt you, ugly one, nor will what you think. Your self-expression must ever be a matter of deed, not thought. So, come, let us eat. See, it is already growing lighter, and when the moon rises you must be on your way."

The meal was eaten in silence. "Whur-at have I got to go to?" asked the other, as he wiped greasy hands upon his trousers. "Thought yer told me to watch Old Man Holt."

A frown swept the thin features, and Less Hoose shuddered. Martineau's words cut sharply: "This is a new thing, that you should question my authority. Do you think that brain of yours is fit to match against the brains of the police? One little slip, remember—one little word from me, and you will sojourn in Stony Mountain for more years than you have yet to live."

Cowering beside the dying fire, the other mouthed his words: "I didn't mean nothin', Martineau. Whur d'yer want me to go?"

Martineau appeared mollified. "Listen, the treaty payment has been made. The Indians have their money, and I have passed the word that the liquor will be waiting for them at the mouth of the Little Churchill. Take ten gallons from the cache, cut it to twenty, get thirty dollars a gallon for it, and return here, where I shall join you in a week or ten days. You will keep the usual 10 per cent over and above your wages, which should amply reward you for a few miles of paddling."

When Less Hoose looked up a moment later, Martineau had vanished. An ember flared into yellow flame, and beyond its fleeting radiance the spruce forest loomed black and silent as the silence of death. Less Hoose shuddered, and, throwing an armful of dry spruce upon the fire, hurriedly broke camp by the light of the flames, and a few minutes later was slowly poling his canoe through the shoulder-high rice. Not until he was well out of earshot of the shore did he mumblingly voice his thoughts: "That's the way with him, damn him—always comin' an' goin' like a ghost. An' yer never know how much he knows er how much he don't. The police don't even suspicion him. It's me takes all the resk, an' all I git out of it's a stinkin' 10 per cent! Old Man Holt's struck sunthin', all right. Gawd! If I c'd find his cache I'd pinch it off an' hit fer the States. Mebbe I kin locate it when I git back."

As the moon topped the spruce the man shoved the canoe into the open water of the small river that threaded the sedge and rice-choked lake, and, substituting a paddle for the pole, he dropped swiftly down the stream. A few hours later the light craft shot out on to the broader waters of Churchill River, skirted the bank for a few miles, and slanted across the sluggish stream to a high, rocky island, where Hoose rolled two five-gallon kegs from a deftly concealed cache, loaded them into the canoe, and proceeded down river. When moonlight blended and merged into the gray of dawn, he landed in the lee of a rocky point and, removing grub bag, frying pan, and coffee pot from the canoe, proceeded to build a fire.

Constable Kinkaid, R.C.M.P., awoke with a yawn, stretched in his blankets, and sat up. A morning mist hung low over the river, and somewhere downstream a moose splashed. He dressed, rolled his bed, and, toothbrush in

It was a wild time up in the Churchill River country, for Old Man Holt had struck it rich. Don't miss this thrilling tale of gold and adventure

Cinerarias

The Ideal Plant for the Shady Places of Your Garden

Of all the plants that bloom in the late spring and early summer there are none so colorful and gorgeous in their display of bloom as Cinerarias. The color range contained in the strain we are offering is unsurpassable. Beautiful shades of lilac, mauve, carmine, light blue, indigo, royal purple, crimson, delph blue and amethyst are only a few of the many shades in this strain. Plant them 18 inches apart, in a light, well drained soil. Strong plants in 3-inch pots, $2.00 per dozen.

REGAL LILY

This recent importation from the Orient is destined to become the favorite of all lilies. The term, regal, is well applied to this splendid flower. The Madonna lily, St. Joseph's lily and other so-called Eastern lilies are fine types, but they must all bow down before Lilium Regale, the magnificent lily of the Far East.

The flowers are white, slightly diffused with pink. The base of the throat is of a rich golden yellow which extends part way up the trumpet. The fragrance is delightful, reminding one in a slight way of the jasmine or gardenia.

Plant them 5 inches deep in the same ground with Cinerarias. When the Cinerarias have finished blooming, these beautiful lilies will follow with a fine display.

Price, each 35c. Per dozen, $3.50.

in a film you make yourself!

If all that a home movie outfit did for you was to make a living record of their childhood days, a screen biography of their early growth, it would be worth ten times its weight in platinum.

It does just that and more. It enables you to make priceless action pictures of all those you hold most dearly. It preserves for you the image of many a friend and occasion which would otherwise be swallowed up in the mists of memory. It provides you with thrilling entertainment from the moment you begin to use it.

See for yourself the great fascination of home movies. Come in and let us demonstrate them to you. We have them here, complete sets —Cine-Kodak, Kodascope and screen — that sell for as little as $140. They are so easy to operate that children use them without the slightest difficulty. "A-1" PRUNE PIE

1½ cups Globe "A1" Flour	2 tablespoons Globe "A1" Flour
½ teaspoon salt	½ cup sugar
½ cup shortening	1 teaspoon cinnamon
½ cup cold water	1 teaspoon nutmeg
1½ cups prune pulp	¼ teaspoon salt
1½ cups milk	Grated rind of a lemon
2 large eggs or 3 small ones	2 tablespoons lemon juice

SIFT flour, measure 1½ cups, add ¾ teaspoonful salt, add shortening and chop into flour until reduced to small pieces. Add cold water slowly, barely enough to make a stiff dough. Divide and roll out into two rounds, and line two nine-inch pie pans.

Wash a pound of prunes, cover with cold water, place over a slow fire and cook slowly until very tender. Drain and reserve the liquid. Remove pits and press pulp through a coarse sieve adding half a cup of the liquid, a little at a time, to soften the pulp while straining it.

Mix together the sugar, spices, ¼ teaspoon salt and 2 tablespoons flour. Add the grated lemon rind and the unbeaten eggs and mix well. Add lemon juice and 1½ cups prune pulp and mix. Last add the milk and mix well. Pour into pastry pans and place in a quick oven for 10 minutes, or until the crusts are lightly browned, then reduce temperature to moderate and bake about 30 minutes longer, or until the filling is firm in the center.

MACARONI SCALLOP

1 cup uncooked Globe "A1" Salad Macaroni	¼ cup Globe "A1" Flour
1 can peas	6 tablespoons butter
½ lb. dried beef, chipped	1½ cups hot milk (about)
½ cup bread or cracker crumbs	¼ teaspoon pepper or paprika

COOK the macaroni in plenty of boiling water for 10 minutes, drain and blanch. Drain the peas, reserve and measure the liquid. Run beef through a food chopper. Blend the flour with 4 tablespoons butter over a low fire, slowly add the liquid from the peas, then add enough hot milk to make 2 cups of liquid altogether. Stir until sauce reaches boiling point, add beef and pepper and cook about 5 minutes. Place a layer of macaroni in a buttered baking dish, add half the peas, about one-third of beef mixture, a layer of macaroni, the remaining peas, one-third of beef mixture, the rest of the macaroni and the last of the beef mixture. Top with the crumbs mixed with 2 tablespoons melter butter, place in hot oven and bake for 30 minutes, or until the crumbs are nicely browned.

hand, stepped to the water's edge. As he stooped to the water he suddenly straightened and stood sniffing the air. Again he caught it, faint but unmistakable—the odor of burning spruce. The summer had been exceptionally dry, and a vision of billowing smoke clouds shot with red flame rose before him, to be dispelled a moment later by sight of a thin spiral of smoke that rose from behind a rocky point scarce a hundred yards upstream. "Camp fire," grunted Kinkaid and, completing his toilet, glanced toward his frying pan and teapot that stood beside the ashes of his supper fire. "Guess I'll slip over and have a look-see before I eat. Probably some Injun, and he might know something about that Seal River affair."

But the man seated beside his camp fire was no Indian. Nor had the young officer anticipated the reception that awaited him, else he had not left his gun lying on top of his bed roll.

As he stepped from the scrub on to the bare rock of the jutting point, the man by the fire turned quickly, swept him with one swift glance, and with a bellow of mingled rage and fear leaped to his feet and hurled a loose rock fragment full into the front of the astounded officer. Kinkaid almost succeeded in avoiding the missile, which bounced from his left shoulder as an agonising pain shot the length of his arm. As the man stooped for another fragment, the constable was upon him, the impact of the attack sending both sprawling upon the uneven surface of the rock, striking, gouging, kicking.

Constable Kinkaid was conscious of a thrill of exaltation when he discovered that he could direct the movement of his injured arm. It was not broken, then.

Never in the four years of his service had Kinkaid seen any man fight as this one fought, with all the abandoned fury of a cornered beast. He had heard of the like before—of men crazed by the solitudes whose disordered brains impelled them to kill and to destroy. An occasional glance, as he rolled and thrashed about, into the staring, bloodshot eyes, and the parted lips flecked with white foam, convinced Kinkaid that he was dealing with a maniac, and he remembered tales of the superhuman strength of muscles directed by the brain with the lust to kill.

Nevertheless, it was a matter of lung capacity, after all. No human machine could hold that pace for long, and Kinkaid trained all his faculties toward the conservation of his own strength until the other should slow down. If he could only stop that gaping mouth through which the air was sucked in great gasping sobs. It may have been minutes, possibly only seconds—to Kinkaid it seemed hours before the rumbling came to him that the man was loser. The sharp snarls like bellows to the frantic pumping of the lungs, but the blows of the fists were less frequent, and landed with diminishing snap and poundage, and the grip of the clawlike fingers was weakening.

Gathering his strength, he drew his legs under him preparatory to leaping to his feet, when sight of the man's eyes staring past him toward the scrub caused him to turn his head for one swift glance. There was a flash of blinding light—blackness—and Constable Kinkaid sprawled, limp and face downward, upon the rock.

With a half-articulate snarl of hate, Less Hoose struggled to his feet and staggered to the canoe, which he had drawn on to the rock a few paces distant. Stooping, he picked up a rifle and swung toward the exanimate form.

"Drop that!" The command snapped, and upon the thin lips of Felix Martineau was a sneer. "What would you do, fool? Kill the young policeman?"

"Yer damn' right I'll kill him! Me settin' here bilin' my tea, an' him jumpin' on to me from behine!"

Martineau smiled. "Did my eyes deceive me? Or did I see him step from among the trees? And did I see you leap erect and hurl a rock with admirable promptitude and scarce less admirable aim. Between ourselves, ugly one, let us at least be accurate with our facts."

Across the coarse features of the hooch peddler flitted a look almost of fear. He returned the rifle to the canoe and glanced furtively into the face of his employer. "Whur was you? I thought you'd went back to the post. When I seen the damn policeman I—I thought you'd double-crossed me—thought you'd tipped 'em off to git me with the goods."

"As I have told you many times, only in case you play false with me will I put the police on your trail. Is it that you have played false, ugly one? Else why should you fear? Is it that you have withheld from me certain facts concerning Old Man Holt? Is it, perhaps, that he has really made a strike and that—"

"No, no, no! He hain't made no strike! I was plumb scairt I throwed the rock 'fore I know'd whut I was doin' an' then he was on to me, an' we fit like a couple of cats!"

Martineau nodded. "You did. And it is the best possible thing you could have done. When the young policeman wakes up, he will believe he has been in a fight with a madman."

"When he wakes up! Hain't yer goin' to finish him?"

"No. One does not with impunity kill a policeman."

"He didn't git to see you! How he seen me? He'll take out after me, an' he'll never let up till he gits me—after whut I done to him!"

"It is true, ugly one, he saw you, and your face is one a man will not soon forget." But he did not see the canoe, nor the little kegs of liquor. Insanity is not a crime. It is a misfortune. Nor is it necessarily of a permanent nature. You must depart from here for a while. The next time the policeman sees you your recovery will have been complete."

"Le's be goin'. He might come to. Whut did yer sock him with? An' how come yer was here?"

"My comings and my goings are matters not for discussion, ugly one. And your term is most appropriate. For it was a sock I hit him with—a padded stone encased in a woollen sock. I had time to prepare it as you fought upon the rock. Come, now—as you say, we must be going."

CHAPTER II

CONSTABLE KINKAID regained rationality slowly. For a long time he lay vaguely conscious of a sense of physical torture. His head ached in rhythmic pulse throbs of pain. Gradually his brain threw off its lethargy and began to function. After several attempts he sat up dizzily. The effort redoubled the pain in his head, and it seemed that every muscle in his body added its bit of torture.

The September sun beat down upon the bare rock upon which he sat, and the air rose in crinkly waves. He was conscious of a burning thirst and, crawling to the river, he buried his face to the ears and sucked in great gulps of the cold water. The process worked magic in reviving him, and again and again he thrust his head deep into the water. He stood up and surveyed his surroundings. Near by were the ashes of a fire—but not his fire. Nor were his canoe and bed roll and cooking utensils anywhere in sight.

The lunatic! He glanced swiftly about him—he remembered, now—he had been fighting, fighting as he had never fought in his life—but—how had it ended? And why was he here, alone? Very deliberately Kinkaid set about to correlate the events immediately preceding his awakening. The young constable had a mind trained to reason not only from cause to effect, but from effect back to cause. His work in the Criminal Identification Bureau—the C.I.B. of the Mounted—had repeatedly called forth the well-merited commendation of his superiors.

Constable Kinkaid consulted his watch. It was high noon. Gingerly, he explored his cranium with prodding fingers and located an extremely tender spot behind his left ear. Satisfying himself that the skull was not fractured, he endeavored to reconstruct the last few moments of his consciousness.

"He was getting tired, puffing and blowing and slowing up, and I was figuring on getting straddle of him. I lay like this, and he was partly under me. Then, I turned my head to see what he was looking at. He couldn't have reached the left side of my head, the way he lay! And he couldn't have slammed my head down on the rock, either—not without getting out from under me, and he didn't do that! No, sir! It was someone else that hit me? Who? And why? I haven't run across any evidence of crime in this section. That Seal River business was purely an Injun affair—there wasn't even any hooch mixed up in it. This patrol isn't over yet. Maybe I'll run on to something worth while between here and detachment."

Suddenly realising that he was hungry, Kinkaid made his way to his own camp. A dip in the cold water and a vigorous rub put a keen edge on his appetite, and by the time he had finished his meal his headache had disappeared. Strapping on his revolver, he returned to the scene of his encounter and thoroughly examined every inch of the ground in the hope of picking up a clew. Save the ashes of the man's camp fire, the rock yielded nothing, and scrutiny of the scrub failed to reveal a single misplaced twig or stone, and the only footprints visible in the soft ground were the prints of his own coming and going. Returning to his camp, he spent the remainder of the day in alternately applying hot bandages and rubbing his bruised shoulder.

He wrote up his diary, and as he set down the date he gazed out over the river. September fifteenth—and on June fifteenth my time will be up. And then what? I'd like to go where there was something going on. I'd like to do something—see something. Africa, maybe—Australia.

In the mid-afternoon of the following day, Constable Kinkaid ceased paddling and surveyed the north bank of the river where, in a rather pretentious clearing, a group of log buildings stood silhouetted against the sky. A motor boat lay moored to a small log landing, and two canoes were drawn up on the shingle.

Beaching his canoe beside the others, he ascended the steep clay bank and found himself face to face with a girl who awaited him in a small clump of banksian pines. She was smiling, and beneath a high-piled mass of chestnut hair violet-blue eyes were supplementing the smile of the red lips.

Kinkaid realized that he was staring. He must speak—say something—introduce himself—do anything but stand there staring into those frankly smiling eyes. "I'm Constable Kinkaid of the Mounted Police," he announced, and realised that he was waiting eagerly for a reply.

"And I'm Mary McLeod. I knew you were a policeman. I've been watching you through the glass." A sturdy brown finger tapped the binocular case that dangled from her shoulder by a strap. "I thought maybe it was some one we knew—Corporal Downey, or Inspector Clary, or one of the others."

"Do you know Corporal Downey?"

"Oh, yes. For many years. Since I was a wee baby."

"That can't be so awful many years," grinned Kinkaid.

The girl laughed. "It seems to me like a great many. I'll be twenty next month! Father was with the Company till he retired.

"You live here?" asked Kinkaid, his eyes sweeping the clearing.

"Yes, we came three years ago. We're farming." A humorous grimace accompanied the words. "Actually we raise enough potatoes and turnips and carrots and peas for our own use. And one year we ripened about five bushels of barley. I hope we won't have such good luck again very soon, because it's all got to be hulled, and then it's only good for soup—but who wants five bushels of soup?" They laughed together happily—joyously. "But we mustn't let father see us laughing about his farm. He takes it all in dead earnest. He has grand visions of broad grainfields and fat cattle and a railroad and steamboats on the river. There he is now. Come, you must meet him. He's quite deaf. You must raise your voice in speaking to him." The girl led the way toward a generous garden patch fenced with a paling of saplings. Beside the gate a huge bearded man awaited them.

"Father, this is Corporal Kinkaid of the Mounted."

"Constable Kinkaid," corrected the officer, "not Corporal."

"Eh?" The hand that had shaded the eyes was now cupped behind an ear, and the old Scot's keen eyes were upon the younger man's lips.

"I say I'm Constable Kinkaid of the Mounted Police. I'm on patrol and just stopped in."

"Aye, lad, you're welcome." A huge hand gripped Kinkaid's in a mighty grip. "Any man o' the police is welcome in the home o' Angus McLeod. Ye'll be stoppin' the night?"

The girl added her invitation to her father's: "Oh, please do! We have so few visitors. And, besides, you're tired. I could tell by the way you handled your paddle." The naive eagerness of the low, rich tones and the evident concern in the violet eyes were not lost upon Constable Kinkaid. And there was a strange new glow in his heart as he followed McLeod toward the banksian grove where rude seats had been built overlooking the river.

"Not tired," he explained in a low voice to the girl at his side. "My left shoulder is sore. I—I hurt it."

"And your forehead is cut, too—and the back of your hand. How did you get hurt?"

Before Kinkaid had time to reply they had reached the grove and McLeod was asking a volley of questions concerning friends in the police, the news of the world. The old man's affliction deadened the sound of his own voice, so that he roared the questions to which Kinkaid shouted his replies. For upward of an hour Kinkaid listened to a eulogy of the North which painted it as a land flowing not only with milk and honey, but with gold, silver, nickel, copper, potatoes, turnips, grain, timber, pulpwood, horseradish and watermelons.

"I'll show 'em ye can farin north of fifty-five! Them that claims ye canna 'is liars, or they're ognorant an' lacks vision! As the Gude Book says, Ye'll reap as ye sow—an' the sayin' wasna made for the sole benefit of Jerusalem an' Lower Canada, neither!"

As the two paused near the house, a grotesque figure approached across the clearing with a peculiar shuffling walk. "'Tis my son, young Angus," explained McLeod. "As braw a lad as ye'd find till he was four years old. Then disease took holt o' him an' left him as ye see. A moon-calf, wi' the mind o' a child in the body o' a man. 'Twould be more a blessin' than a sorrow an' the Gude Lord w'd see fit to tak' him."

The figure halted and stood regarding the two with a loose-lipped, vacant stare. McLeod spoke to him: "Augus, lad, this is Constable Kinkaid of the Police."

The boy extended a flabby hand and spoke, rounding out each word slowly and with the utmost precision, in a loud, flat, toneless voice: "How-de-do, Con-stable Kin-kaid of the Po-lice. I'm glad to see you." Then

When advised to have teeth and dentures removed, the doctor, if he be a wise one, will first make a careful examination of the patient's entire system, to determine whether or not the teeth are the cause of the trouble. Many times they are not, and the removal of them would be a needless sacrifice.

should be taken, the patient being immersed up to the breastline.

Such a warm bath will do much toward relieving the tension and relaxing the respiratory muscles.

Enemas should be given repeatedly until you are certain there is no refuse in the intestines.

Then the patient should be put to bed and propped up if breathing is difficult. Hot-water bottles should be placed to the feet and abdomen and, if possible, a free and copious perspiration induced.

Even following relief, the fast should be continued for several days. In fact, the fast is one of the finest remedies known in overcoming asthma. The chronic asthmatic should take a fast of twenty-four to forty-eight hours frequently.

There are a number of other treatments of great value in the cure of asthma. The work of the osteopath or chiropractor will do as much as can be done by the patient himself.

The electrical diathermy will furnish a great measure of relief, as well as the quartz light.

These are measures which should be followed by the asthmatic instead of the usual hypodermic or drug procedures. These are measures which have been found, in my private practice, to work with wonderful efficiency.

If there is anything further I can do for you in the solution of this problem, do not hesitate to write to me or come to my office for free consultation.

Crooked Teeth

"Why do children's teeth frequently come in crooked?"

This is a question that is often asked and one that is not quite so easy to answer. When we see children whose teeth are crooked, coming in aslant and protruding unevenly, sometimes we may account for it and sometimes not. There are cases where the jawbone itself has been affected due to long-continued, extremely severe habits of thumb-sucking, finger-biting and fist-chewing.

As a rule these are habits easily broken and the child is none the worse for them. Sometimes they extend over early childhood and up to adolescence. Then the direct cause of crooked teeth is easily pointed out.

Sometimes, as is often the case, the small imbedded embryonic teeth are crooked long before they emerge from the gums. I can give no absolutely accurate definition as to why or wherefore, except to state that it is one of the types of abnormal development frequently encountered. In some instances it is a failure of nutrition where the teeth do not receive sufficient mineral compounds to build them satisfactorily.

Milks that have been robbed of their minerals by overcooking, sterilization, extraction and various other methods of processing will sometimes account for abnormal development. The cause will often be found early in infancy.

When, however, every nutritional precaution has been used and the teeth still come in crooked there is nothing to be done except dental care. Modern dental practice can often remedy nature's defects. It is a long and painstaking process in which the teeth are gradually brought into normal line through the appliances which the dentist places on them.

Unfortunately, this type of dental reconstruction is one that calls for great technical skill and with it demands proportionate fees. However, between the dental irregularity which can be seen in so many children the choice is a wiser one to have the teeth properly cared for and the defect straightened out.

Hernia in Children

In order to understand the exact anatomy and formation of umbilical hernia, it is necessary to go back to a slight study of the embryo.

In early embryonic life the human being consists somewhat of a flattened piece of tissue. Then as development proceeds the two ends of this flattened piece of tissue join in the middle.

Close observation of the human body reveals that there is a center front line extending throughout the entire length of the body. The only point at which this line of junction is not complete is the umbilicus, the point to which the cord is attached.

This means that the umbilicus is the weak link or weak spot in all infants, and hernia takes place more frequently at this area than at any other part of the body during infancy. In most cases it is due to the excessive straining when baby cries long and strenuously.

The doctor, in conditions of umbilical hernia, prescribes the use of adhesive tape applied over the navel, folding in the hernia. This, in reality, is a kind of truss serving to keep the protrusion inward, but of itself it does not assist the healing or closure of the opening.

The first question is, "What can be done to assist healing and keep the hernia normal?"

In most cases operation is not advisable. The operation merely consists in pushing in the intestinal loop and sewing the opening. It does not hold nor strengthen the weakened muscles. Under normal circumstances the operation is not a serious one, but it is an unnecessary one.

There are, however, several practical measures which a mother can apply in assisting nature to withdraw the intestine from the false opening.

First and foremost, there should be a sharp revision in the diet. Cases of all types must be overcome by feeding considerable quantities of fruits as substitutes for the heavier foods. The inner intestinal load must be diminished and the bowels kept open in a natural manner.

If the child be old enough, a systematic series of scientific breathing exercises and muscular contractions would be of immense help. Hydrotherapy, especially the systematic application of alternate hot and cold packs, will help immensely in inducing the abdominal muscles to contract and close the opening.

Violent strain and excessive crying should, by all means, be avoided.

Seen from the Green Verdugo Hills

A Page conducted by— John Steven McGroarty

We might have known that there was something good in store for us the other day when we dragged the big mail sack up through the fragrant trails of the chaparral to our little high house in the hills.

The Wanderer Bobs Up Again to Report

There seemed to be something like a happy jingle in the big mail sack as we dragged it along, and so we quickened our steps, hurrying under the branches of the live oaks and the sycamores, and finding ourself quite out of breath when we reached the door of our little high house.

So, sure enough, when we dumped the letters on the floor, there was one that fairly jumped out at us, and which we made haste to lay hold of. And what was it but a letter from the Beloved Wanderer of the Synagogue.

You all who sit under the far-flung rafters of the Synagogue are well acquainted with the Beloved Wanderer. A man who is constantly on the go, a wanderer with no strings on him, as the saying is. He can go where he will and when he will, none to say him nay.

And it must be a happy thing to be like that. There is hardly a man in the world who would not envy another who is free to come and go at all times. To voyage on ships and journey in creaking caravans. To peek into the caves of Delhi, to sun himself in the Azores, to salute the Pillars of Hercules, to beat anew the old trails of the Phoenicians. It must be a happy thing to be like that.

Well, here was the long letter from the Wanderer—a good long letter such as he always writes but which he attempts too seldom.

And the letter begins by saying "Now, dear Conductor, I can hear you say, in the name of all the pigs in Montmartre is that fellow going to write something about that foul and loathsome Gehenna—the City of the Damned? Not a word, Conductor, not a word. What I think of this place was much better said by the prophet Jeremiah about the City of Memphis."

Gosh, we said, when we had read these words at the very start of the letter, gosh, we said, the Wanderer seems to be in a bad humor. But very soon we remembered that this is only his way. He likes to make the bluff that he looks askance at life and the ways of peoples. He likes to have folks believe that he is grouchy and that nothing suits him. And, then, after awhile as you go along reading what he says, you realize how full is his zest of life and that he is as happy as only a true wanderer can be.

In some mysterious way the Beloved Wanderer keeps in constant touch with the Synagogue. We don't know exactly how he manages to do it, being always on the go as he is, but it is plain enough when he writes that he is in touch with us all wherever he may be. He always signs the letters "The Man who sits away out under the eaves of the Synagogue." He has never told us his real name, but in the package of camera prints that he always sends with his letters we have been able through long familiarity with the prints to identify him. Were he to meet us on any dusty road of the world tomorrow we would know him instantly. And yet we do not know his name.

And so, we have given him the name of the "Beloved Wanderer." And it is so that he shall be known to the whole Synagogue from Dan to Beersheba. And some day, by gollies, danged if we won't just print his picture on this poor blundering page so that some other wanderer—some amateur who gets a little loan from God and makes a little timid journey from home—may know him when he meets him and will, for our poor sake, trick him to tell him his real name.

The Beloved Wanderer tells us in his letter that he has noted how the great organization known as "The Adventurers of the World" has done the humble Conductor of this poor blundering page the honor to make him a member. And how we protested that we were not worthy because we had never had in our whole life what could be honestly termed a real adventure.

"Conductor," says the Beloved Wanderer, "the answer to the question as to whether or not you are qualified seems to me simple enough. Many years ago before the world became a maelstrom of Jazzmaniacs a man wrote a book which he called Adventures in Contentment. All adventurers believe in a Nirvana of simple contentment where deck stewards, guides, hack drivers and curio peddlers will be buried to the eyebrows in burning sulphur; where lying steamship agents, money changers and grafting custom officials will forever swim in molten lead."

Gosh, we said again when we read this, our Wanderer is surely in a bad humor. And yet we do not blame him for the remarks that we have just quoted. We remember, ourself, when we had the big loan from God and went voyaging in ships and journeying in creaking caravans how these same guides and hack drivers and custom officials did their best to sour within us the milk of human kindness.

It appears from the letter that the Wanderer has returned to his own country for a brief spell, maybe on account of some business. Perhaps he has to come back every once in awhile to arrange with his banker for more tramping funds. The letter was written from New York, which is a place it seems he does not like anymore. If it ever was that he did like it.

"When I was a little kid in Pennsylvania near Valley Forge," he says, "I used to stick one bare foot out of bed in winter to feel the contrast between that and the snug warm blankets. Who would trade the boulevards of Paris, the green fields of England and the canals of Holland for the filthy streets, the noise and confusion of this town with its vile restaurants run by Bulgarian bandits and comitadji Greeks? Nobody, Conductor, nobody but a person to whom adventure is an occupation and not a pastime. Ulysses had a dog to give a few friendly wags of his tail before he died but I knew no such recognition awaited me here. A few hours ashore and I was saying to myself Oh, Allah, thy servant hath fallen upon evil days. Gone is the band playing in Hyde Park, gone is the Cole Hole on the strand, gone the Barley Maw in Bermondsey, gone the little restaurant in Bishop's Gate where no matter what you order they bring you mutton chops. Gone is the Rue La Fayette and the Cafe Biard, gone are the Bierstubes of Fredrickstrasse—all gone and me surrounded by a lot of overtime hounds who want me to listen to some wild adventure they had on the White Horse Pike last Sunday when their flivver skidded on the wet pavements as they were out looking at the billboards."

Well, sir, we had a good laugh in our little high house in the hills as we read the Wanderer's letter, knowing all the time that these growls that came from him were just growls and nothing more. His bark is worse than his bite, we said, quoting an old saying.

And this is to say to him that we pray God to spare him long with the wanderlust in his heart and the itch in his feet. And to ask him to report more regularly to the Synagogue, because we are all concerned about him, saints and sinners alike. And, above all things, we wish him to know that under all the far-flung rafters of the Synagogue that stretch over the Seven Seas and all the continents he is always well beloved.

It is a strange thing that Death the Reaper will remain inert and idle for a long period of time, and that he will then suddenly fare forth to gather into his granaries of gloom a swift and cruel harvest.

They Are Laid Away and Time Forgets

We have been thinking of this a good deal lately because within the space of a few short weeks many old friends of ours were called away by Death. First it was the beloved old postmaster of the green Verdugo Hills that was called; then the Reaper struck down Don Carlos Lummis; a few days afterward Grandmother Hannah Hall was laid low—dear Hannah Hall who was born among the glens of Antrim not far from where our own beautiful mother was born. These and others, long beloved of us, did the Reaper gather in on his swift and cruel rounds.

Ah, well, their stories are told and our story also shall be told—the story of everyone—sooner or later.

Sometime or other all who now breathe the breath of life shall be folded away with the dusty yesterdays, and Time will forget.

How brief and how small it all seems. And what would be the worth of it were it not for the hope that death does not end all but that it really ends nothing? Surely there is another country toward which we journey and where we shall meet again the loved and lost with whom we parted here.

It was in a chimney corner of the Desert Inn at Palm Springs that the talk about what God is aiming to do came up. The talk was among many men of many minds who were down there on the desert "roughing it" in a de luxe hotel. All of them, ourself included, were what Ruthellen Miller calls "feather bed sports."

Nobody Is Able to Speak for God

And one man said that because the world is getting to be so danged smart now, and to know so much, it is due for a bump and to have its head knocked against the wall. That's what caused the innumerable civilizations of the past to collapse, he said—they got too danged smart and to know too much. And he said that God won't let us go on much longer and that He will smash everything up and make the world start at the foot of the ladder again.

Now, you would never believe what a damper all this put on the group gathered in the chimney corner. It might well have spoiled the whole evening had not another man roused himself to wise speech. And so, this other man said, who is it that can speak for God? There are a lot of people in the world, he said, who seem to think they represent God and are authorized to deliver His messages. But, when you pin them down, they can't produce the credentials, not to speak of a proxy or a power of attorney.

Well, sir, we thought that, very likely, it is really the way of it that nobody can speak for God. Nobody knows what is inside the Infinite Mind. And yet, who can say that we may not, some time again, hear the thunder of His voice amid the lightings of Sinai?

Prayer of a Californian

Here, O God, where Thy great majesty uplifts,
Revealed in calm strength of blue mountains and vast seas,
Where all thy tender love is manifest
In one frail, fragrant blossom,
So delicate, so fragile,
As it lifts its shining face;
In this, Thy children's garden,
O my Father,
In the glory of the sunlight,
The mystery of the moon,
In all thy wealth of beauty,
Give us eyes that we may see Thy face,
Ears that we may hear Thy voice,
And hearts to understand!

Asthma

The treatment of asthma without consideration of its causes is puerile and stupid. The doctor who prescribes the customary asthmatic remedies which depress the nervous system or retard the glandula activity ignores the fundamental causes of this disease. The understanding of the conditions which precede the asthmatic attack will help in the knowledge of its cure.

Clinical Background

The clinical picture we find in asthma is somewhat as follows:

The bronchial tubes are choked with mucus which, in its turn, is usually concomitant with a super-refined starch diet, the consumption of sweets, coffee, meats and similar foods.

An observation of breathing shows the shoulders hunched high, the upper respiratory muscles being mainly involved in the effort toward securing free respiration.

Lower down we find the inferior chest muscles comparatively inactive. Still lower, the diaphragm is equally impaired, while, as we examine the abdominal muscles we find the worst clinical picture of all.

Internally, we observe a series of other conditions. Gastric disturbances, hyperacidity, chronic indigestion, dyspepsia, chronic constipation and a long drug history will generally precede the asthmatic attack.

Causes

The immediate predisposing causes may also usually be traced.

The child or adult—whatever the case may be—has been subject to chronic colds, usually because of overfeeding and starch gluttony. He "does something" for the cold and the thing he does usually consists of antiseptic throat sprays and the taking of pellets or pills. Or, if he visits the doctor, he is given "anti-cold" serums.

In short, the blood stream is thoroughly poisoned by these measures. Nature's attempt toward elimination, which is always present in the typical cold, is stopped. The mucus, pus and catarrhal exudate which come from the nose, throat, eyes, skin and bowels during the cold are kept in the system.

The cold is seemingly "cured," but I would rather use the word "suppressed" than "cured." Of course, the patient feels better, for nature's eliminative processes are usually disagreeable.

The cure is attributed to the specific drug, serum, vaccine or other remedy used.

But somehow or other, the patient does not make a full recovery. He feels sort of "washed out," loggy, dull and tired. A few weeks pass. Then, perhaps, with little or no cause, he "catches cold" again. The same procedure is resorted to. The same medicine, serums and drugs are used.

This happens several times and before long, instead of the customary cold, he gets all "choked up." The early asthma has been started.

The old dietetic habits are still followed. Instead of taking the old drugs, the patient now takes "anti-asthma" remedies instead.

What's to Be Done

This is the customary clinical picture of asthma. But the all-important question before you, the patient, is: "What is to be done about it?"

First and foremost, I want to impress upon you that you must not take drugs! Drugs not only complicate the problem, but make an asthmatic condition easily capable of developing into tuberculosis.

The next thing you must strive for is heroic elimination. Don't be afraid of what comes out of the body! It is that which keeps you well. That which still remains inside keeps you sick.

Eliminative Cure

Consequently, elimination must proceed from several channels. The skin must discharge its full quota of poisons. Sweating from heat, sun baths and consistent vigorous physical culture are desirable.

Breathing must be taught and assiduously followed. Such breathing must improve full function of the abdominal muscles, the diaphragm and the lower respiratory muscles. This can be taught rather than described. The trained physical culturist or drugless practitioner knows this phase of the work very well.

The next aspect of elimination is via the bowels. Constipation must be fought by the measures I have recommended in "Care of the Body" again and again.

Diet Rules

The diet must be directed not only toward this, but also toward the prevention of more catarrhal formation.

The refined starches must be eliminated from the dietary. Dead carcass food should not be consumed. Stimulating beverages or soft drinks should be on the forbidden list. All synthetic sweets should be prohibited as well. The diet should be carefully chosen, mostly from the fruit and vegetable kingdom, and should be prepared without condiments or irritants.

Quantitatively, care should be used as well. An asthmatic should not indulge in a ten-course meal. The pressure and dragging sensation experienced when the stomach is overloaded will produce an asthmatic attack. Frugality should be rigidly obeyed. It would be better for the asthmatic to consume seven or eight very small feedings per day than three big "squares."

Precautions During Attack

During the acute attack the patient should also follow a very definite hygiene.

First and foremost, no food should enter the body. There is no necessity for nourishment when the system is all clogged up, respiration difficult and the patient in great agony.

Cool water or even ice water may be taken.

A cold compress should be placed around the neck. Warm applications should be applied to the abdomen or, better yet, a body temperature tub bath

Bensing an interminable argument. Kinkaid slipped from the grove and made his way toward the house, where the girl was coaxing the dying fire back to life. "Quite a tease, this Holt, isn't he?"

The girl smiled. "Oh, he's a dear. You ought to hear him and father when they get to arguing—but you will! They sit up and roar at each other by the hour."

"That after complete tooth removal primary waste is sealed in to become more dangerous secondary poisons is not receiving serious consideration.

"Nature, in destroying or taking our teeth, is evidently trying to force dieting or change in quantity or quality of food, as must occur immediately after complete tooth removal.

"Habit soon brings back the same wrong foods which were primarily the cause of the ill health.

"Our bodies are not only machines, but chemical laboratories as well. Perfect health means a perfect chemical balance. Too little of this or too much of this or that element usually, with improper mastication and assimilation, lessens immunity, resistance and vitality.

"Injurious compounds destroying and increasing excessive waste, are formed by wrong foods.

"How can tooth removal cure this? Would it not be better to be less hasty with tooth removal and wait until every possible means were exhausted, such as dieting, especially dental and therapeutic attention? This is more advisable than subjecting one's self to a permanent disturbance of balance which can never be remedied.

The Saving of Teeth, and Not Removal, in the Cure of Systemic Disease

R. J. Walker, D.M.D., of Glendale, knows a great deal about teeth and disease.

His views, as expressed in the article below, are thoroughly approved by "Care of the Body." He speaks from the wisdom of experience and knowledge.

"After the teeth are gone, perfect health can never again be expected if assimilation and digestion have anything to do with it, for never again can the food be chewed properly. All of the same foods cannot be satisfactorily chewed, nor is there the same pleasure in eating.

"At all times the value of customary correct, incorrect or special health food must be in accordance with its preparation for acceptance.

"That serious secondary diseases arise from diseased or neglected teeth is not denied, but if the primary cause of a disease were controlled or removed, there would be no secondary disease.

"Disease has been defined as any variation from the normal, principally caused by inherent tendency and wrong living. Most of the so-called diseases, even decayed teeth or pyorrhea, or tolerance of bacterial infections, are but symptoms of these.

"Symptoms are only nature's easiest way of showing us that we are not living correctly, that there is something wrong with our resistance and our vitality which destroy the immunity and create the susceptibility encouraging primary or secondary disturbances and their results.

"Food plays the most important part in our lives, not only as fuel and cell maintenance, but in the making of what we become.

"Rest, sleep, wakefulness, energy, laziness, good or bad state of health—all are reflections of what and how we eat.

"Body poisoning usually means mental poisoning. There are foods which assist elimination and foods which antagonize.

"Motion causes wear; over or unnatural work increases it. Overwork is made by the excessive demands which further increase waste and the rehandling of waste. Waste is made by a disturbed chemical balance, wrong quantities and qualities of food, acceptance and rejection, used and unused materials, obstructed, worn-out or removed parts forcing unintended work to other parts, still increasing wastes hastening their wearing out and shortening life.

"Could this not be expected to happen also after complete tooth removal? Removal of waste or elimination is a process. Nature usually first uses the easiest place and way of taking care of definite amounts until these exits are clogged, closed or made to handle more than is possible. Then, if it cannot be entirely eliminated elsewhere, it collects in some part of the body promoting greater variations from the normal or more complicated disease.

"The human machine, in many ways, resembles the mechanical machine. The wearing out of all machinery commences with its first operation, then how rapidly this continues depends upon care and abuse, ignorance or knowledge.

"Life starts in motion in the human machine. Air, water and food furnish most of the power. Never until it stops permanently is it ever at complete rest.

"Should there be a premature wearing out, given a fair chance, within certain limits, it will repair itself, retard wear and establish immunity to tissue or body poisons.

"Without this chance or beyond this limit, there must be therapeutic aid, the results varied by these limits from a cure to only relief.

"The wearing out of old age and its resultant ailments are a natural process—therefore, not disease.

"Yet many dentists and physicians are attempting to make the aged young, to relieve body aches and pains or to restore the health and vitality of youth by extracting the teeth, taking from the few remaining years their greatest comfort, pleasure and aid to resistance, giving them the choice of from now on guessing it or submitting to the annoyance, discomfort and unclean, unhealthy and unnatural conditions produced by artificial teeth.

"That after complete tooth removal primary waste is sealed in to become more dangerous secondary poisons is not receiving serious consideration.

"Nature, in destroying or taking our teeth, is evidently trying to force dieting or change in quantity or quality of food, as must occur immediately after complete tooth removal.

"Habit soon brings back the same wrong foods which were primarily the cause of the ill health.

"Our bodies are not only machines, but chemical laboratories as well. Perfect health means a perfect chemical balance. Too little of this or too much of this or that element usually, with improper mastication and assimilation, lessens immunity, resistance and vitality.

"Injurious compounds destroying and increasing excessive waste, are formed by wrong foods.

"How can tooth removal cure this? Would it not be better to be less hasty with tooth removal and wait until every possible means were exhausted, such as dieting, especially dental and therapeutic attention? This is more advisable than subjecting one's self to a permanent disturbance of balance which can never be remedied.

"The X-ray is neither a microscope nor a laboratory. Too often shadow pictures are not terrible abscesses, foci of infections nor rarefied areas, but really represent condensations caused by overwork, hyperaemia, due to lack of exercise or interference with the circulation, wrong angles, apposing solidity, scar or repair tissue, etc.

Prof. Bragg
The Man Who Saved My Life

"The death sentence had been pronounced." "I had been examined by the best specialists in the United States and given 60 days to live. A friend told me about Prof. Bragg's Clinic. I took a dying chance. Three months ago I was a total physical wreck — today I weigh 130 pounds —Can walk twenty miles any day and am perfectly well, thanks to Prof. Bragg, his Doctors and Nurses."
The clinic is open from 8:45 a.m. to 8 p.m.

I FOLLOW PROF. BRAGG'S DIET
"While I was at the Clinic I followed the diet given to me by Prof. Bragg to the letter. I ate my meals at his famous Health Cafeteria at 840 So. Hill and I must say they are delicious.

I WAS A HEAVY COFFEE DRINKER
"Oh! How I loved my coffee—breakfast, dinner and supper. Prof. Bragg gave me Alvita Tea. He serves it in his Cafeteria and if you send him 50c he will send you a box.

MEAT WAS MY FAVORITE DISH
"Pork chops, ham, lamb chops—my, how I loved dead flesh. But I never taste it now. Instead I eat Knudsen's Velvet Cottage Cheese—it has twice the nourishment of meat and it's good for you.

I WAS TWENTY POUNDS UNDERWEIGHT
"But now I am normal and look good and feel good. Prof. Bragg gave me Normalettes No. 6. If you are underweight send $1.00 and gain healthy flesh.

MY BOWELS MOVED ONLY EVERY 3 DAYS
"That was my condition when I came to interview Prof. Bragg. He told me in 60 days I would have 2 movements daily, I did not believe this statement. He gave me V. P. O. daily and I have 2 movements daily. Send him a 50c for box and banish constipation forever.

I HATED WATER
"I never like to drink water. But when I started eating at Prof. Bragg's Health Cafetaria he urged me to try the water he served free to his patrons. It was delicious and now I drink ten glasses daily. It's Liquid Steam.

DON'T MISS THESE GREAT HEALTH LECTURES

"He's a trader. You'll pass his post about ten miles below."

"Company man?"

"Independent. He's taken up a bit o' timber along the river. Prospects a bit, too. Mallained by the ignorant, an' left to the prospector an' the trapper. 'Tis such as I must prove its worth."

"Aye, lad. I'll nae be denyin' that I love it. 'Tis a neglected land—a land scoffed at an' mallained by the ignorant, an' left to the prospector an' the trapper. 'Tis such as I

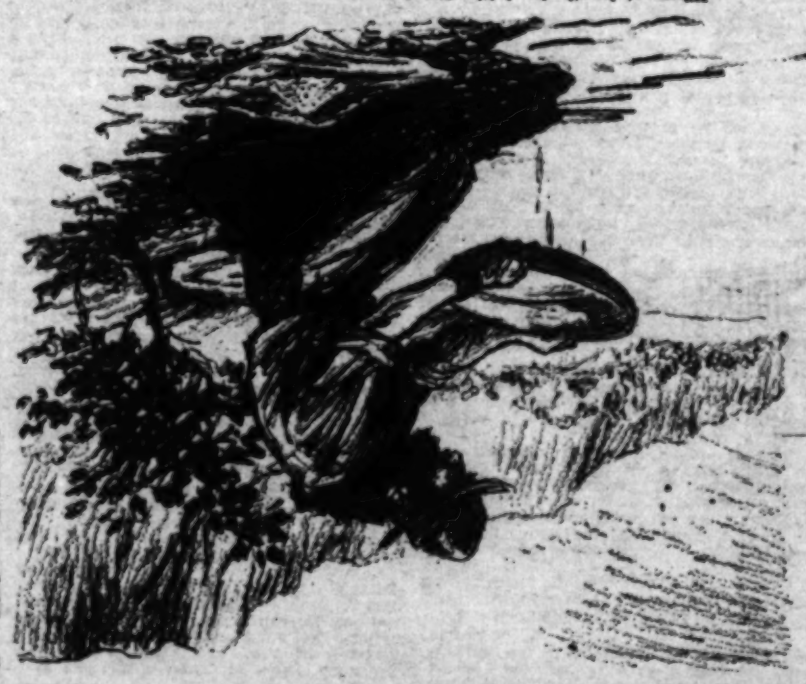
From the house came the sound of slamming. The girl stepped through the doorway and stood for a moment baffled in the net-work upon the radiance of the setting sun. Kirkstall's pulse quickened at the sight, and subdued at thought of her swift defense of Felix Martineau, and of the old man's rude jest. He was aware that the elder man's eyes were upon him. "And what about her?" he asked. "Does she love the wild country, too?"

"Aye, she loves it. She has known nae other." And then, challenging, almost fiercely: "Why should she not love it? What do the settlements an' the cities hold for her? What can they give her that she hasna got here? She has education beyond the con-mon run o' women. First at her mother's an' then at the missions here an' there, later at the missions here an' there, an' since her mother died I hae carried on as best I might. We hae books—guide books, an' nae so few o' them. She has a notion she would like to spend a year at some school. I see nae objection. An' when the farm pays mayhap I can manage. The ex-perience would gure her o' cities."

"Suppose, though, it didn't—"

McLeod interrupted with a short laugh. The girl was coming toward them, now—coming slowly down the path, singing. "Dye mine Jeet yet through sayin' that the love o' the wild country, once in the blood, can never be got out? She loves the wild country, an', 'tis a mon o' the wild country she'll marry."

Martineau thought Kirkstall and stared moodily out over the river. Suddenly he set



When, at length, he deftly flirted the last of the gravel from the pan, he remained there motionless, staring at the yellow residue.

"Lord, yes, gal, an hour ago. Snuck up an' knocked over a young spruce hen with a club, an' 'twasn't no time till I was pickin' her bones. Seems like you're lookin' purtier every time I see you. What's these young bucks thinkin' of—lettin' a gal like you stay single?" The keen old eyes were dancing with mischief. "Too bad I ain't forty year younger an' wearin' a good-lookin' uniform. Well, dinna mo, if she ain't gone an' run off!"

He called after the girl, who was already halfway to the house: "Better set on a b'ilin' of tea, sis—me an' yer pa'll probly be half the night convertin' one another!" The mischievous old eyes sparkled to Kirkstad: "Now's yer chanse, boy. If I was in yore pants I'd git in thar an' help with table tea b'ilin'. I'll keep old Angus busy. By the way, tell me Old Man Downey's up an' married."

"Yes—couple of years ago."

"Well damn his old gray-headed hide! No one thought she would. Oled of it, though, if shree ot the gir nemself—win oncet an' lose twice—try it agin, though, if I was younger. Mam's a fine a chancel. Couldn't go wrong in Mary McLeod—purty as hell an' twice as smart. Got to be up an' goin', though. It's like a fortune teller would say: Beware of a dark-eyed man from down river."

"The same. Keep an eye on him. Damn, Donn! Good-lookin', but slick as hell. tune-tellin', female told me oncet, down in the Faramints—she says, 'Beware of a dark-haired man.' An' while I was bewarin' of him a red-headed one plunked my pokе and my woman, too. Best friend I ever had—but he didn't find it out till long later."

"Eh, what's that?" asked McLeod, edging closer, a hand cupped behind an ear.

"I was just tellin', sir, general, here, about a good turn a feller done me oncet, an' he was about Old Man Downey gittin' married."

"Look—mon, that's two year agone! An' ye'd nelle down here on the river wi' a bit o' farm instead o' pectin' away up that crick, ye'd hear the news before it got to be his-tory." I had it a year agone from David Daunt."

"What difference does a year or two make in news anyhow? An' besides, I wouldn't work an' sweat my life away tryin' to coax a few spuds an' a hatful o' barley from the ground—not if I could hear the news before it happened! Take prospectin', now—one good strike an' you get motor, you'd git in a hundred years of farmin'."

abruptly, he turned and disappeared into the house.

From the doorway Mary announced them to supper. With a quirk of the head and a beckon, he fitted a jug from a shelf, as McLeod indicated the wash dish upon his return with many strikes it lucky? Look at old John Holt—he'n prospectin' ever since he can remember, an' never once has he made a strike. A bare livin' is all he's ever got, an' August it scares gets dark at all. Sixty days deposit dipper time. In June an' July an' of our growth time is worth ninety days be-low."

"I suppose that's right," answered Kirkstall pertinctorily. "Who is Felix Martineau?"

"He's a trader. You'll pass his post about ten miles below."

"Company man?"

"Independent. He's taken up a bit o' timber along the river. Prospects a bit, too. He's a smart lad. I look to see him tak' up mallained by the ignorant, an' left to the farmin'. 'Tis a shame he should be wastin' his life punchin' holes in gravel an' shippin' away at rock riddles."

Kirkstall grinned. "I'd rather prospect than farm. If you strike it lucky you can take it easy the rest of your life, but farm-ing you've got to keep on plugging away at the same old job in the same old place year after year."

Thus launched on his favorite theme, the old Scot believed his argument: "'Tis the way o' the young, to be poppin' about from place to place. 'Twas so wi' myself, an' 'tis rect pouched, enlarged stomachs, fattily degenerated intestines, fallen stomachs, weakened muscles or sluggish circulation. Activity is life, and activity of the proper kind is just as essential to non-gas-forming, nondistressful, normal digestion as diet is.

CARE OF THE BODY

I have a specially prepared leaflet on stomach gas. Those who are interested in this subject may secure this leaflet by sending me a self-addressed, stamped envelope and a loose two-cent stamp.

Biliousness

The word "biliousness" means the excessive secretion of bile from the liver into the intestinal system, usually the result of some sort of inflammation. Here is what usually happens.

The woman—and I say "woman" because she is the one who suffers most frequently from biliousness—will go along for a period of two or three weeks, and remark that during this time her stomach feels fine and she can eat anything. She does, with the result that her poor stomach, which can stand it for a week or two or three, rebels, and the rebellion is in the form of biliousness. Then she goes to the doctor wonring why it is that she gets such periodical spells and what is their cause.

Here are some factors that relate to biliousness:

The first and most important cause is chronic constipation. You have a thirty-foot digestive tube, approximately one and one-half to two inches in diameter, loaded with foul substances. The liver wants to get rid of them. The best way to do this is to saturate the waste with bile. Notwithstanding all the efforts of the liver, if it is still unable to discharge the accumulated waste, some of it backs up. That is biliousness.

Another cause is the state of tension, the neurosis, the quivering state of "nerves" which characterizes nine in ten of all women. There is not sufficient nervous vitality to discharge the waste material, and the result is that the liver is compelled to force more and more bile into the digestive system.

To overcome biliousness is to reduce the quantity of your diet or to go upon a complete fast.

Notwithstanding the enervating nature of these attacks, biliousness is very simply overcome by these methods. Those who resort to the paralyzing effects of stupefying medicine, in the vain attempt to keep inside the foul substance which Nature is attempting to discharge, are piling up error on error, and are bound ultimately to pay the price.

The foul poisons which are attempting to come out, whether they come from the stomach or bowels or skin, are wholesome and well for you when they are eliminated from the body. Biliousness, as one of the many excretory diseases, is a means of saving the lives of thousands of people, notwithstanding the undesirable nature of the ailment.

In addition to correction of diet, it requires nervous calm to overcome biliousness. In the case of periodical bilious attacks, especially those associated with the menstrual period, there is only one way to overcome them. When the attack is about to occur, stop eating, or, if you must have something, have only fruit juices at the time.

If you will meet Nature only one-tenth of the way, she will meet you the balance of the nine-tenths. If you will give Nature a respite, she will do the rest in recuperation.

Prolapses

So many of us lead sedentary lives, involving little or no muscular activity, and consume such quantities of food that the falling of one or more organs is very common.

With women beyond the age of forty-five, prolapsus of the uterus is far too frequently encountered. The ligaments which support the organ have lost their strength and tenacity. Sometimes the walls to which they are attached have undergone softening and degeneration.

When a person has falling of the organs, he usually has a choice of several procedures. If the surgeon is consulted, having his specialty foremost in mind, he will, of course, recommend the surgical raising of the organ. In cases of fallen uterus he cuts the ligaments short. Nothing is done to strengthen—nothing is done to assist nature.

If the patient visits the doctor who advocates devices and supports, he usually leaves by purchasing a truss, brace, corset, or other means of support. Again nature is not assisted. Nothing is done to strengthen the overloaded muscles or lessen the excessive internal weight.

Enteroptosis, or falling of the organs, does not take place overnight. The process extends throughout the years. To attempt to correct it in a day is unreasonable. There is only one sensible procedure to correct falling of the organs. It is the duty of the abdominal and pelvic muscles to hold the internal organs in position. If they have failed, it is because they have not had sufficient strength to do their work.

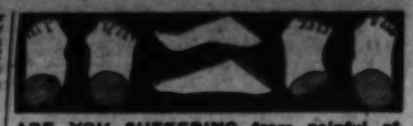
Of course, there is only one way to overcome this. Consult the trained physical culture director and he will advise you what this procedure consists of.

Next the internal cause of prolapsus should be ascertained. In most cases it is due to too much food. We all know that the stomach and digestive system shrink when little or no food is placed in them. We also know that both of these organs pouch, enlarge and drop when overloaded with food.

Stop all excesses. Learn how to breathe so as to use the muscles of the abdomen as well as the muscles of the chest.

Have patience. You cannot place back into a normal position an organ which has taken many years to become abnormally placed. Nature works slowly, but with an unerring positivity that is unmistakable.

Before resorting to the surgical inter-



ARE YOU SUFFERING from painful affliction of the foot, broken down arches, callouses, bunions, etc.?

Ready-made Arch Supports are an unsatisfactory makeshift because everyone's foot is different and the displaced bones, enlarged joints and decreased ligaments completely destroy still further. We make supports from carefully prepared plaster of Paris casts and after them to accommodate changes brought about by the wearing of the supports, in order to give relief and lasting satisfaction it is imperative that the foot be restored to as normal a shape as possible. We have an extensive experience in the correction of flat-foot, broken down arches and other deformities of the foot, and are able to promise our clients comfort and relief in a very short time.

It is not necessary to wear clumsy shoes with our supports; on the contrary, we often restore daintiness of appearance to feet badly deformed and unsightly.

CHAPTER IV

THE visit of the old prospector to the cabin of Angus McLeod was by no means a matter of chance. For forty years John Holt had prospected diligently and laboriously for gold. California, Nevada, Colorado, Montana had known him, and so had Alaska and the Yukon. Minor success had been his upon many creeks; but never had he made what he would admit was a "strike."

One afternoon some three months before this visit, he had squatted in the bottom of a twelve-foot shaft and with bare hands pawed the gravel his shovel had turned up. "Rotten quartz," he mumbled, "an' shot plumb full of gold! Twelve foot of barren sand, an' in under it—this!" He poked and prodded the gravel in his palm, his keen old eyes gleaming with excitement as he stared at the yellow flakes and grains that showed among the darker particles. "Coarse gold—millions! Good God—at last! An' I was jest about to give her up an' move on!" He allowed the gravel to trickle slowly from his hand. For several minutes he squatted there, motionless, his eyes fixed on the gravel, but not seeing the gravel. In memory he was far away, following the long back trail of the years. "Gold's where you find it," he repeated the time-honored shibboleth of the prospectors. "She come late, but—she come! I'll buy me a pair of black pants, an' a di'mond ring, an' a hull damn' firkin of butter."

He rose to his feet, filled his bucket, and signalled for his Indian to pull up. He scrambled from the mouth of the shaft and, loosening the bucket, carried it to the creek in the valley of which he had sunk his shaft. Picking up his pan he squatted beside the stream, and for some minutes his attention was fixed upon the rapidly rotating water. When, at length, he deftly flirted the last of the gravel from the pan, he remained there motionless, staring at the yellow residue. Removing a handkerchief from his pocket, he spread it and dumped the contents of the pan; then, methodically, he panned the rest of the gravel, filling his pan from the bucket and adding the residue to the little pile that grew and showed richly yellow against the dark blue of the outspread cotton handkerchief.

When the bucket was empty, he picked up the handkerchief, and, walking to his tent, set up his scales, and meticulously weighed his gold. "Forty dollars," he breathed, staring in awe at the tiny pyramid upon the pan of the scale. "Around a thousand dollars to the ton! An' the whole damn' crick underlaid with it—millions—a strike—another Klondike . . ."

John Holt wanted to laugh, to whoop, to dance. Also, he wanted to cry. With hands not quite steady, he transferred the gold from the scales to a canvas sack, and, stepping to the door of the tent, stood looking out over the little valley.

Impulses crowded Holt's brain. He must do something! Go somewhere! Tell someone! He would rush to the shaft and shovel gold for the Indian to crank to the surface! He would hit out for the Churchill and let Angus McLeod and Mary in on his strike! They could file above and below Discovery. He'd make them rich—Angus with his damn fool farmin', and Mary, who always remembered the butter!

John Holt was a methodical man. He repressed his impulses, seated himself upon an outcropping rock, niggled a chew from a plug of tobacco, and spat deliberately and accurately upon a chip. Then he chuckled, a long, low chuckle of sheer delight. "Angus—he ain't got a leg left to stand on. Farmin'—hell!"

For ten days thereafter the two worked in the erecting of a small cabin and a rude rocker and sluice. Then, for thirty days, they worked at the shaft. At the end of the month Holt reckoned his cache held fifteen thousand dollars in coarse gold.

Then he quit, shoveled a ton or two of barren sand into his shaft, and spent another thirty days in pecking at the rock ridges at the head of he valley—the lure of the mother lode.

Puzzled he turned again to the valley floor and sank a shaft above and below Discovery. These shafts yielded nothing but barren sand. He filled them up and sank another, opposite to Discovery and at a right angle to the course of the creek. At twelve feet his shovel struck into the rotten quartz gravel—and gold.

Standing at the bottom of his new shaft, John Holt heaved a sigh of satisfaction. "I know'd she wasn't no pocket. She's an old, old crick bed, that run crossways to the lay of the land. I've heered about 'em before. I'll let Angus in, now. He kin file three claims—what with Mary an' the ijut. But I was lucky to sink that Discovery shaft where I done."

He filled up this shaft, as he had filled the others, leaving only the Discovery shaft open, its rich gravel concealed beneath the covering of barren sand. It looked like an abandoned venture.

That afternoon, his food being low, Holt went hunting in a neighboring valley where a sluggish creek wound its way through sedgy flats. And it was there, he came upon a camp. Holt's curiosity was great, so that it was hours later, when the owner of the camp had returned, that he made his way back to his own valley.

"Now, what in hell is that damn' Less Hoose doin' up here?" he muttered.

That night he re-cached his gold, and morning found him upon the river, each stroke of his paddle hastening the moment when he should confront Angus McLeod with the tremendous information of his forty years of prospecting.

Finding Kinkaid at the McLeods', it was after midnight that Holt told Angus of his strike. Putting off the great moment, Holt enjoyed himself hugely as he ate bread spread half an inch thick with butter and gussied tea as McLeod sipped his liquor and refilled his glass from the jug the while he waged wordy war in defense of his God and his farm. They heard the girl enter her room and close her door.

"Likely lookin' young feller—the policeman," opined Holt. "The kind of a man Mary ought to git."

McLeod frowned. "He'd be takin' her away. Marlineau, now, he's a likely lad, too. He's smart an' he's an outlander."

"Wouldn't trust him around the first bend of a crick!"

"He owns his own tradin' post, an' some day, I mak' nae doot he'll tak' up wi' farmin' here on the river."

"Farmin'—hell! He'll never go to farmin'—it's too honest, an' besides, it's hard work."

"'Tis nae harder than prospectin', John Holt! Forty years ye hae labored, John Holt, an' what has it got ye? Answer me that, mon—what has it got ye?"

It was the moment for which John Holt had been waiting. For years the interminable argument had been going on. And for years Angus, in his tone of finality, had propounded this same question—a question that, from the old Scot's point of view, was unanswerable.

Day by day, month by month, year by year, he had pecked away at his rocks—some day he would make his strike, and then—a diamond ring—a pair of black pants—butter—the confronting of Angus McLeod!

Then it was that John Holt answered the question. Slowly, deliberately his hand slipped beneath his checked shirt, and slowly, deliberately it was withdrawn. The next moment something thudded dully upon the oilcloth-covered table. "That's my answer! That, an' fifteen thousan' dollars' worth more in my cache—an' a million in the gravel! I've make my strike! I can take out more gold in a day, between breakfast an' quittin' time, than yer damn farm'll ever pay in a year. Now, put that in yer pipe an' smoke it, Angus McLeod!"

Uncomprehending, the eyes of the Scot lowered until they came to rest upon the little canvas sack. The hairy hands moved, and thick fingers fumbled at the knotted string. The sack gaped open, and yellow grains poured out—yellow grains that seemed to glow with life and warmth in the light of the lamp. He picked up the little sack by its bottom and stood staring, speechless, at the stream that gushed from its mouth and formed a pyramid of yellow gold against the white oilcloth. For a long time he stood thus while the clock ticked. Then, suddenly, a hairy hand shot out and gripped the hand of John Holt in a mighty grip.

The big voice boomed: "John, mon—I'm glad! D'ye know—can ye realize it, mon?—ye're rich! Ye're rich beyont anything I'll ever know. Only think, all along—ye was right an' I was wrong! But, mon—ye had to prove it!"

John Holt laughed. "We're rich, Angus," he corrected. "There's plenty fer all of us, fer me an' you an' Mary an' the boy."

"Nae, nae! John, 'tis yer strike, not mine. Losh, mon—hae I nae been callin' ye a fool fer years? I'm thankin' ye jest—"

"Let me do the talkin'," interrupted Holt. "As ye jest said, it's my strike, not yourn. Word of a strike spreads fast, an' when it oncet gits out, that there valley's goin' to be lousy with folks, good, bad, an' worst. You an' the young ones kin file three claims next to Discovery, to the east. The crick runs north an' south—"

"But why not file above an' below, accordin' to the way the creek runs?"

"You wouldn't git nothing but sand. This proposition's different. The gold's in the gravel of an old crick, twelve foot down, that

"All right. There'll be a plenty. I'll be goin' now while the moon holds. So long—an' mind, don't breathe a word."

CHAPTER V

THE inborn secretiveness of the confirmed prospector carried John Holt far afield to the inconsequential outpost on Little Turtle. Andy Forgan, the trader, dull of eye and ponderous of paunch, eyed the little pile of yellow grains with disfavor. "That ain't no good here."

John Holt stared at the man, aghast. "Ain't no good! Why, man, gold's the one thing that's good anywheres!"

"Not here, it ain't. I kin't got no orders to take in no gold. This is a fur post."

"Fur—hell!" cried the exasperated Holt. "I tell you this is gold—coarse gold, an' she goes fer sixteen dollars to the ounce, an' I'm needin' my winter's supplies."

"I wouldn't outfit you fer twenty pound of that stuff. If you claim it's gold, where'd you git it?"

Kinkaid's brain that, had it not been for his preconceived notion, he would have fitted this man. Kinkaid turned from the window and settled himself as blackmen kindled a fire in the stove. As the man talked the officer had fitted their environment—John Holt, en-

"The others he could account for. They beyond the outposts of civilization."

Aye. An' I'll do as ye say, John. But it's to be share an' share alike in the matter o' the claims. The lad's claim will be yours."

From elsewhere in the valley, Kinkaid knew, a lot of 'em's goin' to git fooled—film above an' below. Don't you go an' I told you to stake sideways. They'll think it's 'cause ye're contrary. An' if anyone's around, you stagger back—but stick to your stakin'!"

"But why should ye be lettin' me in on this—me who's always scoffed at ye an' upbraided ye, an'—"

"Hell, man—ain't you the best friend I got? Ain't we always augered together, an'—"

"Aye, an' now ye've beat me ye're wantin' to divide—"

"We still got religion to auger about, ain't me? Leastwise, till I beat you at that."

"Ye'll never beat me there! The Gude Book says—"

"Hold on, now! Don't let's git a-goin' on that! If we do we'll be settin' here till mornin', an' I'm in a hurry."

"Surely, mon, ye'll not be runnin' off so soon! We've had no chance to talk."

"Got to go. I don't want to leave the claim too long. She ain't filed yet. An, that reminds me!" The prospector drew a pamphlet from his pocket. "Them's the minin' laws. You'll find it set down in there somewheres about some writin' that's got to be wrote on to the claim stakes. You know, Angus, I ain't never learnt to read an' write. You put the writin' on my stakes when you fix yourn."

McLeod fumbled the leaves of the pamphlet. "Here it is," he announced. "Section 23. It says:

"One o' the flatted sides o' each post shall face the claim, an' on each post shall be written on the side facin' the claim a legible notice statin' the name or number o' the claim, or both if possible, its length in feet, the date when staked, an' the full Christian an' surname o' the locator."

"Now, let's see, John, have ye got a name or a number for yer claim?"

"Jest make it Discovery an' let it go at that. But be sure you git my name on to it."

"Wait till I get a pencil an' copy down the notice jest like I've got to put it on the stake, then I won't make nae mistake." When McLeod finished he returned the pamphlet. "Now, how do I number our claims?" he asked.

Holt considered. "Mostly claims is numbered both ways from Discovery—above an' below. But yourn ain't neither above nor below—they're crossways. They're what they call inland claims. Again he produced the pamphlet and tossed it toward McLeod. "Here, take this an' study it out fer yourself. It's all in there somewheres. I got to be goin'."

Slipping the notice he had copied between the leaves of the pamphlet, McLeod placed it in his pocket.

"Aye. An' I'll do as ye say, John. But it's to be share an' share alike in the matter o' the claims. The lad's claim will be yours."

"Oh a crick—an' a long ways from here—an' there's fifteen thousan' dollars' worth more in my cache—an' a million in the gravel!"

Forgan nodded toward the door. "Go out in the bresh an' sleep it off, an' when you come back, if you got any fur, I'll talk to you."

John Holt was a man of action. As Forgan reached a thick hand toward a gun on a shelf behind him, Holt cleared the low counter at a bound, and the next instant the two figures crashed to the floor. In vain the flabby trader strove to rid himself of the prospector whose lean fingers were biting deeper and deeper into the fat throat.

"You will try to run me to the bresh with a gun, will you? You tarnation fool, I got a mind to choke you cold!"

Before the other could reply, a figure darkened the doorway, footsteps sounded on the floor, and Holt glanced up quickly into the grinning face of Less Hoose, who leaned across the counter in evident enjoyment of the unequal struggle.

Releasing his grip, Holt regained his feet, being careful to possess himself of Forgan's gun as he stepped around the end of the counter. With much puffing and grunting the ponderous trader heaved himself erect and stood glowering upon the two as he leaned heavily upon the counter. But Less Hoose had lost all interest in Forgan. A glint of yellow had caught his eye, and he stood staring in open-mouthed fascination at the little pile of gold upon the counter.

"Tell this fool trader what that stuff is." Holt's words brought Hoose out of his trance and, without removing his eyes from the metal, he answered:

"Why, it's gold—coarse gold! Any damn fool'd know that!" And without another word he turned and started at a run for the door.

"Hold on! Where you goin' in sech a hell of a hurry?"

The man paused. "Goin'! Where'd you s'pose I'm goin'? I'm a-goin' to hit out an' drive fh my stakes right next to yourn—that's where! When this here gits out, they'll be another stampede like the Klondike. Hey, p'int that gun around! You got it right on me!"

"Yump," said Holt, "an' before it goes off, s'pose you back right up to where you was. Me an' you's got to make medicine."

Forgan's labored gurglings became intelligible: "You got anything with you, Hoose? I'm all out, an', God knows, I need a drink."

Hoose shot a swift, fearful glance toward Holt, who intercepted it with a grin. "Go ahead. Don't mind me. I know yer peddlin Martineau's licker fer him. Tain't none of my business. I ain't never turned you up yet, have I?"

"Didn't know as you know'd."

"Lot of things you don't know as I know'd—like about you campin' out over on the next crick a-watchin' me. An' then follerin' me up here—"

"I never follered you up here! Honest to God, I never! I jest happen' to come up to see if Forgan could use a hag. I don't claim I wasn't watchin' you. Martineau set me at it. But I never knowed you made a strike! We figgered you might of when we seen you'd built you a cabin instead of stayin' in the tent, an' I be'n watchin' fer 'most a month, but I never seen you workin' no shaft—just peckin' around the rocks an' diggin' shafts an' fillin' 'em up agin—all but one, an' I know'd that wasn't no good, 'cause I snuck down one night an filled a pan out of the bottom of it, an' it wasn't nothin' but common sand."

Holt laughed. "They's tricks in all trades, Hoose. I never had no time fer no such crows as you an' Martineau be, but sence you've found out about the strike, I'll dicker. I kin use you to help me freight my winter's grub down. You got a canoe, an' with the two of us packin' acrost the portages we'll save a lot of time, I figger if a man's got a job to do an' can't find nothin' but dirty tools to do it with, he kin use 'em, an' then wash his hands. So if you'll agree to help me back with my stuff I'll guarantee to see that you git your stakes in next to Discovery."

"Yes, but how do I know you'll put me next to the right claim? You've got a lot of shafts sunk."

Holt interrupted with a laugh: "How you goin' to know, if you don't help me? S'pose you was to hit out now, where would you stake? I'm a man of my word, an' I'm guaranteein' to let you stake next to the shaft where I took out this gold, an' where I'm a-goin' to keep on takin' out gold. Barrin' this exception, that I was goin' to mention when you butted in on me—Angus McLeod is a friend of mine, an' I stopped in as I come by an' put him wise to my strike, an' told him an' his gal an' that boy of his to go on up an' stake while I was gone. Your stakes goes in as clost to mine as you kin git, barrin' theirn. Is it a deal, or ain't it?"

"Sure it's a deal, an' I feel better, now, 'cause I know you'd let McLeod in on the right claim."

"Mind you, I ain't guaranteein' you'll find no gold. Only to let you in as clost to me as you can git.

"S'pose old McLeod goes shoot'n' off his head an' starts a stampede 'fore we git back."

"He won't. Jest between me an' you, we kin keep this strike quiet a long time yet, if we work it right. This here Forgan don't know where the crick's at within five hundred mile."

"Come on, let's git loaded."

"You don't git no outfit here! I don't know that's gold! An' I ain't lettin' out no goods—"

Hoose slanted the trader a glance of disgust. "Don't be a damn' fool, Forgan. You

BUNIONS
WE have invented a day and night appliance for bunions and overlapped toes, and we have every reason to believe it will cure same soon out of use.
The night splints are worn while sleeping and the muscles are relaxed, to stretch the contracted tendons that distort the bone and cause this abnormal deformity.
The day reducing appliance shields the bunion, hides the deformity and holds the toes in proper alignment and the normal function, for the bones will be re-established and in a short time the bunion disappears completely and forever.

Stomach Gas

In this article I want to show some aspects of gas production besides the strictly dietetic.

Some time ago I visited an X-ray exposition and saw a remarkable collection stomachs where the center of the stomstomachs where the center of the stomach was constricted, leaving two pouches resembling an hour-glass. I was shown prolapsed stomachs, pouched stomachs, elongated stomachs, contracted stomachs, badly degenerated stomachs, pinched stomachs, misshapen and distorted stomachs—in fact, almost every conceivable distortion and malformation possible.

The question of diet is indissolubly connected with these malformations, but merely correcting the diet in these conditions would not suffice.

Proper digestion is a chemical process, a physical process, a mechanical process and a nervous process. Misshapen or fattily degenerated intestines are functionally disabled.

Let us take a few illustrations.

A man who buckles his belt as tightly as he comfortably can, creates undue pressure, and sooner or later will malform his stomach shape.

The woman who wears her coat of steel (the modern corset) misshapes the entire abdominal contents.

The man or woman who permits the digestive system to become loaded with fats, due to sedentary habits and lack of abdominal exercise, also has his or her digestive system malformed.

To secure normal function not only must the diet be corrected, but these abnormalities must be overcome or reduced.

Exercise of the right kind plays almost as important a part as diet. Exercise keeps the muscles flexible, pliable and elastic. Gas irritation is always associated with tense, drawn muscle. Relaxation of these tense muscles is of immense benefit during the gas attack. Anything which keeps the muscles in a permanent state of relaxation, counteracts the distress of gas.

The older generation tends toward muscular flabbiness and inertia of the abdominal and pelvic muscles. This is true of both the lean and the stout, and especially of those in the sedentary occupations.

Even those engaged in muscular work seldom do the necessary bending and turning and squatting for abdominal development. In my own practice fully nine out of ten patients must make up abdominal muscular deficiency either because of muscular underdevelopment or, more frequently, because of fatty infiltration of the muscle tissue.

Exercise of the bending and squatting varieties, especially, plays another important role. Each time the abdomen is bent forward or laterally, the stomach and intestines are squeezed. This loosens accumulated food concretions and mechanically assists elimination.

It also stimulates the muscles of which the stomach and intestines are principally composed, creating better peristal, tic action and greater strength to the functioning tissues.

Again, by means of the contractions during muscular exercises, greater quantities of blood are brought to the surface of the digestive mucous membrane. This blood congestion is a healthful process.

Finally, abdominal and pelvic muscular exercise invigorates the nerves governing digestion. These nerves emerge from the "small of the back" and are deeply imbedded in the muscles of the back. From there they form a network which proceeds to the supporting membrane of the digestive system, and then are directly imbedded in the muscle tissue of the digestive system.

It is impossible to perform the usual type of abdominal and pelvic exercises without affecting these vital nerves.

Sometimes the exercise of itself will be relatively inefficient when the nerves emerging from the spine are pinched by the spinal bones. Then it is necessary to have an osteopath or chiropractor correct the lesion.

Don't, however, make the very common mistake of expecting your osteopathic or chiropractic physician to make up the deficiencies of muscular exercise. All that he can do is to correct the slightly misplaced spinal bone. He cannot add the muscular tenacity, strength, or power with his treatments. Both osteopathic and chiropractic manipulation are of tremendous value, but they cannot and should not be expected to replace exercise.

This is a habit which thousands of people have. They take spinal manipulations year in and year out, never attempting to make up their spinal shortcomings by means of adequate exercise.

The form, shape and mechanics of the digestive system are just as important as proper diet. Diet alone will not correct the misshapen digestive system.

was a strange new restlessness. But also after midnight that Holt told Argue of his claim. Why was Mary Macleod shielding Lem Hoose? And so he went to sleep, vowing to be up in the morning he would interview John Holt.

CHAPTER IV

THE visit of the old prospector to the camp of Finding Kirkaid at the Macleods', it was the tangible justification of his forty years of prospecting.

Finding Kirkaid at the Macleods', it was after midnight that Holt told Argue of his strike. Putting off the great moment, Holt enjoyed hugely as he ate bread spread half an inch thick with butter and washed down the delicacy with tea. Then, pushing back his chair, he announced:

"Got a claim staked on Seal River. Been over there for two years. Struck it rich. Got to record it. Thought I'd ride in with you."

"Seal River?" Kirkaid's tone was politely interested. "Isn't that a long way from here?"

"Two hundred miles, more or less. Depends on how you travel. Can't go by canoe. Got to pack in. Have to buy grub from Martineau an' save freightin'."

Forgan perforce made the best of what he considered a bad bargain. Mumbling and grumbling, he filled Holt's order, and, as the goods were set aside, Hoose carried them out and loaded the two canoes. The trader eyed with disfavor the little pile of yellow grains that Holt weighed out in payment, and it was not until he noted the avidity with which Hoose accepted part of it in return for his liquor that he regarded the transaction as other than robbery.

At the landing, as Holt stepped into his canoe, he handed Forgan his gun. "I'd ought to throw it in the lake," he said, "but I guess you ain't figgerin' on killin' no one, now."

"I wouldn't of killed you nohow. When you was talkin' about all that gold you had cached, I thought you was crazy, an' I wasn't goin' to take no chances. They'll be wantin' to know where this gold came from."

"Jest tell 'em you don't know," answered Holt. "an' you won't have to think up no lie."

CHAPTER VI

UPON awakening the morning following Holt's visit, Kinkaid was disappointed to find that the old prospector had gone. After breakfast he took leave of the McLeods. In the doorway he turned to the old Scot, who had seemed in a rather absent mood all during the meal. "Good-by, sir. Thank you for the hospitality."

"Losh, lad, don't mention it. Ye're always welcome here. Gi' my regards to Corporal Downey when ye see him. An' when ye come this way again dinna fail to stop."

"Thank you, sir. I won't forget."

The girl accompanied him to the river and stood by as he loaded his outfit into the canoe. When he had finished, he stepped to her side. "Good-by, Mary," he said.

"You are coming back?"

"Yes, I'm coming back."

"To—to catch Less Hoose?"

"Yes—that, and for other things."

"What things?"

"Well—you, for instance."

The girl's heart thrilled at the words. Her eyes sought his in one swift, startled glance, then dropped. "Me—you mean—?"

"I mean just this—there's something going on here that isn't all on the surface, and I'm going to find out what it is. I'd stay now, but I've got to report back not later than the first. Tell me this!" His voice sounded gruff, and the girl was aware of the tightening of the grip of the fingers he had laid upon her arm. "You told me last night that you hated Less Hoose—is it because you fear him?"

"No, no—I do not fear him. He's a—Oh, I can't tell you, now! Some time, maybe—but not now."

"And Martineau?"

She looked up swiftly. "Martineau? What about Martineau?"

"I don't know. I'll find that out, too. Good-by."

As he swept around the first point, he turned for a backward glance. The girl was still standing beside the river.

"Maybe I was a fool to mention Martineau. 'Damned snake,' Old Man Holt called him. Wonder how he stands with her? Anyway, if he's mixed up with Hoose she don't know it—unless she's a damned good actor."

Kinkaid saw Martineau's post long before he arrived at the landing. Obviously, it had been built to be seen, situated as it was upon a narrow point that protruded far into a long, slow reach of the river. To anyone approaching from either up or down stream, it would be visible for miles. "Works the other way around, too," mused the officer. "He can see anyone coming for miles."

At the landing a man awaited him. He was a young man, swarthy, fine of feature. The thin lips smiled a welcome, and as the officer stepped on to the dock and took the proffered hand, he was conscious that keen black eyes were taking his measure.

"Ah-ha, a man of the police! I am honored! Let me give you a hand with your stuff, and then we will pull up the canoe—for surely you are stopping with me tonight?"

"Thanks, I think I will. Kinkaid's my name—Constable of the Mounted Police."

"And mine is Martineau. A trader in a small way. A harterer for pelts, and sometimes a prospector. We will make snug here and then carry your stuff to the house."

Kinkaid followed his host to the house, a long, low affair, well built of spruce logs.

Martineau evinced a pardonable pride in his layout which, indeed, was admirably planned for the purpose of a small trading post. A door gave into the trading room from the man's living quarters, which consisted of a bedroom containing two bunks, and a combination dining-room and kitchen. Kinkaid noted that the arrangement of windows was such as to give a view both up and down the river from any of the three rooms. e noted, also, that the whole place was scrupulously clean. Upon this fact he commented.

"And why not?" asked Martineau. "Because a man chooses to live alone, removed from his kind, is it any reason that he should hole up in a den like a beast?"

"A lot of 'em do."

"Just so. But it is my belief that a man's surroundings must harmonize with the man himself. Place a man who abhors filth into a filthy cabin and he will immediately set about cleaning it up. Place a slovenly man in a clean cabin, and within a week the cabin will be as slovenly as he." Martineau paused, smiling, and the thought flashed into Kinkaid's brain that had it not been for his preconceived notion, he could have liked this man.

Kinkaid turned from the window and seated himself as Martineau kindled a fire in the stove. As the man talked the officer had been wondering, speculating as to why a man of his calibre, an educated man, manifestly, should elect to settle upon a river far beyond the outposts of civilization?

The others he could account for. They fitted their environment—John Holt, enthralled by the lure of the mother lode; Angus McLeod, with his dreams of a new North; Mary, by accident of birth; even the uncouth figure with whom he had come to grips. People of the wild, these—they belonged. But Martineau—?

Kinkaid summoned a smile. "At least, you haven't bogged down—yet."

"No, not yet—nor will I ever bog down. When I go down—I shall crash down—not bog down."

"What do you mean?"

Martineau answered with a shrug: "You have not passed this way before?"

"No. This is my first trip on the Churchill. Been over on Seal River. Murder case."

"Murder? On Seal River?"

"Looks that way. I've got to go in again. It's a native affair. They wouldn't talk much. David Gaunt told me that if I couldn't clean the case up he'd go in with me."

"Ah, yes—Gaunt. They'll talk to him."

"Knew Gaunt?"

"Yes." The man made obvious attempt to cover the brusqueness of his reply. "Owns a lot of pulp wood."

"Who's Less Hoose?" Kinkaid's tone suggested a merely casual interest.

Martineau's answer was as casual. If he was playing a part he was doing it well, for in his reply was nothing of the reticence of Mary McLeod, nor was there any hint of interest or of an attempt to avoid candor. "Less Hoose? Oh, he's an odd character—harmless enough, except when he's got one of his 'spells,' as he calls them."

"What kind of spells?"

"Crazy—violent." Martineau grinned as if in memory of an amusing incident. "Had one here, once. Nearly clawed the clothing off me before I could get away from him. Was he mixed up in the Seal River trouble?"

"No. What does he do? How does he live?"

"Oh, traps a little. Fishes in the summer. Hunts. Doesn't take much to keep him. Here today and gone tomorrow. Manages to live, after a fashion."

"Have you seen him lately?"

"He was here this spring after the ice went out. Headed up river. Stopped in and traded some fur for supplies. I don't encourage him much. Just as soon not have him around."

"Me, too. I think I jumped him a couple of days back—or rather he jumped me. We had a tussle, and when I woke up he was gone. A man like that oughtn't to be at large. If I had time I'd go after him."

Martineau laughed. "You'd need time, all right. He has an uncanny way of appearing and disappearing. I wouldn't want the job of running him down."

"Why should anybody try to protect him?"

"Protect him? What do you mean? Who is trying to protect him?" Was there keener scrutiny in the glance of the black eyes? Kinkaid thought so.

"Well, Miss McLeod, for instance. When I asked her who Less Hoose is, she refused to tell me."

"You know the McLeods?" There was no doubt of the scrutiny now. Martineau's casual air had vanished.

"Yes. Put up there last night. Nice girl, Mary McLeod. Too bad she has to live up here away from everything."

"Think so?" There was an unpleasant rasp in the man's voice. "Well, let me tell you there are worse places to live than here on the Churchill."

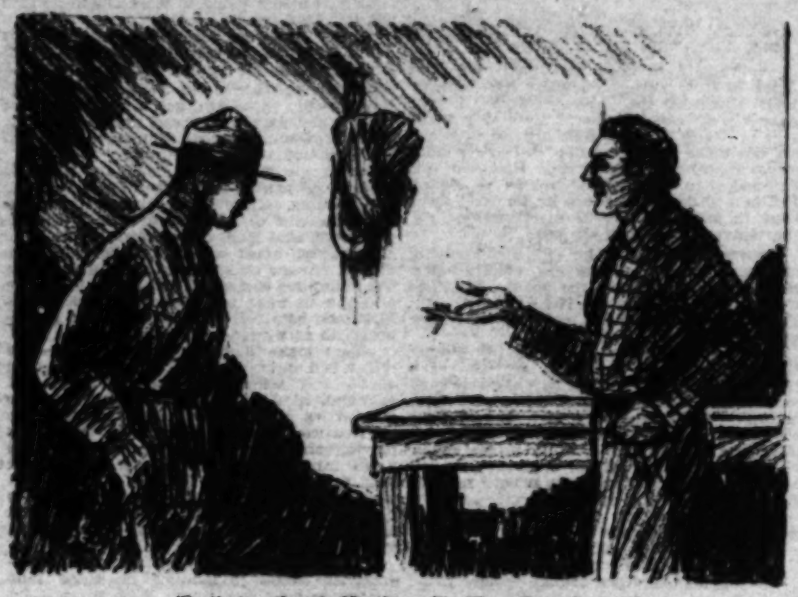
"Probably a lot of 'em," agreed Kinkaid. "What I mean is, there's so much she's missing."

"And I suppose you put in the evening telling her about what she's missing—" The man paused, and the eyes, grown of the utmost guardedness, bored into Kinkaid's for a short breath. "Pardon my rudeness, I'm irritable. The fact is, I am going to marry Mary McLeod, and, loving her as I do, I cannot help resenting any influence that might tend to make her dissatisfied with life here in the outlands. She is missing nothing. She was born in a company post, far from your so-called civilization, and she has known no other life than that of the outposts. One does not miss what one has never had."

As the man talked, Kinkaid remembered the words of John Holt—"Damn' snake—slick as hell—shame if he got her." The calm assurance with which Martineau stated that he was going to marry the girl, and his mention of his love for her, angered Kinkaid as nothing within his memory had ever angered him. Nevertheless, his voice betrayed no hint of affair as he replied: "We talked of this and that. We had plenty of time while the old men argued."

"Old men?"

"Yes—fellow named Holt—prospector, I take it."



"Is that a threat, Martineau?" The other shrugged. "One does not threaten the police."

"I know him—another lunatic—always hunting the mother lode. Not violent like Hoose, but just as crazy. So they were at it again, eh? It's a pity he can't let old Angus alone. Some day I'm afraid there's going to be trouble. Angus goes pretty heavy on the jug now and then, and sometimes I'm afraid he'll lose his head and annihilate Holt."

"They seemed the best of friends, and I'm sure Miss McLeod doesn't share your fear."

"She would scarce express such fear to a—a stranger. If she refused to discuss a man like Hoose with a passing policeman, it is hardly likely she would have discussed her own father. You do not know her as I do."

The studied insult of the man's words stung quick reply: "Not now, maybe. But I'm going to know her better. You see, Martineau, you are not married to her—yet."

Kinkaid had risen to his feet, and the two stood face to face, glaring into each other's eyes. Martineau's voice rasped harsh: "So you're coming back?"

"Yes, I'm coming back."

There was an open sneer in the man's retort: "Your report, I take it, will recommend that, for the good of the Service, a station should be established at McLeod's, such station to be manned by a single constable, and that constable, Kinkaid."

"You're a smart young man, Martineau—much too smart to be throwing yourself away upon a little trading post on the Churchill. On the whole, I think much good might come of a detachment established at McLeod's."

"They ought to send a good man—one, for instance, that can handle a man like Hoose. The general health hereabouts is not of the best among—outsiders."

"Is that a threat, Martineau?"

The other shrugged. "One does not threaten the police. It was merely a warning. So many things may happen here in the wilderness—even to a policeman. Neither does a gentleman threaten a guest."

"At least, I can let down that bar," said Kinkaid, as he met Martineau's eyes with an icy smile. "I'll be going."

Again the man shrugged. "As you please. Can I help you with your duffle?"

"No, thanks. Rather used to going it alone, you know," and, picking up his duffle, he strode to the beach and launched his canoe.

In the gathering twilight, as he paddled down the long straight reach of the river, Kinkaid felt that the eyes of Martineau were upon him. "There's something queer here—damned queer. I wonder what his game is. Hoose is no more crazy than I am, and neither is Holt. If Old Man Downey will let me, I'll find out!"

CHAPTER VII

FELIX MARTINEAU stood at his window and watched Constable Kinkaid push away from the landing and turn the bow of his canoe down river. Hate smouldered deep within the black eyes. He stood at the window until the canoe was but a speck in the distance, then turned abruptly and strode across the room to the opposite wall. On the wall was a rack of fine fur in the moulting of Felix Martineau. Descendant of a long line of voyageurs, his love for the wilderness was intimate and passionate, albeit he himself was a product of the city. His father had married early and romantically, and lacking the imagination that had carried his forebears far afield, he had settled comfortably into an excise position in Quebec.

Gabriel Martineau received advancement commensurate with his ability, and at the age of forty-one he was a rotund, jolly man, with a fondness for good wines and for figures—feminine and mathematical. He presided over an office of many clerks, maintained a home in keeping with his standing, had his twenty-year-old son in a good school, and was paying premiums upon life-insurance policies to the ultimate value of thirty thousand dollars.

It was in that year that a certain alleged marquis, sojourning in Quebec, met and became enamoured of Madame Martineau, whose beauty and vivacity, despite her thirty-eight years, provoked many an envious glance and nasty whisper among the younger though less favored of her coterie. Flattered by the attention of the titled adventurer, she considered ways and means of ridding herself of the encumbrance of her rotund exciseman.

Madame Martineau was a rather remarkable person, in that she bore no illusions regarding her son. She knew him for what he was, a clever, conscienceless ingrate who would stop at nothing to further his own ends. She sounded him out, guardedly at first, with veiled hints as to division of spoils—a marquis for herself, thirty thousand for him—one can do much with thirty thousand when one is young and ambitious.

The newspapers of Quebec duly reported the demise of Gabriel Martineau, in the forty-second year of his life, not omitting to mention his record of faithful and efficient service to the public, together with dignified expressions of commendation and regret over the signatures of his superiors, and extending the sympathy of the city for the bereaved widow and son.

Certain formal proceedings were gone through and the sum of thirty thousand dollars passed from the account of an insurance company to the hand of Felix Martineau. Three months later the newspapers reported upon inside pages the quiet marriage of the adventuring marquis to Felicie Diane Martineau, relict of the late Gabriel Martineau.

In ignoring the Almanach de Gotha, Felicie Diane Martineau committed grievous error. Her marquis proved to be a counterfeit of the thinnest gilding, but with accurate information concerning the thirty thousand dollars which would accrue upon the death of M. Martineau. But the marquis also committed error in that he neglected to advise himself concerning the arrangement between Felicie Diane and Felix.

In fact, he knew nothing of such arrangement until the day following his wedding, when disillusionment followed rapidly upon both sides. The pair departed the city, presumably for their estates in France.

Felicie Diane returned unheralded to Quebec. She did not try to locate Felix, for, as has been recorded, she knew her own son. But—she gets along. They do.

In the cabin on the Churchill, Felix Martineau finished his supper, washed his dishes, and returned them to their proper shelves. He seated himself, and for several moments drummed upon the table top with his fingers. He got up, walked to the window, and peered into the darkness.

"Damn the police!" he repeated savagely. Crossing to a corner he returned to the table and carefully removed the canvas covering from a 'cello of marvelous workmanship. For some moments he stood fondling the instrument, touching it, gently stroking it, scrutinizing bridge and ivory pegs. With the instrument in his hands, the savage gleam faded from the black eyes, and the swarthy features relaxed into a Christlike gentleness. The nervous restlessness was gone, and he spent a half hour in selecting certain music from a comprehensive collection. Arranging the rack to his satisfaction, he adjusted his bow and with rapt absorption tuned his instrument carefully setting its spike into a little pit he had made in the floor. Then, for hours he played, the rich tones of the most human of all instruments filling the room with the souls of dead masters. Bach, Chopin, Wagner—the artistic soul of Martineau scorned Debussy, and the Bolshevik Strauss. He played with an inborn feeling augmented by a sure technique that had delighted his instructors and, upon an occasion, had won the unstinted praise of a world-honored director of symphonies. Then, the printed page was forgotten, and the instrument crashed into the wild, weird chansons of his wilderness-roving forbears. Roaring cascades, foaming rapids, the crash and rumble of thunder, the voice of the wind in the tree tops, the rending and grinding of ice—and, again, the plaintive wail of a lost youngling, the murmur of brooks, the gentle lap-slap of tiny wavelets, the trill of mating birds, the pervading hum of insects, the illusive, nameless symphony—faint, mysterious, all but inaudible—that is the silence of the North. And again the crash of thunder, the long howl of the wolf, the pound and surge of surf, the roar of guns in battle . . .

It was after midnight when Martineau went to bed. "I should have let Hoose finish him," he muttered. "But the country would have been full of police—maybe Old Man Downey himself—and if it should come to a showdown Hoose hasn't got either the brains or the nerve to outguess 'em. If Holt has

Many times in my past life I have become careless about the use of "NO-DE-KA" and my teeth have become sore and loose and I remembered what the old Doctor told me and I am willing to pass it on to you.

I have also prescribed "NO-DE-KA" to my patients, for the past twenty-five years, some instances where they have been ordered to have their teeth extracted for one thing or another and have found in each and every case, where they have followed my advice, that it was unnecessary and their teeth troubles disappeared as soon as the gums became hard and solid and now I have decided to give it to the world as I believe there is nothing on the market like it, or anywhere near as effective. It simply annihilates pyorrhea, eats off tartar, sweetens the breath, hardens the gums, whitens the teeth and by acting as a germicide I believe adds to the health and happiness of every individual who uses it by aiding digestion. At least it has done it with me, and I HAVE NEVER SPENT A CENT WITH THE DENTIST. It is applied like tooth powder with a tooth brush, as I find that is the most effective way. I have also learned that a certain style and shape of brush that is able to reach all the cracks and corners and create and stimulate a circulation of the blood in and about the roots of the teeth is quite advantageous, and so I am offering to give away such a brush to the first two hundred who answer this ad and enclose $1.00 for one Month's treatment.

CARE OF THE BODY

but never go beyond the point of fatigue or pain.

Strive for agility, litheness, grace and form; seek perfection of motion rather than strength or power. Elasticity is more desirable than bulging muscles.

Most important of all, remember that exercising is not something you must indulge in for a week or two or even until the constipation is overcome. Make up your mind, once you have commenced therapeutic corrective exercising, that you will continue such exercises for the rest of your life. Start wisely, continue daily, and make it just as necessary a period of your life as sleep, food and rest.

In next week's issue I shall continue from the exercise period of the daily routine in the average person's life and stress the breakfast, noon and evening meals, together with the necessary hygiene.

When you have collected this final series of articles, you will have an excellent practical regime of conduct which, if followed, will generally succeed in overcoming the mother of disease—constipation.

Influenza Epidemics

The most disastrous feature of any epidemic is the fear hysteria which undermines resistance and destroys good health. There is no modern epidemic which should induce, the mass fear or hysteria commonly present under such conditions. This is especially true of an epidemic such as influenza, in which the mortality rate can be reduced to nothing if we but used the sound common-sense precautions frequently recommended in this department.

First and foremost is a well-poised mind free from the destructive effects of fear. This constitutes half the immunity against infection. The other half must lie with the power of the body to throw off toxic poison. An epidemic always must find the soil in which to grow. The people who are chronically constipated, filling themselves with excessive refined sweets and who overstuff in general constitute such a soil. A preventive against influenza must be found in those dietetic and hygienic habits which will foster the maximum quantity of toxin poison elimination.

When the attack is already present there is still no reason for fear or worry. Influenza is not a dangerous disease unless we make it so. I wish I could emphasize this to every man, woman and child. When we complicate the disease with useless drugs and serums, then perhaps we approach the danger point, but treating influenza by the common-sense methods which I have frequently recommended should bring with it no mortality and an easy, spontaneous, unaided recovery.

When the first symptoms manifest themselves—the temperature and respiratory symptoms—stop eating. Your body does not need food; it needs rest from food. Instead of deluding yourself with the idea that by eating you are building up your strength, get the thought instead that every bit of food you put in, when the body is ravaged by fever, is that much additional refuse which must be discharged.

Naturally, you will feel no hunger, as is true in virtually all acute disease. The throat is usually inflamed. Swallowing is difficult. There is no appetite.

Why not interpret nature's signals intelligently and refrain from eating?

The fever should be combatted in the only sensible way, namely, by water. The bowels should be flushed repeatedly until the water comes out clean. A temperature of one or two degrees above normal can be borne with comparative safety.

Fever should be controlled preferably by means of cold water abdominal applications sufficient to extract the body heat to the desired temperature. It is not advisable to try to reduce the temperature to normal too quickly. A mild temperature will have the effect of combusting the body poisons. A high temperature is much more difficult to withstand and should be controlled.

Rest in bed is imperative. Don't try to be a "wise Aleck" and continue work. It does not pay.

The body should be kept warm after the fever has been combatted; chilling should be avoided. However, this does not imply that the windows must be kept closed and the room stuffy. All respiratory diseases, barring none, need copious quantities of fresh air.

During the lying-in period, after the fever has subsided, the diet should be very light, indeed. It would be better to eat a few mouthfuls, say, every two to three hours, than to force in a full meal beyond assimilative capacity. Fruit of all kinds and description—fresh, dried, stewed, or canned, should occupy the leading position on the dietetic list. Vegetables, cereals and their products, and dairy stuffs should be in the distinctive minority or not eaten at all until the disease has run its course.

Great care should be used after one recovers. Moderation in food quantity should be rigidly practiced. For at least a fortnight the diet should be confined to nothing more than fruits and vegetables, raw, cooked, and baked.

Strain of every kind should be avoided. Whatever work you are doing should be frequently interrupted by short periods of rest. For at least a year after one has recovered from the flu, great care should be exercised in preventing complications. These complications are usually along the lines of respiratory diseases or systemic diseases, such as rheumatism, arthritis, etc.

To my way of thinking, one of the most responsible causes for influenza complications is the stupid way we treat it. There is no drug or serum which is beneficial in the treatment of this disease. This holds true for the multitudinous sprays and gargles which infest the medicine cabinet. Whatever bug-killing we are going to do can be done effectively only by the blood stream itself. Every dollar spent for these prepared drugs or medicines is not only that much wasted, but also a retardation pre-house, in turn, hated Martineau. Whereupon, on the second day after their arrival at the post, Hoose broached his plans for the winter.

"I'm a-goin' trappin'. I'll fetch in my fur on the break-up so's I'll have time to rip down an' run in a batch of hooch for the spring trade'. But I don't, I-goin', to have anybody, white or red, nosin' around my claim. Do you get me?"

"I don't know—yet," answered Martineau, relieved by the man's reply. "I believed him enough so I'm going to put in my stakes just below his."

"Aye, ye never can tell."

"Are you going to work your claim right away?"

"Nae, lad. I canna leave my stock. Wi' Mary gone there's none to look after the beasties but me."

"She'll be back in a couple of weeks.

"Nae, she'll be stayin' the winter doon in the provinces."

"The winter! Down in the provinces! That damned Kinkaid!"

"Nae, nae, lad! Kinkaid had naught to do wi' it. For a long time the lass has wanted to have a year's schoolin' an' I hae be'n puttin' her off till the farm should pay. She's a gude lass, an' eager to learn, an' to see how the life goes outside."

"You're a fool, Angus McLeod! She'll never come back to this."

"Aye, she'll come back. Remember, lad, she was born in the outland. The life back there, 'twill stifle her. But she's worked hard an' earnt the schoolin'. I gi' her what money I had an' a letter to the Company at Winnipeg. They'll see her safe in a school."

Martineau turned away with a shrug and as he stepped into his canoe and shoved off, McLeod's shaggy head nodded slowly. "Maybe John Holt is right—there's summat I' the lad's een I dinna' like, at times. 'Twould be as weel, mayhap, an the lass found someone else. 'Twas a likely lad, that young Kinkaid."

CHAPTER IX

UPON leaving Martineau's post on the Churchill, Constable Kinkaid proceeded directly to detachment headquarters, some two hundred miles to the southeastward. Corporal Downey laid down Kinkaid's report and turned to the younger man, who was busily furbishing his outfit. "You believe this Seal River business was a murder, do you?"

"It looks that way. If I could get in there in the spring I think I could clear it up. A lot of the natives were away fishing when I was there. David Gaunt is satisfied it was a murder, and he told me that if I'd return in the spring when the Indians would be back on the river, he'd go in with me. He says they'll talk to him."

"Aye, they'll talk to Gaunt. An' this other matter—this man that attacked you on the Churchill. What makes you think he wasn't a lunatic? I see you've noted that this Martineau says, out an' out, that he's subject to crazy spells."

Kinkaid smiled. "That's one reason I don't believe he's crazy. Another thing—I don't believe it was he knocked me out. It was someone else."

"Some one else! Your report don't mention some one else."

"I didn't see anyone. All I know is that I just about had him licked when all of a sudden I got a crack behind the ear and everything went black. When I came to I was alone. I don't believe that, from the position he was in, he could have struck that blow. I looked the ground over carefully, but couldn't find anything to show there was anyone else there. But I'm positive there was, just the same."

"An' you want to go back?"

"Yes, sir. I want to go back. There's something queer up there. Why should I have been attacked? Why should Mary McLeod have refused to tell me anything about this Less Hoose except that she hated him? Why should old Angus McLeod have flashed her the signal to keep quiet? And why should this Martinean want to make me believe Hoose is crazy?"

Downey nodded. "Seems a little off-color, don't it? I know McLeod—known him for years. He's all right. This Martineau I never heard of."

"I don't like him. John Holt told me to watch out for him. Somehow—well, he don't seem to fit."

The old corporal nodded. "When you find a man that don't fit—watch him. So you run across John Holt, eh? Still prospectin', I suppose."

The constable smiled. "Yes—prospecting and arguing with McLeod."

Corporal Downey grinned. "Let's see, McLeod's girl—she ought to be around eighteen, nineteen by now—"

"Twenty."

"—black hair an' sort of brownish eyes—"

"Brown hair that shines when the sunlight is on it. And her eyes are dark blue—"

"You're a slave to duty, son. An' the amount of information you've collected concernin' at least one inhabitant of the country is truly amazin'. An' this Martineau, now—how did you you say he is?"

"Why, abut my age,—I guess."

"H-m-m—you're prob'ly right in recommendin' that he'll need watchin'. On the whole, boy, you've conducted this patrol with credit to the Service. 'Twas not an easy one-man patrol, an' you did right in not tryin' to follow those Seal River natives to their fishin' greunds. Durin' the winter they'll be scattered on the trap lines, so there's nothin' we can do till spring."

When snow flew that fall it flew with a vengeance. October ushered in a cold snap that froze the bays and the marshes and smaller lakes and sent the wild ducks and the shore birds scurrying southward two weeks before their usual time. Blizzard followed blizzard, and November saw the country buried under the heaviest snowfall in years. Corporal Downey and his two constables had their work cut out. Trap lines were snowed under, sickness was prevalent among the natives, and the members of the little detachment, battling against pneu-

Constipation

Were we to synopsize the preceding articles on this subject we would find that wrong living habits are the main elements responsible for the presence of constipation.

Such habits ramify from every branch of our daily existence—the hours we sleep, the baths we take, the food we eat, the thoughts we think, our recreation, clothes, water drinking, surgical history, sex life, childbirth experiences, and so on. Each case must be considered on its specific points.

The best I can do in this series of articles is to generalize and ask you to fit the details given to conform to your daily routine. Therefore, in this article and in the next I shall consider the average routine of the average man or woman and show the methods of procedure for overcoming this ailment.

Hence, I shall take a typical twenty-four-hour-day period in the life of an average man or woman and dissect it into its component hours and minutes of activity and habits.

We awake from a night's sleep. What has been the nature of such sleep? Has it been restless, perturbing, nightmarish and dream-filled? If so, it has not been productive of the greatest recuperation of nervous and vital energy. A healthy, sound sleep should be dreamless and restful.

The tired feeling, sometimes bordering on exhaustion, which one feels on awakening, may be due to a number of elements. Mental peace and calm are necessary preludes to sound, dreamless sleep.

Ample fresh air and the right kind of night clothes and coverings are incidental physical factors. It is a mistake to "bundle up" too warmly. It is also a mistake to pile on seven or eight inferior blankets—one good blanket with its lightness will produce a better quality of sleep than many. Weight detracts from refreshing sleep. Night clothes are largely habit rather than an essential.

The average constipated person has a poor skin. Sound sleep under such circumstances will foster better skin health.

The nervous and vital energy secured from sleep is a prime requisite in the general overcoming of constipation. Hence, we cannot briefly dismiss this subject, for it is worthy of serious consideration.

The average night owl will oftentimes lack the nervous energy which so stimulates intestinal peristalsis. I have had as patients many night workers who have completely overcome their constipation merely by changing to day work, of course, using the other phases of diet and hygiene in conjunction with their changed hours.

Were we to live a perfectly natural life our sleeping hours would conform to the animal creatures; that is, from dawn to dawn. Night life of any kind is depleting and debilitating.

There is no such thing as a set period of hours for any one individual. Health writers who say eight hours of sleep, eight hours of work and eight hours of recreation are using symmetrical figures having little physiological merit. The amount of sleep one requires depends upon physical condition, mental attitude, age and general health.

One should sleep until the desire for sleep is gone, provided, of course, that sleepiness is not a by-product of pathology. The unnatural sleepiness of autointoxication or some disease is an abnormal phenomenon and not an element in the average individual's existence.

During healthful sleep not only does the nervous system recharge itself, but the major portion of peristaltic activity takes place. The body, unhampered by extraneous activity, centers its powers on getting rid of the day's wastes. It is for this reason that the desire for bowel activity in normal conditions should be greatest on awakening from sleep.

Under no circumstances should one remain in bed after awakening. There is always a temptation to do so with sluggish people. Rest is no longer needed and good physiological habits are thus thwarted.

The demand for bowel activity should be at once satisfied. Delay may cause increased constipation. Oftentimes on arising the bowels are invigorated by the consumption of one or two glasses of water, taken warm or cold as desired. The addition of a very small quantity of orange, grapefruit, lime or lemon juice will make the water more palatable and more easily taken. Anyhow, early-morning water drinking is a good habit, whether one is constipated or not.

Make the early-morning stool a routine habit, thus training the perineal and pelvic muscles to a time function as well as a desire consciousness. There is no necessity for straining. Straining may sometimes produce rupture, prolapsis, or uterine or hemorrhoidal protrusion. Persistence is more desirable than strain. This function accomplished, the next thing in the morning routine should be the regular setting-up exercises.

The training for this can be secured in several ways. "Care of the Body" broadcasts every morning from KHJ at 7:30. If this hour does not fit your conditions there are other periods on the air earlier and later. If the radio exercises do not fit your needs, go to the phonograph dealer who has definite exercise records for sale. These give you detailed instructions on the technique for taking the setting-up work.

If none of these suits, then I would recommend that you visit any commercial or general public gymnasium. The Y.W.s and Y.M.s have gyms. Every large city club and beach club also has a gymnasium with a trained physical director. There are several commercial gymnasiums which specialize in abdominal and pelvic work. If you do not know how to take these exercises any one of these institutions will satisfactorily fulfill your needs. It is not a difficult thing to learn the necessary exercises.

Ninety per cent of the work is abdominal and pelvic. I have prepared a beautifully illustrated, colored chart on exercises which I shall forward to any "Care of the Body" reader for exactly what it costs me to prepare—fifty cents.

The chart gives not only exercises for constipation, but covers nearly every disease that is helped by exercises. By consulting it you can see pictures before you describing the specific exercises which are helpful in overcoming most of the common conditions of disease.

If you have not been accustomed to exercises in the past don't make a real enthusiastic start and do half an hour or forty-five minutes of strenuous calisthenics. The next day your muscles will be sore and tired and you will go through a discouraging period.

Unless you are extraordinarily strong-willed you will drop the exercising at the close of a day or two. It is much wiser to start slowly. I counsel many of my patients to commence with but two or three minutes of exercising the first day and then gradually increase until they take approximately thirty to forty minutes.

Even when you have become thoroughly adapted to exercising each period should be liberally interspersed with rest. For instance, if you are doing a leg-raising movement, do it eight or ten times and then lie on the floor and rest for a minute or a minute and a half. Avoid strain. Put pep into your work.

She looked up swiftly. "Martineau? What about Martineau?" "I don't know. I'll find that out, too. Good-by."

monia and measles, nursed more than one poor Indian back to health under the most trying circumstances of cold, and hunger, and filth. Others they buried.

Constable Smith played out and was replaced by a fresh man, but Kinkaid "ate it up," returning off one patrol to plunge out on another, until even the veteran Downey called a halt and ordered him to take three days' rest. At the end of the three days he was off again on a patrol that might well have been his last. For, as if to compensate for the long winter, spring came on with a rush that took the snow out from under Kinkaid's sled and left him without means of transporting his outfit in a country of flooded muskeg, submerged swamp, and torrents of snow water that rushed down over the surface of the ice-locked rivers.

He cached the sled, fed the dogs all they could eat, filled his own stomach, and, making up a pack of a pair of blankets and what food he could carry, abandoned the rest, and labored on, for hours at a time wading belly-deep in the ice water that covered muskeg and swamp.

Several times he narrowly escaped drowning by being swept off his feet and one night he spent among the limbs of a spruce tree, darkness having overtaken him while he was attempting to cross a swamp whose depth of water necessitated much swimming from tree to tree before he could again find a submerged footing. That was the fourth night since he had abandoned his sled, and late the following morning he gained a ridge and, more dead than alive, managed to build a fire and roast the last of his salt pork. Upon being turned loose, the dogs had promptly deserted him.

He wrung out his soggy blankets, and spread them to dry upon a rack improvised from spruce poles, heaped wood upon the fire, and piece by piece dried his saturated clothing. As warmth returned to his body his spirits rose. Ascending the ridge to its highest point, he surveyed the country. He judged that detachment lay up river some thirty miles to the westward. But—thirty miles! Thirty miles of submerged swamp and muskeg, above the surface of which the higher spots stood out like islands. If he only had a canoe!

Further exploration revealed that the ridge upon which he had camped formed an elongated island of several miles in length and varying in width from a few rods to more than a half a mile. Also, that it fairly teemed with game driven out of the swamps and the lower lands by the high water.

With a club he knocked over a fat porcupine, skinned it, and returned to his fire, whistling.

The afternoon he spent in getting out dry spruce for a raft. It was slow work, with only his belt ax; he had stripped his pack down to blankets, revolver, belt ax, and his chunk of salt pork.

By night he judged he had enough timber to float him, and in the morning he stalked, and with his revolver shot a bull moose. With strips cut from the tough hide he bound his raft together. Poling it to the head of the island, he rigged a mast and steering sweep and roasted several days' rations of porcupine meat while he waited for a favorable wind.

The following morning he hoisted his blanket for a sail and by constant aid from the pole he could make two or three miles an hour. He wished for a stiffer breeze, and when he got it, later in the day, he cursed it fervently. For the scarcely perceptible increase in speed was more than offset by the discomfort of standing wet to the knees in icy wave wash. For, as the breeze stiffened, the clumsy craft lowered her blunt snout and plowed through the water in a series of wallowing plunges that momentarily threatened dissolution.

But the thongs of green moose hide stood the strain, and just upon the edge of darkness Kinkaid made landing at a point only a few miles below the detachment.

That evening Corporal Downey sat late at his desk while Kinkaid snored in his bunk. He had read the constable's terse report, and reread the more terse diary whose soggy pages bespoke a volume of physical hardship between the coldly penciled lines.

"An' he come in grinnin'," muttered Downey, "an' wants to know how's chances for a bowl of hot tea! He's worth a dozen like Constable Smith. He eats this kind of stuff up." The old corporal laid down the diary and, with a gesture of impatience, picked up an official communication from the desk and scowled at its typed lines. "An' now comes an order transferin' him to Prince Rupert to guard the dry dock!"

The following morning Downey called Kinkaid into the office. "Take it all in all, you've had a pretty rough winter of it. How'd you like a soft job for a while? Take the Prince Rupert dry dock—"

"Not for me! This has been the best winter I ever put in. Something doing all the time—something really worth while, I mean."

"How about the C.I.B.? They say you're pretty good on this fingerprint stuff and laboratory work."

"It's mighty interesting, all right. But it's nothing like this. You see, sir, I've been in four years and a half, and I'd begun to think I knew all about policing—till I came up here. Then I began to find out I didn't know anything. I know now I wouldn't like to go back to Ottawa, and as for the dry-dock detail—my time will be up in June, and if I drew that detail, I'd sure be glad when June rolled around."

"You're thinkin' of takin' your discharge?"

Kinkaid did not answer for a full minute, and when he did his eyes met squarely the kindly eyes of the older man. "I've wanted to have a talk with you, sir, when I got the chance—" He hesitated, and Downey encouraged him with a nod. "I'll be twenty-seven in June. It's time I was making up my mind what I'm going to do. If I take my discharge, I'll have to hunt up some kind of a job, and I haven't the education to hold down a high-grade job."

"Why not stay in the Service? I've be'n in more than twenty-five years, an' I've never regretted it."

"If I thought I could ever make half the name you've made, I wouldn't hesitate a minute."

"Rot, lad! I'm only a corporal."

Kinkaid grinned. "Yes, and I'd rather be Corporal Downey than to be the Commissioner! Lord, sir! If you knew how they speak of you—from the Commissioner down! And it isn't only in the Service. Men like Gaunt and that old priest from up on the Mackenzie—Father Giroux—men who know! They all swear by you."

"They're old friends," said Corporal Downey. "They're prejudiced."

"Then everybody that knows you is prejudiced. Anyway, I've got till June to think it over."

"Aye—till June. Did you say David Gaunt is willin' to go up Seal River with you?"

"Yes, sir. He said that he'd go up with me in the spring."

Corporal Downey's lips as he raised his eyes a certain piece of paper on his desk—the paper that was the order transferring Constable Kinkaid to Prince Rupert. There was a certain grim tightening at the corners of Corporal Doweny's lips as he raised his eyes to the constable's. "Better prepare for a long patrol, lad," he said. "As soon as the ice goes out you'll be startin' for Gaunt's. An' when you clean up the Seal River matter you had best swing down onto the Churchill. I believe you reported that certain inhabitants of the country might need watchin'."

Kincaid caught the twinkle in the keen eyes of his superior. "Thank you, sir. I was afraid you had me slated for some easy job."

Alone in his little office Corporal Downey grinned to himself as he indited a letter to his superintendent. He had helped break in this very superintendent, years ago. It was an informal letter, that would accompany an official report that, in effect, countermanded Kinkaid's transfer to Prince Rupert.

"Rank insubordination on my part," he muttered, "an' maybe I'll get fired for it. But the lad's the kind we need in the Service. When June comes, he'll stay. That dry-dock job would have drove him out."

CHAPTER X

BY THE time winter clamped down upon the Churchill, both Martineau and Hoose knew that their claims were worthless. Working long hours with shovel and windlass, they had sunk a shaft into each claim, deeper than Holt's pay shaft, and had taken out nothing but barren sand.

McLeod had not appeared on the creek, and Holt did not reopen his shaft, but spent his days chipping away at the rock ledges in his untiring search for the mother lode.

"He's tricked us, somehow," said Martineau viciously, as he and Hoose stared into the bottom of the second shaft. "No use going down any deeper. It's going to snow tonight, and we might as well quit now and get back to the post before the freeze-up."

"Thought it was damn' funny he'd let me an' you in one a good thing. But how'n hell did he know? An' I wonder if them McLeod claims is any good?"

Martineau shrugged, as his eyes came to rest on the McLeod stakes that reached from the water's edge to the rock wall of the little valley. "We'll know in the spring," he said. "Holt told us the creek might be spotted. I don't see why in the devil there should be gold to one side of a pay claim if there's none above or below. I expect McLeod will find himself in the same boat with us." But, despite his expressed expectation, he resolved to redouble his effort to marry Mary McLeod.

That same day, the two broke camp and as they disappeared around a bend of the creek, John Holt grinned a farewell from the rim rocks.

Less Hoose had no intention of wintering with Martineau in the trading post on the Churchill. There was no love lost between the ill-assorted pair. The rather fastidious Martineau despised the uncouth Hoose, and Hoose, in turn, hated Martineau. Wherupon, on the second day after their arrival at the post, Hoose broadcast his plans for the winter.

"I'm a-goin' trappin'. I'll fetch in my fur on the break-up so's I'll have time to slip down an' run in a batch of booch for the spring tradin'. But I hain't a-goin' to hang around here all winter with you sawin' away on that damn' fiddle half the nights."

Martineau shrugged. "As you please, ugly one. I can do without you. If I am to outfit you, though, I must know where you intend to trap."

"I don't know. Guess that slew crick up this side of Holt's would be as good as any. I seen lots of signs in there along them flat lakes, an' there's plenty good thick timber fer campin'.

Martineau assented, and as he watched the other's canoe vanish in the distance he laughed softly to himself. "Good-by, filthy one. I shall now air out my house. Hole up for the winter like a beast in your den, while I live in comfort, one might say in luxury, with my music and my books, knowing that Holt will have no need to visit his gold cache until spring—and when he does, ugly one, it will be me, and not you, who will profit by the visit."

The winter passed with Martineau varying the monotony with hunting excursions upon which he satisfied himself that Hoose was keeping his vigil, and with an occasional interchange of visits with McLeod, whom he plied with liquor in a fruitless attempt to loosen the old man's tongue to the point of making further disclosures concerning Holt and his strike.

The first ten days of warm winds and rain Martineau spent comfortably at his post; then, making up a trail outfit, he slipped his canoe into the water and headed up river. The nonappearance of Hoose at the post surprised him not at all, and as he plied his paddle he smiled with superior tolerance at the man's clumsy ruse for spying upon the prospector.

At McLeod's he was met by the half-wit, who informed him that his father had left at daybreak for Holt's to dig gold. Thereupon, Marineau proceeded up river, cached his canoe, and followed afoot along the ridge, keeping the Scotsman in sight.

In his little valley John Holt had wintered alone.

The creek had risen, flooded the flats, and receded within its banks when one day Angus McLeod appeared, laboriously poling his canoe against the swift waters of the run-out:

"An' what brings you up here this time of year? I wasn't expectin' you for a month or two, yet."

"Weel, 'tis like this: This winter the lad seems really to be improvin'. Ye know how he's be'n—wi' the mind o' a child o' four in the body o' a mon—but, slowly, his mind's beginnin' to wake up. He's askin' questions, an' takin' notice o' things he's never noticed before, an' he's takin' holt more an' more wi' the chores, until now I can leave him alone. He's even wantin' to read—lookin' at the pictures in books an' the like. I'm thinkin' that, maybe, if I could get him in some kind o' a school, where there was doctors an' them that knows about such things, maybe they could do somethin' for him."

John Holt smote the table with his fist. "By God, we'll do it! An' then there's Mary to think of. Now, you look at here, Angus—I'm a good friend of yourn, even if you do hoe yer pertaters accordin' to the Gospel of Jerymier, er Adam an' Eve, er whoever you claim wrote 'em—"

"A mon need nae apology for fearin' the Lord an' believin' the Scruptures."

"Hold on, now—we'll git to that later. First you listen to me. Mary, she's got it in her head she wants to go to school. Fer's I kin see it ain't goin' to hurt her none. The way I look at it, edjucation's like whisky—it's all right if took in moderation, but too much of it goes to the head. Take me, now, I've always abstained total on both. Me an' you's gettin' along in years, Angus, an' we got some responsibilities onto us. If there's a doctor somewheres that kin start that boy's head workin', we got to find him. An' if Mary wants to go to school, she'd ought to be let go. I'd like to see her got out of this country fer a while. Git her away from that damn' skunk of a Martineau—"

"I'm thinkin' the lad really loves her. For why else should he be courtin' her? I hae nae money—only the farm—"

"I'm tellin' you he's crooked as a dog's hine leg! S'pose he does love her—she's worse off'n if he didn't. An' don't you go foolin' yerself that you ain't got no money! Them three claims is got gold enough into 'em to make the three of you rich. An' Martineau's claim ain't worth the powder to blow it to hell. He knows that, by now, an' he'll try harder'n ever to git her. What we got to do is git her out of the country."

"She's be'n out all winter," answered McLeod. "When she went down to the recorder's, I gi' her what money I'd saved an' told her to go to school. It wasn't much, but I thought it would last till spring. An' that's why I'm here. 'Tis too early to work on the farm, an' I thought if I could dig some gold out o' the claim I could tak' the lad down an' see if anything could be done for him, an' if there was anything left over, an' the lass wanted to stay on fer a spell at the school—"

"Now ye're talkin'. But you don't know nothin' about minin'. It'll be a month yet—maybe two, before we can do anything here. Ground ain't thawed out yet, an' after she does thaw, it's got to dreen. We ain't got no pump. We'll put in pumps an' an injyne later."

SURGERY, TREATMENTS AND HOKUS POKUS FAIL

Note lower part of abdomen is flat, few have this contour. Not powerful muscles, but short ligaments give this health assuring contour in which stomach and intestines will be held up in normal position as shown in Fig 2.

Fig 2

Low stomach and kinked intestines of person who has contour of abdomen shown in Fig. 4, the most common type, if more bulging, case is more extreme. Note kinks in bowel at turns and sag of transverse colon at D. Here food is retained too long, ferments and gives off poisonous gases which the blood assimilates.

The sagging also kinks the appendix, gall ducts and other ducts, causing congestion and irritation which scientists have been pointing out for years is the principal cause of many diseases including cancer. Dr. Poole's article contains accurate, easily comprehended knowledge for the permanent self cure of this condition, which if neglected leads inevitably to many derangements. PTOSLYFOLOGY

We believe there are honest men in every branch of the healing art who are striving energetically to cure disease, but there is an appalling shortage of permanent results, and sufferers tell us of going the rounds of doctors' offices submitting in many cases to treatments so violent and destructive of body equilibrium as to leave the sufferer worse for the treatment.

The more mysterious and involved the theories upon which a treatment is predicated, the larger the fees collected. However, the class who refuse to be hoodwinked by terminology and vague theories, is a large and constantly growing one, to those who can resist the strange spell of mysticism, and give thought to simple things, which the reason can grasp and safely accept as a guide for conduct this message is directed.

Extensive and thoroughly scientific investigation has shown that derangements of the body are nearly always mainly due to mechanical imperfections.

Many unpleasant symptoms of ill health such as colds, neuralgia, high blood pressure, neuritis, and the other numerous conditions due to imperfect cleaning of the blood by the liver, is not due to failure of that organ to perform its chemical function of extracting worn out cells and other effete matters from the blood and manufacturing them into digestive juices, but is due to sluggish liver caused by interference with the mechanical act of frequently squeezing bile out of the liver. More common than decayed teeth is abnormally positioned abdominal organs which produce interference with mechanical functioning. When this occurs as it so generally does in people in run down health, particularly thin people or those who have lost weight suddenly. There is no organ in the abdominal cavity nor thorax which escapes the handicap of more difficult functioning.

Deep breathing can be maintained only as a conscious effort, the action of the heart is made more difficult, the intestines sag and kink at the bends of the transverse colon, and other places, the gall bladder duct, and other important vessels often kink. There is also tendency for the appendix to kink, causing chronic appendicitis.

Science has demonstrated that the condition of dropped unfavorably placed abdominal organs, results in kinked intestines, kinked appendix, kinked bile ducts, kinked urinary ducts, and produces sluggish circulation in every organ in the abdominal cavity, and careful researches have shown this condition so common as practically never absent in any person in run down health, being particularly severe if the person is thin or has lost weight suddenly. This condition can be detected with positiveness by very simple means, but if uncorrected the afflicted person will be goaded to make the rounds of treatments, receiving for their money and time little more than professional "patter" made impressive by "physiological effect" apparatus. We say decidedly and positively, and we have the opinion of leading authorities to support us, that it is not possible to permanently restore any one handicapped with improperly placed digestive organs to vigorous health by any system of treatment, diet, exercise, or what not, until the strain is removed from stretched ligaments and the improperly placed organs are held for a time in more favorable position to functioning by correctly adapted mechanical support.

The liver is held up to the floor under the chest by five powerful cords. The other organs in the abdomen float and are kept from dropping downward by the restraint of sheets of tough ligamentous tissue in the abdominal wall. Deposits of fat also play some part in holding up the organs and rounding out turns of the intestines. Nowhere have we found it authoritatively denied that sagged intestines are the rule rather than the exception and that they produce kinking of many vessels in the abdomen. We do not believe that a single person can be found who has chronic difficulty in keeping really fit and who has to worry about diet, etc., who will not show on examination a state of sagged intestines. Any such person who shuts out of his mind a square look at the condition and a careful and intelligent consideration of the remedy is like an ostrich burying his head in the sand.

Tooth ache was a common complaint a generation or so ago, and people merely chased the pain with tooth ache medicine and left the decayed tooth to poison the blood. Low stomach is more common than decayed teeth, and exists in many people who seem to be in good health, but finally it produces disturbance of function, and if not corrected, permanent recovery to healthy vigor is impossible.

When the floor of the stomach has sagged downward it is much more difficult for that organ to churn the food properly and calls for more muscular effort to empty the stomach with a great likelihood that part of the food will tend to remain in the V-shaped pit and ferment and irritate the lining membrane of the stomach, leading ultimately to ulcer. Another point at which the dragging downward causes food to loiter too long is in the duodenum, leading here also to ulcerous conditions. But where the intestines encounter the greatest difficulty is when the food drops down into the loop formed by the sagging of the transverse colon. At this point the food is retained too long and obstinate constipation often results. We believe every case of stubborn constipation will show on examination that the transverse colon has sagged and more or less kinking resulted. We have in our long experience never seen a case of tendency to chronic constipation that has not shown this sagging and kinking. Sometimes owing to over acid condition caused by such sagging diarrhoea results.

These positions of the digestive tract though not in themselves a disease and though they do not entirely prevent the functioning of the alimentary canal, demand of the nervous and muscular system superhuman efforts to keep things moving and there is little nerve or muscle energy left for other duties.

Ultimately the slow movement of intestinal contents at these points produces inflammation which if long continued may turn to ulcers which turn only too frequently to cancer. These views are not haphazard conclusions of our own, but the settled conviction of the world's most eminent cancer specialists, surgeons and stomach specialists.

Associated with the alimentary canal are many glands and other organs connected by tubes. When the organs sag these tubes are pulled upon and flow of fluids through them is impeded. Here we have the most common underlying cause of gall bladder difficulty, of chronic appendicitis, of Lane's Kinks, etc. Attached to the abdominal organs are many delicate nerves. These are pulled upon and stretched, leading to nervous symptoms of great variety. Eminent authorities have pointed out the circulation of every organ in the abdominal cavity is rendered more or less sluggish as a result of the dragging down of the abdominal organs.

The picture we give of the far reaching and serious effects of this condition is not an exaggerated one. The remedy fortunately is simple and inexpensive and quick in action. Give to the sagged organs properly adapted support and physiological functioning is made immensely more easy. Dr. Charles Aaron, the most eminent stomach specialist in the world today has written that he has observed the results of properly adapted abdominal support for such cases for the past twenty-five years and that the results have been truly marvelous. Dr. William Osler, another very noted specialist, wrote that he "knew of no measure in such cases that afforded so great relief to distressing symptoms as a properly adapted abdominal support and that in many cases it alone sufficed."

No elastic belt of any kind, nor any ordinary store belt or surgical corset can be relied upon to give the support needed in such a way as to prevent the kinking of the colon, and to be comfortable and worn without interfering with circulation and complete freedom of muscle action. But support designed by Drs. Poole, who are doctors of ptoslyfology which treats specially of this method, give the needed support in such a way that muscle tone is actually improved and circulation throughout the whole abdomen made easier and more complete.

A very large number of people have gone to Drs. Poole suffering from a wide variety of discomforts diagnosed as slipping vertebrae, neurasthenia, toxemia, neuritis, sciatica, lumbago, intestinal stasis, ulcers and even cancers, who have obtained complete relief from bodily discomfort after wearing a support designed for them by Drs. Poole. The measure is not mysterious, it does not appeal to the imagination of those looking for some mystic charm, but it does appeal to the intelligence.

The need of such support can be clearly demonstrated and the results obtained as Dr. Aaron and other eminent authorities have stated are truly marvelous. We challenge anyone to show such unanimous endorsement among those qualified by extensive experience to know as has been accorded this simple, harmless and inexpensive measure of relief.

In cases of backache the cause lies demonstrably in practically every such case not in kidney trouble, but in the stretch on the nerves attached to the back imbedded in the sheets of tissue connected with the abdominal organs. This stretching produces pain and sometimes tendency for the vertebrae to slip. Take this drag and pull away from the back with a Dr. Poole properly adapted support and the real cause of the trouble is actually removed. To leave a dislocated arm unprotected and make frequent trips to a doctor's office or to depend upon exercise would be as stupid as is the conduct of people whose health and comfort are being undermined by dragged down abdominal organs paying out money for treatments that leave these organs as before. Massage, exercise, electricity, dieting will NOT permanently restore and hold the dragged down organs in proper position any more than that these agents can be relied upon to fill a decayed tooth, or protect a broken arm. The fault is mechanical and for real results, and permanent benefit mechanical support must be applied. We do not claim that the system known as ptoslyfology supersedes any of the branches of the healing art, but we do say and have abundant proof to support our statement, that the frequent failure of any of these systems to do more than obtain temporary relief, and all too frequently owing to the violent or debilitating character of the treatment to increase the state of ill health, is due to sagged organs not being properly supported.

People who do not understand physiological functioning and the principles of support fitting sometimes think that a support will deprive the muscles of work and render the abdomen looser than if a support is not worn. This idea is incorrect, muscles are used to move body parts, muscular tissue is not intended to be kept continuously contracted to hold up the digestive organs.

A Dr. Poole support assists and encourages muscle action and improves circulation, and the use of Dr. Poole's support has actually by improving circulation and normal use resulted in soft loose abdomens changing to firm tone. In all standard works mentioning the subject of such support the great value is affirmed.

God has given man wisdom and the power of choice, it is for you to choose whether it is wise to endure the discomfort and dangers inseparable from low stomach, kinked intestines, kinked ducts, sluggish circulation, etc., or whether you will investigate this most universally authoritatively approved measure for a condition science has demonstrated is so common in the world today as to be the rule. A remedy which is NOT DANGEROUS OR PROBLEMATICAL, that is producing results where operations and other treatments failed, and that is inexpensive. It will cost you nothing for a consultation with Dr. Percy Poole, or Dr. Georgean H. Poole. In all ordinary cases the total cost of support is $10.00. When a special ptosis pad or colon pad is required, $2.50 extra. Contrast this cost, which is an end of the expense, with the cost of long drawn out treatments, which cannot show the large and permanent beneficial results that can be shown has followed the use of a Dr. Poole support,

These supports are light, comfortable and durable and not more objectionable than other articles of clothing and should not be confused with surgical belts. If properly adapted support is not worn by a person with sagged intestines, the discomforts of ill health, of struggling to keep well, will last indefinitely in spite of any efforts the person may make, as surely as a decayed tooth would continue to give trouble unless it was properly treated by mechanical means.

Such supports as Drs. Poole fit are the keenest competition that the various branches of the healing art have to face. Because as many have testified after obtaining such support they no longer felt driven to go the rounds of doctors' offices in the hope of finding relief.

"Wait! Ain't I jest got through tellin' you we had responsibilities? You take the boy an' go outside, an' if you ain't back inside of three months you won't lose nothin'. We'll still have plenty of time to get out all the dust we want. I'll put up the gold—"

"Nae, nae!"

Holt cut the protest short. "You look at here, Angus McLeod. I'm runnin' this show! You Scotch has got the name of bein' hard-headed, but you ain't a damn' bit hard-headeder'n what I be! An' besides that, ain't I be'n a good enough friend of yourn so's you don't have to go hoggin' them younguns on me? I never had none of my own, an' if I take a notion to uncles yourn, why that's my business. Ain't Mary always seen that I got all the butter I could eat? An' besides that, what'll I do with my gold? I don't drink, an' there ain't no one to play poker with. This fall I'm goin' outside an' git me a pair of black pants, an' a di'mond ring an' all the butter I can eat; but by then I'll be packin' so much coarse gold that I won't know what to do with it. Couple hundred dollars ought to buy the best pair of pants they could make an' a couple of thousan' ought to buy a di'mon' ring, an' a man can't hold on more'n ten, fifteen dollars' worth of butter to a time, so what will I do with it?"

"Ye might build a church fer the carryin' o' the Gospel to the Injuns."

"Church—hell!"

"Ye're a blasphemous mon, John Holt! Mentionin' hell i' the same breath wi' the Church. 'Tis a wonder the Lord doesna strike ye dead!"

"He's prob'ly thinkin' about somethin' else. Anyways, I never seen no church jump sideways yet at the mention of hell. Take that preacher down in the Panamints; he use' to belier about hell by the hour. It use' to be fun to hear him of a chilly night. What these Injuns need is blankets an' shirts—not Gospel. One good tradin' post that would trade 'em honest goods to honest prices would do 'em more good than if you was to stick up a church on every bend of the crick."

"The Hudson's Bay Company sells honest goods."

"No one claims they don't. But they ain't got posts enough. I was thinkin' of Martineau an' his kind. Take me, now—if gold of mine could git your boy's brain to workin' like other folks', it would be all the church an' Gospel I'd need."

McLeod shook his head slowly, his eyes on the other's face. "I don't onderstand ye, John Holt. Ye're a blasphemous, disbelievin' heretic, an' yet—ye've a heart in ye."

"Heart! Common sense. That's all. Come on, now, we'll slip down to the cache an' fetch up a poke of dust. I never went to it in the daytime before, but there's jest you an' me. If you git started you kin make home by tomorrow an' hit fer outside."

"If I tak' this gold, it'll be a loan. I'll pay ye back."

"You try it an' see what happens," grinned Holt as he stepped out the door. "We'll let that go, now. It'll give us something to auger about."

Holt had cached his gold beneath a flat-topped rock a few yards below his cabin, and only a few feet distant from his windlass and from the Number 1 stake of McLeod's claim.

McLeod noticed that his stake stood askew and, as Holt worked with his shovel, the Scot removed the rocks from about the foot of the slanting stake, and, the day being unusually warm, he was soon in a profuse perspiration. He straightened the stake and, after muttered, unheard words, and in silence Kinkaid had the map to a hand and read them, employing the birth. Reading thereafter, the man lifted and lighted his pipe, snapped the match between thumb and fingers, and flipped it into the river. "And do you remember what the old prospector said that night? He said, 'Number's the reason coming up . . . they claim it goes to fellin' heads.' And I believe he's right—sometimes—in the moonlight—like this—I feel sort of—of different. Don't you?"

Again the girl nodded without speaking, and half wonderingly the violet eyes sought the face half hidden in the shadow of the stiff-brimmed service hat. What manner of man was this policeman, who, himself the wilderness almost fiercely seeking to right its wrongs, and yet who could be stirred to his very depths by—moonlight? Their eyes met, and swiftly the violet eyes turned to the river with its broad moon path of gold, beyond which the opposite bank showed black and mysterious beneath its serrated skyline of spruce spires.

She closed her eyes, and dreamily her thoughts drifted to Martineau. Vaguely she had expected that sometime she would marry Martineau. But that was before . . . She seemed to see him now—the swarthy, clean-cut features—the black eyes—flashing jet—soft black velvet . . . Her own eyes opened to the mysterious velvet-black depths across the river—and unconsciously she shuddered. A whiff of fragrant tobacco smoke reached her nostrils, and she found herself speaking: "Do you play the 'cello?"

"'Cello? What's that?"

Instantly she would have recalled the question, but questions are not like that. She was conscious that the blue eyes of the man were upon her, and she made show of answering lightly: "Oh, it's just a musical instrument. Something like a violin, only larger."

A picture flashed into Kinkaid's brain—the picture of a room—Martineau's room—and in a corner a curious canvas-covered shape—the shape of a huge violin. A long moment elapsed during which his eyes were upon the illusive pattern of facework formed by the shadows of the naked birch and aspen limbs upon the surface of the flat-topped rock. But the spell of the moonlight was gone. "No," he answered, in a voice that sounded matter-of-fact and hard. "No, I don't play anything."

For the girl, too, the spell of the moonlight was broken. In her heart was a strange sense of loneliness, of emptiness. The red lips drooped at the corners, and the fingers of the hand that lay in her lap were clenched. The voice was speaking again—this time the voice of a policeman—the voice of a casual stranger: "How are things on the Churchill?"

The girl steeled herself to play the game. If she was hurt, this man should never know. Her reply came steadily, in a tone coldly impersonal: "I don't know. I've been in Winnipeg in winter—in school—"

"Yes, I've always wanted to go to a real school. But we've never been able to afford it. Then, Mr. Holt made his strike, and he let father and my brother and me in on it—that is, he said he did."

"Said he did? What do you mean?"

There was genuine interest in the tone. It was not just the same as before—the moonlight—that was gone. But the man's words had dispelled the depressing sense of heart loneliness. Instinctively the girl knew that here was a man she could trust—a man who could advise. She remembered how men hung upon the words of Corporal Downey, and this man also was of the police—a man dependable, to whom one could appeal in time of trouble. And so she answered frankly:

"I don't know exactly what I do mean. One night last fall—it was the very night you—you were at our place—Mr. Holt told father of his strike. He showed him some of the gold he had taken out of his claim, and told him there was fifteen thousand dollars' worth cached, and millions in the gravel. Then he told father to take us, my brother and me, and go up and stake three claims.

"He couldn't go with us because he wanted to go clear to Little Turtle to trade, so we

CHAPTER XI

IN THE evening of the third day out from detachment on his way to consult with David Gaunt in the matter of the Seal River Indian murder, Constable Kinkaid rounded a bend of the Nelson and came abruptly upon a camp. As he stepped ashore a figure emerged from the scrub, water pail in hand. The figure stopped abruptly, and Kinkaid found himself staring into the eyes of Mary McLeod.

"Constable Kinkaid! Goodness, what a start you gave me! Did you drop from the sky?"

The girl was beside him, the violet eyes were smiling, her hand was in his, and Kinkaid's heart leaped to the thrill of that contact. "No," he smiled. "This is a canoe—not an airplane. I was looking for a place to camp. Do you mind if I camp here?"

"Do I mind! No, indeed! I think it will be jolly. I haven't had anybody to talk to for a week except old Nikwah."

"But how do you come to be here? Where are you going? And—"

The girl laughed, a laugh that was eminently good to hear. "I'm starved! Why don't you set up your tent while I get supper, and then we can talk." The violet eyes were twinkling behind their laughter. "But I need two hands." Kinkaid felt himself blushing like a schoolboy. He had not noticed that her strong capable hand was still imprisoned in his own. He reached to take the water pail, but she eluded him. "No, no! You go ahead with your camp. Supper will be ready in a few minutes. I've got the fire all built."

Kinkaid glanced at the sky. "I won't bother with the tent. I'll pack this stuff up the bank and help you with supper." And so the two hovered side by side about the tiny fire, gravely concerned over the boiling of tea and the frying of bacon. From time to time, as she glanced covertly at the man's profile, the girl remembered his parting words as they had stood at the little landing on the Churchill, seven—yes, eight months before. And she realized with a strange thrill that it was Kinkaid more often than Martineau of whom she had thought during the months that had intervened.

Supper over and the dishes washed, the two strolled to the edge of the bank while old Nikwah puttered about in the preparation of the morning's kindling. Impulsively, the girl pointed down river where, between the bare branches of birch and aspens, the full moon appeared like a huge orange globe hanging just above the rim of the world. "Oh, look! Do you remember—" She paused abruptly, and Kinkaid answered, his voice rising scarcely above a whisper:

"Yes, I remember—Mary." It was the second time she had heard her name from his lips, and she turned her face from his to the face of the orange moon. He was speaking again in the same low, soft voice: "I've watched for it every month, except three times, when it was cloudy. Have you watched for it, too?"

The little budding song within its heart.

later he stood on the bank of the small river and bade good-by to McLeod.

And behind a thick young spruce, well within sight and sound of their voices, Felix Martineau grinned complacently as he thought of those eleven little sacks of gold.

CHAPTER XI

IN THE evening of the third day out from detachment on his way to consult with David Gaunt in the matter of the Seal River Indian murder, Constable Kinkaid rounded a bend of the Nelson and came abruptly upon a camp. As he stepped ashore a figure emerged from the scrub, water pail in hand. The figure stopped abruptly, and Kinkaid found himself staring into the eyes of Mary McLeod.

"Constable Kinkaid! Goodness, what a start you gave me! Did you drop from the sky?"

The girl was beside him, the violet eyes were smiling, her hand was in his, and Kinkaid's heart leaped to the thrill of that contact. "No," he smiled. "This is a canoe—not an airplane. I was looking for a place to camp. Do you mind if I camp here?"

"Do I mind! No, indeed! I think it will be jolly. I haven't had anybody to talk to for a week except old Nikwah."

"But how do you come to be here? Where are you going? And—"

The girl laughed, a laugh that was eminently good to hear. "I'm starved! Why don't you set up your tent while I get supper, and then we can talk." The violet eyes were twinkling behind their laughter. "But I need two hands." Kinkaid felt himself blushing like a schoolboy. He had not noticed that her strong capable hand was still imprisoned in his own. He reached to take the water pail, but she eluded him. "No, no! You go ahead with your camp. Supper will be ready in a few minutes. I've got the fire all built."

Kinkaid glanced at the sky. "I won't bother with the tent. I'll pack this stuff up the bank and help you with supper." And so the two hovered side by side about the tiny fire, gravely concerned over the boiling of tea and the frying of bacon. From time to time, as she glanced covertly at the man's profile, the girl remembered his parting words as they had stood at the little landing on the Churchill, seven—yes, eight months before. And she realized with a strange thrill that it was Kinkaid more often than Martineau of whom she had thought during the months that had intervened.

Supper over and the dishes washed, the two strolled to the edge of the bank while old Nikwah puttered about in the preparation of the morning's kindling. Impulsively, the girl pointed down river where, between the bare branches of birch and aspens, the full moon appeared like a huge orange globe hanging just above the rim of the world. "Oh, look! Do you remember—" She paused abruptly, and Kinkaid answered, his voice rising scarcely above a whisper:

"Yes, I remember—Mary." It was the second time she had heard her name from his lips, and she turned her face from his to the face of the orange moon. He was speaking again in the same low, soft voice: "I've watched for it every month, except three times, when it was cloudy. Have you watched for it, too?"

black and mysterious beneath its serrated skyline of spruce spires.

She closed her eyes, and dreamily her thoughts drifted to Martineau. Vaguely she had expected that sometime she would marry Martineau. But that was before . . . She seemed to see him now—the swarthy, clean-cut features—the black eyes—flashing jet—soft black velvet . . . Her own eyes opened to the mysterious velvet-black depths across the river—and unconsciously she shuddered. A whiff of fragrant tobacco smoke reached her nostrils, and she found herself speaking: "Do you play the 'cello?"

"'Cello? What's that?"

Instantly she would have recalled the question, but questions are not like that. She was conscious that the blue eyes of the man were upon her, and she made show of answering lightly: "Oh, it's just a musical instrument. Something like a violin, only larger."

A picture flashed into Kinkaid's brain—the picture of a room—Martineau's room—and in a corner a curious canvas-covered shape—the shape of a huge violin. A long moment elapsed during which his eyes were upon the illusive pattern of facework formed by the shadows of the naked birch and aspen limbs upon the surface of the flat-topped rock. But the spell of the moonlight was gone. "No," he answered, in a voice that sounded matter-of-fact and hard. "No, I don't play anything."

For the girl, too, the spell of the moonlight was broken. In her heart was a strange sense of loneliness, of emptiness. The red lips drooped at the corners, and the fingers of the hand that lay in her lap were clenched. The voice was speaking again—this time the voice of a policeman—the voice of a casual stranger: "How are things on the Churchill?"

The girl steeled herself to play the game. If she was hurt, this man should never know. Her reply came steadily, in a tone coldly impersonal: "I don't know. I've been in Winnipeg in winter—in school—"

"Yes, I've always wanted to go to a real school. But we've never been able to afford it. Then, Mr. Holt made his strike, and he let father and my brother and me in on it—that is, he said he did."

"Said he did? What do you mean?"

There was genuine interest in the tone. It was not just the same as before—the moonlight—that was gone. But the man's words had dispelled the depressing sense of heart loneliness. Instinctively the girl knew that here was a man she could trust—a man who could advise. She remembered how men hung upon the words of Corporal Downey, and this man also was of the police—a man dependable, to whom one could appeal in time of trouble. And so she answered frankly:

"I don't know exactly what I do mean. One night last fall—it was the very night you—you were at our place—Mr. Holt told father of his strike. He showed him some of the gold he had taken out of his claim, and told him there was fifteen thousand dollars' worth cached, and millions in the gravel. Then he told father to take us, my brother and me, and go up and stake three claims.

"He couldn't go with us because he wanted to go clear to Little Turtle to trade, so we his disappointment. Slowly he nodded his head. "I see. Well, I'll be goin' back."

"Back where?"

"Why, back home. Where else?"

"Yeh, but how about them younguns?"

"They'll have to wait. I gi' Mary all the money I had."

"Wait! Ain't I jest got through tellin' you we had responsibilities? You take the boy an' go outside, an' if you ain't back inside of three months you won't lose nothin'. We'll still have plenty of time to get out all the dust we want. I'll put up the gold—"

"Nae, nae!"

Holt cut the protest short. "You look at here, Angus McLeod. I'm runnin' this show! You Scotch has got the name of bein' hard-headed, but you ain't a damn' bit hard-headeder'n what I be! An' besides that, ain't I be'n a good enough friend of yourn so's you don't have to go hoggin' them younguns on me? I never had none of my own, an' if I take a notion to uncles yourn, why that's my business. Ain't Mary always seen that I got all the butter I could eat? An' besides that, what'll I do with my gold? I don't drink, an' there ain't no one to play poker with. This fall I'm goin' outside an' git me a pair of black pants, an' a di'mond ring an' all the butter I can eat; but by then I'll be packin' so much coarse gold that I won't know what to do with it. Couple hundred dollars ought to buy the best pair of pants they could make an' a couple of thousan' ought to buy a di'mon' ring, an' a man can't hold on more'n ten, fifteen dollars' worth of butter to a time, so what will I do with it?"

"Ye might build a church fer the carryin' o' the Gospel to the Injuns."

"Church—hell!"

He was startled by a voice at his shoulder which said calmly: "Oh, Mr. Warner. Like to have a word with you, if you don't mind. Perhaps you'll join Mr. Holton and me in a swizzle?"

George looked at the Police Commissioner dropping casually into a chair, stared then from him to Warner, who had stopped and half-turned, without quite facing the man who had spoken.

"You'll have to excuse me," George said, hoarse with the anger he struggled to control. "My niece will be down any moment now." He glared over at Warner and took out his watch.

Connie's husband met his glare with a look of such white misery that it even shocked George Holton, angry as he was. "I know," he said humbly. "I'll—take myself off. She won't have to see me. I'm in a hurry now, Jenkins," he said. "Something about the Mona's sailing. See you after awhile. I'll drop around to your office, if you like."

"Can't be done, old man. Sorry. Must see you now. Have this chair. Have a swizzle, or something."

"But I—"

Jenkins raised his voice slightly. "Oh—you there—Sands. Just stand here a minute, will you? I want to talk to Mr. Warner."

George Holton and Warner both looked up at the native policeman, striding to attention against the wall, his black face important and startling under the whiteness of his helmet and over the whiteness of his tunic. George saw Warner's shoulders sag with something like weariness. Without another glance either up the staircase or at Jenkins, he walked over and sat down.

Jenkins looked at him squarely. "I suppose you know that Raymond Silva committed suicide?"

Warner's head lifted as if it had been jerked. "Suicide," he said, and then again, "suicide." He got up from the table still looking at Jenkins. "You mean they've found that he—committed suicide?"

Connie came down the stairs. She came lightly, impetuously, with her hat on, but no bag, nothing but something clutched tightly in her hand. Her eyes, having found her husband, remained fixed on him.

"Whitney," she said abruptly, "how long have you been taking this?"

He turned around and looked at her, staring as if he had not seen her for years, staring at her and at the little bottle she held out to him.

"How long?" she said again.

"I—why, Connie—you know—you know yourself, when it began."

"In Panama, was it? You mean you began that time I saw you first? That was really the first time?"

"I—yes."

"That was the time that American sailor annoyed me, wasn't it?" she said. "The time I had to speak to the hotel proprietor about him. You found out about it and began taking this."

Something twisted in Warner's white face. "Yes, I tell you, yes. You know it yourself. Why do you want me to go on saying it?"

Just then, as Connie opened her mouth to speak, from the polished steel of the harbor, throbbing on the white-hot air, a ship's siren howled three times.

George Holton came to life with a jerk. "That's our ship, Connie," he snapped. "That's the warning signal. The ship will sail in ten minutes. We've got to go."

She moved lightly away from his hand on her arm, moved toward her husband, still standing clutching a chair back, with nothing at all showing in the mask of his face.

"Whitney," and again, "Whitney—I was picking up my things, in the bathroom. I was hurrying and nervous, too, I suppose. When I reached for my tooth powder I knocked over this vial of yours, from the place you had hidden it. And then—I don't know why, exactly. I tasted it. Whitney—" she took a step nearer. "It's only powdered sugar. It's only sugar. But why? Why did you want me to think you were taking drugs? Was it because you didn't care for me any more? Was that it? Did you want to get rid of me?"

In the hot silence Warner stirred and moved his eyes woodenly until his glance was on her face. "That was it, I expect. I wanted to get rid of you."

Connie turned slowly, with a jerk of her head. "All right, Uncle George. That's all, then. Let's hurry."

Warner stood, watching her go. It was Jenkins who moved then. George Holton saw him scrape back his chair and nod to the waiting policeman. "I'm sorry, Mrs. Warner," he said distinctly. "I can't let you go yet. I've got a few questions I want to ask you about Raymond Silva."

Warner started then. He put out a hand to Jenkins and said: "No—no—no," even as George's wrath exploded in a bellow almost as hoarse as the siren.

"What do you mean?" he said, furiously. "You know perfectly well that Mrs. Warner had nothing to do with that suicide. How dare you—"

Connie turned slowly. "Suicide," she said. "I thought they said it was murder."

"I didn't say it was suicide," Jenkins said. "I said he died by violence. He was bruised, but that may have been when he was knocking about in the swamp. He was drowned, and it may have been suicide. That's what we aren't sure of yet. At least, not quite. Your testimony may be valuable. You see, you were the last person seen with the dead man last night. I'd like to know what time he left and whether his mood seemed to you to be—suicidal?"

"No—no," Whitney Warner spoke again before her reply. "Don't say anything, Connie. What difference does all that make, Jenkins? They've got to make that ship. For God's sake, let her go."

"What time was it, please, Mrs. Warner?"

"I tell you, Jenkins, she doesn't know anything about all that."

"Then who does?" Jenkins turned on Warner, like the crack of a whip.

"Will you let her catch that boat if I tell you? Will you?"

Jenkins nodded, once. Over their heads again broke the ship's impatient mutter.

"Then go, Connie. That'll be nearly the last call." Warner put out an arm and shoved her toward Holton, a kind of fever in his manner. "Get her out of here, Holton. You've only three minutes."

He touched her, but she stood stock still. "I'm not going until I've heard what you are going to say to Mr. Jenkins. I'm—not—going."

He looked at her, a long, desperate look.

"What do you know about Silva's death, Whitney? Why is Mr. Jenkins asking either of us?"

"Because I killed him," Warner said heavily. He turned and walked over to Jenkins' table and stood looking down at him. "That's what you were trying to get me to say, weren't you? Well, it's said. I killed him. I'll give you all the proof you want. But now, they can go? Connie, now you'll go."

"Thanks, old man," Jenkins said, taking a paper out of his pocket. "That clears everything up. You are under arrest for the murder of Raymond Silva. Whitney Warner, and I ought to warn you that everything you say may be used against you. Sorry to have detained you, Mrs. Warner." He stood up and bowed. "You'll just have time to catch it, I think."

But Connie was staring at her husband. "Whitney—you killed him. But he was enormous. He was terrible—those arms. I—and he carried a pistol, I think. How could you have. How did you dare? You were a—"

"You thought I was a coward," he said. "You thought I was a yellow livered skunk with not enough red blood in me to resent my wife's being insulted. You've always thought of me as a coward. That's why you've stuck to me for so long, because you thought if I was one at least you wouldn't be.

"I've watched you remembering the way you'd been brought up and your life before you knew me—you remembered your first husband. He wasn't a coward. Yet you threw him away and took me. And look what you got in his place."

"Last night I couldn't hold on to myself any longer. The ugly brute thought I was helpless and so he came here to get you. He was going to get upstairs. I found that out. I led him on to think he could. And I waited for him down here, in the dark. He came up swaggering, knocking his cane against the tables. He had a pistol in his pocket. I heard it hit against the post. And I sat on the stairs and waited until he was right where I could get my hands on him. And I killed him with my bare hands. Now you know everything. Now go. My God, will you go!"

"But I don't understand," she said. "How could you have done that and yet let that man in the sugar mill die, just by not moving?"

He got up and walked over to her. The siren boomed as he did so. Every one else was still as death. "Until that night in Florida, at your house, do you realize that I did not know for certain that I had not pushed that man down on to the carrier, to his death? Do you realize that I was always afraid that I had? I thought perhaps it was a mistake that I had not been arrested for murder. Yet I could have sworn—listen. Listen here, Connie. When I was twelve years old, just a little boy still, I chopped off my brother's finger with a hatchet. I had the hatchet in my hand and he was teasing me. I went raving mad with rage. It was like blindness. It was like drunkenness. I didn't know that I had hit him until I saw the blood and heard him screaming.

"I—I never got over it. My father never let me get over it. I was brought up to believe that my own temper was a beast in me, a horror and a madness. Nothing else ever happened. I think my father would have killed me if it had. He was like that.

"But never in my life have I been free of the fear of it. That time in the sugar mill I thought I had done it. No one had seen how raging I was. But I felt it there in me, a black, crouching beast. He said something especially insulting to me at the last, up there, and the blackness shut down, just for a moment. When it lifted he was down there, in the rollers.

"When your uncle read that account from the witness I was certain for the first time that I was not a murderer. It seemed then better to be a coward. It didn't begin to bother me until afterward, when I realized what I'd done to you, when I married you. I think now it is better to be a murderer."

He stopped. The long bellow of the ship's siren moved impatiently over their heads, a long, long sound. His face stiffened to its mask. "That's the last call," he said. "They'll hold the ship only if they see you running."

"It's hot to run," Connie said lightly. George Holton had not moved, either. "Now I understand everything. All but one thing. And that's everything. How could you manage to act as if you wanted to get rid of me when I am so certain, so very, very certain, that you love me still?"

Her voice, rippling and gay and wheedling, was the voice of Connie Holton as George had remembered it. He saw that her face was radiant with so much more than happiness that he could hardly bear to look.

Her husband turned and saw her face and stood staring down at it, and her hand closed unconsciously over his. "Never a dull moment," she chanted brightly at him. "Never a dull moment, Whitney darling. And Lord, how I love you for it!"

The police commissioner cleared his throat and tapped on the table with his pencil. "I'd like to get the charge straight," he said briskly. "I find that the dead man, Raymond Silva, attempting to break and enter the residence of Mr. Whitney Warner, was discovered by Mr. Warner and killed by him in defense of his property and his wife. Mr. Warner will be held for further investigation by the magistrate, but the charge of murder is withdrawn. In the meantime if any one would care to give bond for his appearance at court—"

"I will go on his bond," George Holton said, coming foward briskly.

Both gentlemen busied themselves over the papers on the table, with a good deal of hearty conversation, carefully turning their backs for a decent interval upon Mr. and Mrs. Whitney Warner, who were otherwise absorbed.

Ballade of a Well-Earned Weariness

There's little to have but the things I had,
  There's little to bear but the things I bore.
There's nothing to carry, and naught to add,
  And, glory to Heaven, I paid the score.
There's little to do but I did before,
There's little to learn but the things I know.
And this is the sum of a lasting lore:
Scratch a lover, and find a foe.

And couldn't it be I was young and mad,
  If ever my heart on my sleeve I wore?
There's many to claw at a heart unclad,
  And little the wonder it ripped and tore.
There's one that'll join in their push and roar,
With stories to jabber and stones to throw.
He'll fetch you a lesson that costs you sore—
Scratch a lover, and find a foe.

So little I'll offer to you, my lad;
  It's little in loving I set my store.
There's many a maid would be flushed and glad,
  And better you'll knock at a kindlier door.
I'll dig at my lettuce and sweep my floor—
Forever, forever I'm done with woe!
  And happen I'll whistle about my chore,
"Scratch a lover, and find a foe."

L'ENVOI

Oh, beggar or prince, no more, no more,
  Be off and away with your strut and show.
The sweeter the apple, the blacker the core—
  Scratch a lover, and find a foe!

DIANA'S MIRROR

IN A RECENT publication, Premier Mussolini of Italy is seen smilingly acknowledging the salutes of the archeological officials as he arrives to start the pumps that will drain Lake Nemi, when it is hoped there will come to light two ships of great size, "rich and beautiful as an enchanted palace."

Lake Nemi, called "Diana's Mirror" by the ancients, lies at the bottom of one of the volcanic craters in the Alban Mountains, about twenty miles from Rome. It measures six miles in circumference at the top of the rim, and four at the water's edge. The water is 110 feet in depth, and is of crystal clearness. It is rarely ruffled by the wind as it is over 300 feet from the rim of the crater to the water's edge.

The ancients called it Lacus Nemorensis, or "The Mirror of Diana," from a temple and nemus, or grove, sacred to that goddess, whence the present name of Nemi is derived. This exquisite lake is the gem of the Alban Mountains. At noonday, when it is loveliest, the view leads one to think it was rightly named "Mirror of Diana."

From our inn at the very crest of the crater we looked across to the ancient castle of the Colonna, now the property of Prince Ruspoli, and the castle of Genzano with an old romantic watchtower in the distance. Far away stretched the Roman Campagna, and then the sea. Below us we could see the remains of the foundations of the Temple of Diana and a colonnade surrounding it.

Archeologists tell us that the lake was formed many centuries before the last volcano of the Alban mountain range, Mount Pila. So we can imagine what an awe-inspiring place it must have been when the mountains around were shaken from their foundation by the outbursts of incandescent lava, when the skies were heavy with ashes and smoke, and the thundering of the volcanic eruptions echoed from cliff to cliff, from mountain to mountain, and was heard as far as Rome. It was a fitting place to be chosen for the seat of a mysterious worship, that of the Scythian Diana. The worship was imported from the Crimea, the abode of savage tribes.

The principal rule of the sanctuary was truly barbaric. No one could be elected high priest unless he had slain, with his own hands, the one who, by a similar deed had occupied that office before him. This extraordinary rite was still existing in the time of Marcus Aurelius and Commodus in the second century A. D.

The Temple of the Scythian Diana, to whom human sacrifices were offered in times gone by, rose in the midst of a great forest on the north side of the lake, at the foot of the huge boulder on which now stands the village of Nemi. Before it stretched the deep, lonely lake, fed by the same springs that poured into it two thousand and more years ago.

There is a wonderful artificial emissary leading out of the lake which keeps the water at a fixed level. It is of such remote origin that no mention of it is made by the most ancient writers. It is thought that this temple that stands so near the edge of the lake may have been built on the newly claimed land in commemoration of the almost marvelous drainage of the lake. When we looked down into this ancient stone outlet, we felt that it probably belonged to the time of the great Cloaca Maxima, which drains the Roman Forum and was constructed in the republican days of Rome.

But let us return to the two ships lying for nearly two thousand years in the depths of "Diana's Mirror." Four different attempts to raise them have been made: the first by Alberti in the time of Pope Eugenius IV (1431-1439;) the second by De Marchi in 1535; the third by Fusconi in 1827, and the fourth by Borghi in 1895. None of these attempts was successful.

The manner of the discovery that these ships were at the bottom of the lake is interesting. Cardinal Prosperó Colonna, who counted among the fiefs of the family both Nemi and Genzano, had often heard from his tenants and fishermen the story of two immense ships sunk deep in the water, so strong and well preserved as to resist all attempts to float them or to demolish them piecemeal.

Caligula, Roman Emperor called "the mad Caligula." Antique marble bust in the Capitoline Gallery, Rome.

By Mary Mendenhall Perkins

Cardinal Colonna determined to find out how and why two large ships should have been launched on a small sheet of water inclosed by mountains on every side. He secured the aid of an engineer and mechanician, by name Alberti, who built a raft of beams and empty barrels to support the machinery by means of which the explorations could be made. Hooks like four-pointed anchors, hung to chains, were made to be wound up by capstans. Seamen were called from Genoa to adjust the hooks around the prow of the first ship. The immense weight of the ship was too great, the chains broke, and many of the hooks were lost; the few that came up brought only fragments, but these were so beautiful that the workers were filled with wonder and admiration. It was some of these pieces of the framework, larchwood ribs and decks that we had seen in the Roman Museum.

In July, 1535, De Marchi renewed the attempt by using a diving bell which he had invented. He described what he saw, but of course was unable to bring anything to the surface. He declared that the ship was fully four hundred and seventy-five feet long, two hundred and twenty-eight feet wide and fifty-three feet high. These figures are exaggerated, but when the actual size was later obtained it is still most surprising.

The third attempt was made by Fusconi in 1827. He spent six thousand dollars in the experiment and left a pamphlet telling of his experiences, which were not of much account.

The fourth time it was tried was in 1895, by the use of divers. This led to the discovery of the six beautiful mooring rings of solid bronze, representing heads of lions, wolves and tigers; also a head of Medusa. These are all of exquisite work, both in moulding and finish.

The measurements of the ship were taken very ingeniously by the head diver and his assistant, under the direction of Cavaliere Malfatti, who gave an excellent report on the discoveries. Floaters, tied to strings, were fastened at short intervals around the edge of the woodwork, care being taken to draw the string tightly so as to have the floater absolutely perpendicular above the point below. When the operation was finished the people on shore were astonished to see the form or horizontal section of a great ship appear on the surface of the water. Later measurements were taken on the ship itself. The first wreck was found to be two hundred feet long and sixty feet wide.

The deck itself must have been a marvelous sight to behold. The ships were literally "floating palaces." The deck of the first one is paved with disks of red porphry and green serpentine about a quarter of an inch thick, framed in segments and lines of white, gold, red and green enamel. The parapets and railings are cast in metal heavily gilded with gold. Lead pipes inscribed with the name of Caligula (12 to 41 A.D.,) one of the worst of the Roman emperors, may be seen.

The leaden pipes with his name on them carried the water to the fountains playing amidship. There are other rich decorations, the designs of which have not yet been made clear by the divers, but which we shall no doubt understand when the lake is drained and the wrecks are made visible to the world at large.

The second ship appears to be even larger than the first. One of the beams which we saw in the Roman Museum measured eighty-five feet, though both ends were broken off. This ship was probably more than two hundred and fifty feet long. Fifty years ago this would have been considered an immense ship on any ocean.

The important question is why were two such magnificent ships launched on "Diana's Mirror" between the years 37 and 41 A. D.? This was under the rule of Caligula we know from those telltale water pipes.

The eminent archeologist, Rodolfo Lanciani of Rome, says he is inclined to believe that they were the property, not of the state or of the emperor, but of the Sanctuary of Artemis Taurica, the Temple of Diana, the remains of which were excavated at four different periods: in 1554 and 1737 by the Frangipani, in 1856 by the Orsini, and by Lord Lumley in 1885; lastly by Boccanera in 1887. The ruins of this temple may be seen today on the north shore of the lake.

Signor Lanciani believes the ships were used for religious ceremonies and for combined processions on land and water.

Let us hope that the project undertaken today, under the direction of the daring and remarkable Mussolini, will be successful, and that we shall all live to see the ships floated again, or beached on the margin of the lake, where they will, as says Lanciani, "reveal to us the secret of their origin and their fate."

Warner stood, watching her go. It was Jenkins who moved then. George Holton saw him scrape back his chair and rise to his feet. He started after him, but Jenkins was already in the hall. Now you know everything. Now you'll do as I say, won't you, my boy?"

"But I don't understand," she said. "Not understand!" echoed George. "Why, I killed him with my bare hands. And I'd kill him again if I got the chance. I'd kill him again right where I could get my hands on him. Now you know everything. Now you'll do as I say, won't you, my boy?"

Feet of Clay

As a small boy, Julian Hawthorne regarded his famous father as a great hero, unafraid, unflinching and unbeatable. Most small boys are like that.

But one day, when father and son were walking together in Scotland, a goat, being no respecter of persons, made for the author of "The Scarlet Letter," who promptly disappeared over a garden wall. When danger had passed, he hoped back into the street, to find the astonished boy waiting for him.

"Julian," began the father, "a wise man shows his wisdom by knowing when to run away."

"But, 'The boy stood on the burning deck,'" objected Julian.

"Casablanca was a good boy," said the father, "but if Mrs. Hemans had been present I think she would have reminded him that 'He who fights and runs away, may live to fight another day.'"

"So I was left to think it out for myself," adds Julian.

Logical

Dean Campbell was bewailing the increase of divorce. "And most of it," he declared "accrues out of the old eternal triangle. No matter how we progress in other ways, we are, in the matter of sex, as pagan and uncontrolled as in the beginning. I cannot comprehend why this should be."

"I can tell you," ventured a serious-faced man in the audience. "There'll always be triangles as long as people don't live on the square."

Salvation

Rev. James Mattox recently delivered a sermon whose topic was "Reverence for Law" and in which he took to task the people who professed religion and yet were flagrant law breakers. He cited the Bible lines: "Render unto Caesar that which is Caesar's and render unto God that which is God's," and continued:

"Too many people who claim to be good citizens are like the Smiths.

"'Johnny, what are you doing?' called Mrs. Smith to her small son one Sunday morning.

"'I'm helping daddy stir the mash,' was the faint reply from the Smith cellar.

"'You come upstairs this minute!' shouted his mother, 'and get dressed for Sunday school.'"

Natural

Some tourists have claimed that the State of North Dakota is not up to date, but there are certain things that prove to the contrary. Quite recently, for example, in Bismarck, a well-known citizen was killed by an automobile.

The Coroner's jury returned a verdict that death had resulted from natural causes.

Mrs. James Wattles of Santa Ana was going over the family possessions with the tax assessor and after land and furniture had been inventoried, they came to the dog.

"What sort of a dog is that?" asked the assessor, and Mrs. Wattles, seeking to hold down the tax bill as low as possible, replied carelessly: "Oh, nothing special, he's just a common cur."

But eight year old Jimmy would not have it that way. He patted the head of his four footed pal and interrupted with:

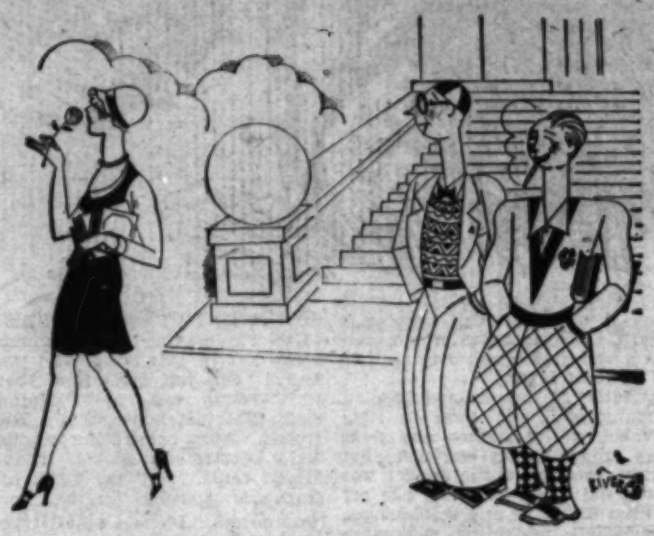
"He ain't just a common cur; he's a full blooded one!"

Sure Cure

The story is told that when John Singer Sargent, the noted painter, was a novice, he persuaded a prominent Boston critic to visit his studio and inspect his work. The critic paused before one picture after another without comment and finally came to a halt before one which even Sargent himself did not think was quite so good.

"That picture," he said apologetically, trying to steer the critic toward some worthier effort, "is one that I painted for the express purpose of keeping the wolf away from the door."

"Indeed," relied the critic. "Then why don't you hang it on the doorknob where the wolf can see it?"



"I tried to date that dame up for the movies last night and she said she'd come here to study, not to fool around."
"Gosh—aren't some women dumb!"

Too True

During a lecture to the Parent Teachers' Association, Mrs. Garvin Reed, a noted child welfare worker, exclaimed:

"How unfortunate that Nature didn't give us other people's children. It seems that they are the only ones we really know how to raise."

Slight Mistake

In a small town not far from Los Angeles, there lives a furniture repairman with a large and generous soul. He has a friend who was recently stricken with some sort of stroke and who lay helpless and speechless for days. Speech is returning to him slowly but he is still paralyzed.

The sick man's wife recently came over to the repairman's house in great distress. "Won't you take your car and go down and get the minister, please," she asked him. "George is very unhappy and restless and troubled. He keeps saying he wants to be saved and I don't know what to do for him. I think he should talk to the minister."

The minister was brought. He entered the sick room with the eager air of a man who is about to assuage man's noblest anguish. The friend and wife waited nervously outside the door. The minister came out faster than he went in.

"He doesn't want to be saved," he snapped. "He wants to be shaved."

Patriotism

The eternal question: "What shall we do with our ex-Presidents," is once more to the fore, due to the approaching retirement of Mr. Coolidge. The same problem was in force at the time of President John Quincy Adams, also of Massachuetts.

The people of his home town, Quincy, Mass., wanted Mr. Adams to serve them in Congress, but hesitated to ask the "Puritan President" to run, thinking he might consider so minor an office degrading to a man who had held the highest office within the gift of the country. Finally they mustered up enough courage to ask Mr. Adams about it. His reply is a patriotic classic.

"No person could be degraded by serving the people as Representative in Congress. Nor, in my opinion, would an ex-President of the United States be degraded by serving even as a Selectman of his town, if elected thereto by the people."

And so to Congress he went, to begin his battle for the abolition of slavery.

Real Houdini

Shortly after the close of the World War, Herbert Hoover, as Food Administrator of the United States, sent a young lieutenant to Montenegro with a trainload of supplies because the country was split in twain by a revolution and the populace was starving. Apparently the only neutral person in the country was the young lieutenant. After a conference he finally arranged that the army of General A should do the unloading in the day time and the army of General B should act as the night shift, and while the arrangements were being made he took occasion to point out to both generals the folly of war.

"You ought to be plowing instead of killing," he argued. "This food will soon be gone and if you don't raise enough to carry you through next winter, then God help you; the United States won't."

Both generals agreed but claimed the war must go on until one army was defeated as there was no one to surrender to. Then General A hit on the brilliant idea that both armies could surrender to the United States and thus preserve their honor. To this the young lieutenant agreed.

But during the night he woke up with a start. What right had he to accept the surrender of these armies in the name of the United States? When Pershing heard about it, he might be shot. But when the armies met he had found a happy solution to the problem.

"I accept the surrender of these two armies," he cried, "in the name of Herbert Hoover's United States Food Administration," and so it is recorded in history.

Lovely

Dr. H. Pickard in a Rochester address was not above taking a shot or two at the fair sex during a discussion of modern hygiene. "There is an old saying," he remarked, to the effect that 'give her an inch and she'll take a mile'; but nowadays, the saying should go: 'Give her an inch and she'll make a new dress of it.'"

Naturally

Sheriff Mallory of a small Texan county, in speaking of the recent epidemic of women shooting their husbands in that State, remarked:

"When it comes to having model husbands, I'm betting my pile on the Portland, (Or.) woman who can shoot a score of ninety-four out of 100 with a revolver. If any woman has a model husband, I'll bet hers is it."

Retired

James G. Blaine, beaten for the Presidency by Grover Cleveland in 1884 when the latter won New York State by less than 1200 votes, refused to allow the Republicans to consider his name in 1888 and again in 1892.

Blaine explained his reason to a friend as follows: "When the American people choose a President they require him to remain awake for four years. I have come to the time of life when I need my sleep."

Rebuffed

A cub reporter, given his first out-of-town assignment by Horace Greeley, famous editor of the old New York Tribune, was told to keep in constant touch with the office during his absence. Accordingly, on his second day away from the office he succeeded in getting Mr. Greeley on the phone and stammered:

"Are there any news?"

"No," answered Mr. Greeley tartly, "not a single new."

Doctor's Orders

There is a movement on foot to send Al De Gaetano, well-known in Hollywood film circles, to the next Geneva Conference. The other day, when he came home, his wife informed him that she had not been feeling well and that the doctor had advised a change of scenery.

"That's just why I had the house painted and the yard fixed," exclaimed Al. "Now you will find the back porch as attractive as the front one and you can sit out there for a change."

The WOMAN

A Real Comedy Romance of Hollywood, Where Some Things Happen That are Not Shown on Movie Films

"I'll hev to ask Aunt Sairy," the girl explained longingly

BART KILPATRICK was a declared woman hater. And not without good reason, too. It was common gossip about the Hollywood lot where he was employed as assistant director, that a certain flashing-eyed film star had left him—quite literally—waiting at the church. Left him, to elope with the fat, swarthy, diamond-encrusted individual who had backed her pictures.

"Haven't I told you I'm off of 'em for life!" Bart snorted to his friend, Don Savage, who was publicity chief for the Gigantic Film Company. The latter sat in his office, hand cupped across the mouthpiece of the telephone, receiver glued to his ear. "That is—these silk-lined young platinum diggers you got around here. If any female ever rates a kind word out of me it's going to be because she's a red-hot mamma at darning socks and bakes a wicked biscuit! I'm through with your swell parties—now and next week and forever!"

"Sure, Bart, sure! I shoulda remembered you were permanently curdled!" said Don soothingly. He removed his hand from the mouthpiece of the telephone. "Say, Diana, you lose! Kilpatrick says you haven't any socks appeal for him—socks, I said. Now, don't get mad. He ain't worth it. See you tonight, baby." He hung up the receiver.

"Diana?" Bart inquired stiffly, somewhat red as to face and rumpled as to hair.

"Sure. Diana Mack. Just got back from Alaska—wants to stir up a party to celebrate. She was out on the lot this morning, and she says the minute she laid eyes on you she marked you for her own!"

"Humph!" grunted Bart skeptically. For every one about the Gigantic knew that Diana Mack was slated for stardom since the showing of the first rushes of that Alaskan picture. "She probably thinks she'll keep her hand in on an assistant till she can land a regular director! Tell her nothing doing!" Bart turned on his heel and headed toward the set where he was due.

"She said to tell you to look out, because she'll have her ree-venge yet," Don threw after him mockingly. But Bart only shrugged his shoulders and continued on his way.

All thoughts of Diana Mack were promptly wiped from Bart's mind a half-hour later by the opening remark of his boss, the great J. D. Harris, head of the Gigantic.

"You know, Bart, I've kinda got the itch to try one of these here native pictures like Blenheim's 'Rugged Love.' Couldn't have cost much, and it's taking pretty well, they say. I just bought the rights to 'Hilltop Sweethearts.' Thought maybe you could put it over—native characters, scene in the Ozarks, raw and simple—you get me! You can take a coupla aides, some acetylene torches and find your cast when you get there. Of course, if you have trouble I could send along somebody for the feminine lead; Diana Mack, say?"

Bart gulped.

"Gosh, J. D., just give me a chance to show what I can do! And I won't need any little emptyhead like Diana Mack to help me, either!" Bart's tone was a trifle positive in view of the fact that he had never so much as laid eyes on the lady under discussion.

When all the arrangements were at length complete, J. D.'s final words were:

"Remember, now, if you get stuck, wire me for Diana!"

Following J. D.'s instructions upon reaching the Ozarks, Bart and his two aides found a location that would have made a Hollywood set builder groan with envy. A wind-swept hilltop, sighing pines, a picturesque, deserted log cabin, with a brook that tumbled downhill beside it.

While it proved to be no easy task to induce the suspicious natives to play-act the roles they filled in real life, they were persuaded in the end. The hero seemed made to order in the person of one Jud Hawkes, a lean, awkward, handsome youth with melancholy brown eyes and a shy smile. And then began the search for the girl.

Each time that Bart heard of a reputedly beautiful damsel he roamed frantically over hogbacks and down into gulches until he found her cabin. And Samanthy or Amandy or Prue, as the case might be, coyly wiggled her big toe in the dust and smirked. They were natural enough. Natural to the extent of freckles, heavy ankles and adenoids!

Frustrated, desperate, Bart returned to location after each futile journey and shot another scene which did not require the heroine. At last he had finished every foot of film possible without the girl, and fruitlessly had combed the hills for twenty miles around. Give in and wire J. D. to send that doll-faced nitwit? Never!

The days crawled by. Bart's aides grew restive under the delay, while Bart himself lost weight and acquired a gaunt and sleepless air.

"Say, Bart," one of the boys proffered spiritlessly one morning. "When I was coming back from the station with the new roll of film a short while ago, I thought I'd try a short cut. So I headed my horse up through that second growth that covers Hangman's Hill. Coming down this side I stumbled on a little clearing. There was a two-by-four cabin and I saw a girl drawing water up from a well. Somebody yelled to her and she ran inside, so I didn't get a good look at her. Of course, she had on a sunbonnet, but she sure had a swell figure," he finished hopefully.

Bart eyed him in disgust. "Yeh—had on a sunbonnet, did she? Say, how many dames have I trailed down that had on sunbonnets—not to mention buck-teeth, squint-eyes and hare-lips?"

But nevertheless, after five minutes' morose contemplation of the news, Bart wearily mounted his horse and headed for Hangman's Hill. At first he missed the faint trail that ambled through the scrub timber. At length he located it, however, and turned his horse dejectedly upward.

A half-hour's climbing brought him to a weather-beaten little shack on a sun-baked hill. He saw a slight figure in a sunbonnet beside the door scattering grain to a flock of scrawny chickens. With a sudden gleam of hope he spurred his horse closer. And then he laughed mirthlessly, for the figure turned, and he found himself facing one more leather-skinned, work-ridden old woman, the counterpart of a hundred others he had seen.

With a polite bow Bart explained that he had lost his way trying to find the station. Grudgingly, the woman gave him directions and returned to her scolding hens.

Poor Bart continued on past the cabin and up the hillside. A meager little corn patch clung precariously to the steep slope. Close to the rail fence a sunbonneted, blue calico figure was hoeing industriously. He eyed it bitterly. Just as he came abreast of the fence the owner of the sunbonnet straightened up, brushed her sleeve wearily across her hot face and pushed the sunbonnet back off her head.

Incredulously Bart paused, stared and tried to speak. As the girl turned and saw a hollow-eyed young man on horseback making clicking noises in his throat, she dropped her hoe and turned to run.

"Oh, please!" he managed to blurt out. "I came all this way just to find you!"

She hesitated, blue eyes wide and startled, burnished hair a mass of damp curls about her wistful little face. Even while he looked, Bart noted with professional eye the ringlet pasted moistly against one soft pink cheek, the slim lovely carriage of her, and her tapering brown ankles. Memories of peroxide, beaded lashes and mascaro flitted before him. He didn't deserve such luck!

Gently and very gravely, Bart told her about the play-acting before a camera; how easy it all was, and how vast would be her remuneration if she consented to help him.

"I'll hev to ask Aunt Sairy," the girl explained longingly. "Aunt Sairy don't hold much with worldly amusements!"

Together they hurried down the path toward the cabin to face the scowling-eyed Aunt Sairy. After fifteen minutes of impassioned pleading, Bart managed to persuade her that her chances for salvation would not be seriously jeopardized if she allowed her niece to accept his offer—and that if she refused she would no doubt be passing up the only chance of a lifetime to see a hundred dollars all at once. It was the hundred dollars that won the day. Aunt Sairy capitulated sourly.

The girl, whose name was Cynthy Parker, told him shyly that she'd hearn tell of these moving pictures down at the mission school in Jefferson Hollow, and that she'd always hoped to see one, but as for acting in one—she caught her breath in sheer wonder.

Sleepless-eyed, Bart awaited the arrival of the pair the next day. When the sway-backed buckboard finally rattled up the hill to the "set," he clenched his teeth to keep back a shout.

Cynthy had not failed him. Nor did she fail him when he set her to work. With the naive aptitude of a child, she followed his every direction. She was going to be good, he decided, deliriously, good!

In the days that followed the boys grew almost as enthusiastic as Bart over his find. He felt as though he had never been quite alive before. And Cynthy promptly became an epidemic with his staff. The two boys and Jud Hawkes, besides, were hopelessly infected with the common ailment.

the temple rice as they are privileged to do. Now you are as idle as they."

The green wilderness of the jungle in the plains steamed in the morning sunshine, and was often veiled in mist until noon. In the fresh hill air, I found it difficult at times to understand how I could have endured the air of the lowland for so long.

At night a panther would occasionally prowl even on the veranda, driven by hunger out of the arid uplands of the neighborhood.

The wild beasts in general had withdrawn into the jungle from the parched open country; and when in the afternoon, gun on shoulder, I left the woodland to walk over the bare hills, the only animals I encountered were jackals and hyenas. But they always slunk away out of range.

One moonlit night Panya came into my room and called me. Behind stood Pasha, tall and straight. Besides the moonlight, there played on his figure from beneath, the light of the fire that was burning in the inclosure.

"Sahib," said Panya, "the panther is so hungry that he is eating the fire. We can't drive him away, and it is impossible to get any sleep."

The news was welcome. I took up my gun and told Panya to quench the flames. The porters were away in the plains, having gone to buy rice and fowls. I loaded both barrels with ball, and placed my revolver handy. There was no glass in the window, which was protected merely by thick staves. Some of these had been renewed by Panya, but they would not have withstood a serious attack. I took up my position in the shadow, and we waited.

Pasha lay down in the corner of the room, and soon I heard him snoring. Panya remained close by me, having armed himself with the longest knife in our outfit, and with a bill-hook. He brandished it as if he were an Indian chief, grinning with excitement, and then began so admirable an imitation of the bleating of a goat that for the first time I fully realised that we were waiting here for the great beast of prey.

Perhaps an hour had slipped away, and I was beginning to lose patience, when suddenly the moonlight was eclipsed. Strangely enough, the last thing I thought of for a time was the panther, especially since all was now still, for the beast must have got wind of us when he made his last movement.

At length, I perceived the huge cat just in front of me. Big as he was, he was smaller than I had pictured him, and in that light almost colorless; but I could distinctly make out the supple vigor of the beautifully curved back, and I could see the splendid cat-like head, which was turned toward me with half-opened mouth.

At this moment there came a sound that made my blood run cold. It was a hissing snarl, loud and clear, expressing mingled anger and dread—a sound that paralyzed the will.

I remembered that I had heard this hideous and terrifying snarl at the zoological gardens in my childhood, when one of the keepers had passed close by the bars of the tiger's cage. It was true that now likewise I was separated from the beast of prey by a grating, but the fierceness of his voice made him seem so close that even the strongest of iron bars would hardly have inspired me with confidence.

I cannot now recall whether I already had my gun at my shoulder, or whether I shouldered it at the last instant, but I know that I took aim without feeling the slightest confidence in the effect of the discharge. I fired between the beast's eyes, which I could plainly distinguish, relying more upon the natural tendency of my arms to give the right direction to the barrels, than upon the sight. I fired both barrels in brief and perhaps too rapid succession.

I heard a noise on the floor of the veranda, as if the beast had leapt down from the roof. An instant later, one of the staves in the window snapped like a pipe-stem beneath a terrible blow from the creature's paw.

Then all was still on the veranda, as we listened to the echoes of the shots reverberating from crag to crag and rolling along the valleys, to die away finally in the distance of the moonlit night, like the clamor of two brothers fleeing before the hunters.

After this, the first definite sensation that brought me to myself was a pain in the hand with which I was grasping my revolver as firmly as if my life depended on it. I could not recollect having taken it up; but now, drawing a deep breath, I relaxed my grip, and realized that I was shaking all over as if in the cold stage of fever.

Then they marched for two days and two nights, without stopping to sleep.

Subsequently, in Canara and Mysore, I shot many panthers; some in ricefields, some in rocky ravines, and some that were crouching on branches; but never again, even when the danger was far greater, did I feel anything like my present sense of horror and helplessness.

An inadequate protection will often make us far more anxious than the certainty of having to face danger without any protection at all—and this not only where panthers are concerned!

In the twilight of morning we found the slaughtered panther among the aloes. The ground had been trampled and torn in his death agony. But the great beast now lay quiet, looking almost peaceful, and with no obvious sign of injury.

On close examination, I found that he had been hit by only one of the bullets, which had entered behind the ear, traversing the neck and breaking the spine. The eyes were closed, which is rare in a slaughtered beast. The muzzle, beautifully moulded, had a pained and almost tender expression, the jaws being slightly parted, as if in a last sigh. The thorny, bluish-green leaves of the aloes contrasted with the yellow tint of the panther's fur, the color-scheme being strangely harmonious, and seeming peculiarly appropriate to these Indian surroundings.

I shall never forget the picture, which is so strongly impressed upon my mind because now for the first time I felt that I had fully grasped the indescribable charm of India, which in all its significance and peculiarity can be conveyed neither by the brush of the painter nor by the words of the poet.

Panya was silent all the morning. A great lord of the hills was dead.

"A nickel raise, you said, Wally? Hmmm-mm. And before the draw. Looks bad. You must be mighty proud of something. Wish I knew how many cards you are going to take. Well, my hand's not so weak and low itself. Hmmm-mm. A nickel up, the man said. Who was it that opened? You, Russ? Opened for a dime and Wally raised it a nickel. And Wally generally plays them pretty close to the belt, too. Remember a time he laid down three aces pat. Must have something real this time. Wait till I mix me a little snifter while I'm making up my mind. How many left in this hand? Did you drop, Andy? Oh, you did. How about you, Jim? You're out, too? Hmmm-mm. Well, that just leaves Wally, Russ and myself. Russ opened for a dime and Wally boosted it a nickel. That makes fifteen cents. And my stack of white chips is getting pretty low, too. Hmmm-mm. Fifteen cents it costs for me to come in. Suppose you can beat a couple of little pairs, can't you, Wally? Ha-ha! I was just kidding. No, I'm not giving away the strength of my hand—not by a long shot. Maybe I've got a darned sight better than two little pairs. Maybe I'm going to stand pat and play these—what do you think of that? Who's got a cigar? No, I'm not shilling for time. Let's see, I owe Jim for the dime Russ opened in, and now Wally ups it a nickel. That makes fifteen cents. Fifteen altogether. Hmmm-mm. The buck's been running on that side of the table so far this evening. Hmmm-mm. Well, no use throwing good money after bad. I drop."

Women Are Funny That Way

The sign in the barber shop said: "Present a neat appearance. You can win her by having your hair cut regularly." Well, it kept me pretty nearly broke, but I visited that barber shop every day.

Then I thought perhaps the trouble lay in my social defects and that I was one of those stupids who never say a word all evening. So I learned French, Spanish, Greek, Crow and Old Crow, Choctaw, Coptic, Cuneiform and Hunt & Pick. I got so cultured up that nobody could pass a wisecrack without my hurling a fast one right back at him.

I drank Listerosis by the gallon, because the advertisement said not to ruin my chances with her by neglecting it.

You should have seen me delve into Elbert Haldeman-Julius's Scrapbook. I knew Aristotle as well as Babe Ruth knows his batting average. You have to get next to the best minds of history to be able to knock her for a loop. I found that out in the magazines.

I became an expert on more musical instruments than Paul Whiteman ever heard of. People used to stand entranced outside my window, under the impression that I was the Street Cleaning Department Band and that Lindbergh had just landed again, or something. You can't win her without art.

I joined all these clubs that prescribe the best book of the month to you. In that way I got four different books every day. A thorough grounding in current literature always goes great with her. If you don't believe it I'll show you the clipping that says so.

That wasn't the half of what I did to gain her love.

And still she regards me as something even the cat wouldn't bring in.

Doesn't she know the rules of the game? What's the matter with the girl, anyway?

"Nice work, Bart!" shouted the cameraman. "You make John Barrymore and Jack Gilbert look like extras. Man—you can act!"

hundred dollars, even Aunt Sairy thawed into unwonted hospitality. With reckless frequency one or the other of the young men was invited to set down to a snack of cawn pone or a bit o' scrapple or some hot biscuits and honey.

And each time that Bart forced himself to offer some lame excuse for refusing, the puzzled, hurt look deepened in Cynthy's wide blue eyes.

The Picture (already Bart thought of it in capitals) was almost done. They were shooting the final love scene. As a wild young mountaineer, Jud Hawkes was perfect. But as a camera lover he was a lumbering tame bear. For the moment Bart longed for a hard-boiled Hollywood product to whom camera love-making was all in the day's work.

"You poor halfwit!" he exploded one day. "Don't take hold of her hand with that please-kin-I-kiss-you, dying-calf look! Grab her! Then plant the kiss just a little below her mouth—it films better. And hold her tight. Like this—"

With a shove he pushed Jud aside, reached coolly for the startled Cynthy, and caught her close in his arms. Instinctively she struggled, then relaxed, and as his lips crushed on hers, her arm tightened slowly about his neck. Madness seized him. A fierce, terrible happiness blinded him.

"Cynthy, Cynthy!" he whispered. "What have you done to me?"

And Cynthy's only reply was a contented little sigh as she nestled closer.

"Nice work, Bart!" shouted the cameraman, as Bart reluctantly released the white-faced girl. "You make John Barrymore and Jack Gilbert look like extras! Man—you can act!"

Roughly Bart ordered everyone back to work and, after a dozen exasperating trials, the final love scene was completed. But he attempted no further demonstration himself.

That night a strange restlessness seized him. He dressed and wandered out under the pines. Aimlessly his feet carried him in the direction of Hangman's Hill.

The picture was done. Jud Hawkes was returning to his patch of cawn and his razorback hawgs. Aunt Sairy and Cynthy were preparing to catch up on their neglected hoeing. He was ready to face J. D. and J. D.'s praise. And suddenly he didn't want to go back. He didn't care about promotions—success! He wanted—

The stillness was broken by the sound of rolling pebbles, the muffled beat of horse's hoofs and a smothered cry. In the moonlight he made out the gaunt outlines of Jud Hawkes's horse, and in the saddle Jud Hawkes himself, clutching a struggling figure whose cries he tried to stifle.

With a lunge Bart grabbed the bridle, swung the horse sharply about and reached for the figure in the saddle. Instantly Hawkes was on the ground, and Bart found himself grappling with a sinewy young wildcat. Wrestling, pummeling and clinching again, the two crashed through the underbrush, skidded on slippery pine needles, collided with sword-like branches and caromed into tree trunks. Something warm and wet blinded Bart's eyes. His breath came in tearing gasps.

Strange biblical curses issued from Hawkes's lips. "Ain't goin' to let no city tempter do wrong by Cynthy—keep her safe—belongs in the hills—"

Just as his fingers closed triumphantly about Bart's throat they rolled over and Jud's head struck the sharp edge of a rock. He lay very still. Half-stupefied, Bart sat up, felt the other's pulse and found that he was only stunned. Then painfully he dragged himself to his feet.

Crouched terrified by the horse was Cynthy. When she recognized Bart she ran toward him. With swift, sure fingers she bathed his wounds with her handkerchief moistened in the brook, and bound up his cuts.

But perhaps Jud was right, and Cynthy's only happiness did lie among her own people, thought Bart despairingly, as the cool fingers fluttered against his cheek. Perhaps it would be wicked to transplant this little hill flower. He groaned aloud at his thoughts.

"Ain't there anything I can do to ease it?" she whispered imploringly, lips close to his.

"Only one thing!" Bart whispered back, turning his face toward hers. And she did it!

It was on the following morning that Bart, still somewhat dazed, hurried to the little railway station with the final roll of film. Far back at her cabin Cynthy waited. Waited for him to take her to Jefferson Hollow to a parson—and a narrow gold ring—and eternal happiness.

He stood on the rickety platform and watched the train puff in. There were seldom any passengers for the lonely flag station. But today he watched with surprise the lean young man who dropped to the ground, picked up his bag and started on a half-run toward him.

"Why, Don Savage!" he yelled. "What the—who—why?—"

"No cheering me, boy!" Don thumped him painfully on the back. "J. D. told me to hop off on my way back from New York and run over our publicity stuff for your picture with you. I told him it would go to your head and puff you up like a poisoned coyote, but he wouldn't listen to me. Insists you be treated with respect since he's seen the rushes of your picture. Boy, you sure rung the bell this time! Say, are the rest of the gang catching the limited this afternoon?"

"Well—the other two boys will. But I—that is—" Bart reddened.

"You old fox! It sure was good the way Diana Mack tried to put it over on you that time! I knew she couldn't get away with it. Minute J. D. saw what you were up against, he ordered Diana out here. But that baby would not stir a step till he'd promised he wouldn't let you know she was coming. Said she could handle you so much better if you weren't forewarned. And, bo, J. D. is sure pleased with the results. You two are made—say, where you going?"

Bart Kilpatrick's face had grown a sickly white. Without a word he whirled and swung himself into his saddle.

"Wait in the station, Don. Got something to 'tend to first." Bart wheeled his horse and headed toward the short cut leading over Hangman's Hill.

When he reached the little cabin in the clearing he leaped to the ground and strode savagely toward the open door. With curling lip and bitter eyes his glance swept the dusky interior. The bowl of bluebells on the table. The blackened, yawning fireplace with the brick oven beside it. The slim young figure in faded calico bending over the oven.

"You can drop that pose now, Miss Mack. The show's over!" he said grimly, as the girl turned from the oven with a pan of delicately golden biscuits in her hands. He swept off his hat with a mocking flourish. "You are a wonderful actress. Even I admit it. So now you can shed the property biscuits, while you toddle into your mascaro and ear-rings. And then back to Hollywood with the season's best joke in your pocket. Well, thank God, I won't be there to hear about it!"

He turned on his heel and stalked toward the door, when a little choking sound behind him made him pause.

"Bart—oh, please! Listen to me, Bart!" The blue calico figure darted toward him and clutched him fiercely by the arm. Bart tried to shake her off.

"All the awful things you say are true. I was furious at you, Bart, for turning down my party. But now—can't you see, everything's different here? Because I really am Cynthy Parker. I was born in this very cabin, and Aunt Sairy is my own aunt. While I was at the mission school in Jefferson Hollow I won a contest in the newspapers, and they sent me to Hollywood, where I stumbled into pictures. And no one here has ever known what I was doing. I—I thought it would be such a gorgeous joke when J. D. ordered me back here, to this very place, to see if I could fool you. But I never knew—I didn't dream—"

She paused. Her voice broke. Still Bart stood with head averted, but the muscles under her imploring touch had suddenly grown rigid.

"I didn't dream the joke would be on me!" continued the girl bravely, "for falling in love!"

Something roared in Bart's ears. Slowly he turned to face the girl.

"You mean you care—Cynthy—Diana?" he whispered incredulously. The tear-stained face burrowed against his shoulder; the slim young body nestled into his tightening arms.

"Uh-uh. Both of us do!" sighed a rapturous voice against his heart.

A Fire-Eating Panther's Moonlight Attack Upon an Isolated Bungalow — The Queen of Darkness in the Jungles of India

By Waldemar Bonsels

THE perils of India have little to do with the indigenous population, for the inhabitants are peaceful and kindly, show no lust for slaughter, and have for thousands of years been subject to strict rule. Apart from the passions fomented by political fanaticism and from the crimes resulting from revenge, hatred, and the craving for power, in the greater part of the peninsula European travelers are in no danger from the natives.

The perils of India, its influences, and its secret powers, belong to a latitude of existence very different from that in which knife or pistol is decisive for weal or woe. India offers few dangers to anyone whose demands do not go beyond the preservation of his transitory life; but the daemonic spirit of India touches the very marrow of the soul where it is endeavoring to solve the great problems of existence and to storm the heights of human consciousness.

With the incomprehensible tranquillity of its heavenly triumph, the ancient spirit of the eternal realm of God paralyzes all the fierce zeal of struggle and research, all youth fighting for knowledge, and the vigor of all spiritual activity.

What is, has been.

I was traveling in the jungle by the waters of the Valarpattanam Lagoon, accompanied by my Hindu attendant, Panya, and my Mohammedan cook, Pasha. We had pitched our tent near a village and I was asleep in the night when a loud cry awakened me.

In the thick darkness outside of the tent, nothing was visible beyond the tree stems close to the fire and reflecting its light. They gleamed with a fantastic air of unreality, resembling limbless monsters with shapeless heads formed by the foliage, crowding into a narrow red-lighted room. Pasha was beside the fire.

"A woman is crying out in terror of death," he said.

Coming forth from the tent, I could see torches moving in the forest, and could discern the dusky forms of savages. My heart was racked by a woman's wail. Rarely have I heard so piteous an expression of grief and despair. It was an animal cry of pain, and yet voiced the misery of the human spirit. I felt as if a ghost were walking in the night, and I had repeatedly to pull myself together to keep my energies from being paralyzed and to avoid succumbing to a sense of horror.

"Make a light," I shouted.

A cloud of yellow smoke enveloped us, and then a tall red column flickered in its midst.

A cluster of naked figures appeared, timid and yet eager, carrying a recumbent form upon a stretcher improvised out of branches. A woman with black locks streaming across her face, gesticulating wildly, called to me something unintelligible. Despite her intense excitement, despite the urgency of her errand, she did not venture close to me, but I could now make out that her expression was one of mingled dread and hope.

On the stretcher lay a girl of twelve or thirteen, scantily covered with a parti-colored strip of cotton. Beneath this her slender form was contorted.

"The cobra," said Panya. "The mother has come to you for help."

My heart bled under the glances of the old woman, a touching and pitiable figure as she stood before me in her pain and hideousness. Her lamentations had ceased, for now she was dumb with expectation; craning forward she peered into my face, seeming to believe that at my pleasure I could give death or life to her daughter.

With the other villagers, the girl had been prowling around our camp to catch sight of the strange man from a foreign world, from a world that lay beyond the sea and was full of mysteries and wonders. In her eagerness for the novel and the incomprehensible, she had forgotten the caution that is indispensable in the jungle, the caution that had been impressed on her from earliest childhood.

Amid the gloom, she had felt the little prick which at the outset her heart would not believe to be the terrible doom; she had stifled her fears notwithstanding the sudden anguish of collapse and the feeling as if dark wings were brushing her temples. It must have been a thorn. Then had come giddiness, swimming in the head, failing pulse. The hands were cramped, and by degrees all the limbs, as if there were glass splinters in the blood, tearing the vessels. At length the dread certainty found vent in a cry:

"The Queen of Darkness!

The jungle was filled with this cry, at once a cry of veneration for the deity and a cry of horror and lamentation.

It was too late. I lanced the wound, which was no more than a needle prick on the foot, with blackened margins. The cautery is only of use in the first instant after the bite, and in any case I could never have brought myself to add a fresh torment to those from which the little frame was already suffering. Let the child die in peace, exclaimed a voice within me. It is her last privilege on earth.

Often we remained encamped for a considerable time in one spot, my goal and the passage of time forgotten.

The green eyes of the jungle and the silvery breath of the night air in the open country put a spell upon me; thought gave place to reverie; day was an indefeasible certitude of the joy of life, and night a formless dream.

The vigorous, tranquil, and patient growth of the plants that claimed every corner of the earth, gradually robbed my mind of the consciousness of its own right. Cradled in wonder and animated by the will of another existence than my own, I moved onward as if walking in sleep; and yet at the same time vigilant and profoundly permeated with a glowing faith in the sacredness of being.

But as the days passed, I began more and more to feel that something was wrong with me. I tried all kinds of remedies except the only one that could have helped me—flight from the swampy jungle.

My home had vanished from memory. Europe had become a noisy and unpleasant dream, full of needless bustle. I smiled compassionately when I recalled the fuss that I had made over the petty happenings of my restless past. My imagination ran riot in colorful dreams. Life was clouded with visions.

At length I seemed to awaken in a new existence. My limbs were weighted as with an infinite fatigue, while my eyes were unsteady and stupefied.

Suddenly I caught sight of my hand lying on my knee. It looked like a foreign object, emaciated and quite white. I tried to raise it, and it obeyed me. I sighed profoundly, and distinctly recall saying out loud:

"This cannot be the old life."

Thereupon Panya appeared. He looked extraordinarily unreal, as if he were floating in the air. My thought was, "Hullo, there is a brown man with a white turban!"

"Sahib!" he cried, as he looked into my eyes, "Sahib, speak!"

"Where are we, Panya?" I asked feebly. "What's happened to the time, Panya?"

The boy stared at me uncomprehendingly. A fresh anxiety was obvious in his face, but this waned as he continued to look at me.

"Sahib, speak good words to me," he begged, at once dubiously and hopefully.

Then I realized that my questions had been in German, so I repeated them in English.

Instead of answering, Panya uttered a loud cry, fell upon his knees and embraced mine. Sobbing, he stammered:

"Sahib, you will live!"

"Where have we got to, Panya?"

Panya rose with a happy laugh, moved to one side and said:

"That is the sea. We are high in the hills, and you are looking down on the sea. We carried you here from the swamps, marching for two days and two nights without stopping to sleep, and hardly resting at all until we reached the fresh air and quiet. Look around. Look at the forest! This is the abandoned bungalow of an English farm. We had to drive out the donkeys which had taken possession of the house."

He paused and looked at me once more. Then he went on:

"Oh, Sahib, now you have come to yourself again. Sense has returned to your eyes and your words, and joy has returned to my breast."

As I watched Panya weeping, I understood that he was speaking the truth, and that, from the realm of fever poisons, my spirit had come back into the world of reality.

Many of the necessaries of life were lacking to us.

The white ants had wrought havoc among our food supply. Still, there were not many mouths to feed. Besides myself, Panya, and Pasha, there were only two porters from South Canara. These latter, with great expenditure of labor, and often at the hazard of their lives, would from time to time procure rice and fruit from the nearest jungle village.

The natives had realized that we were dependent upon their aid, and consequently my store of money was rapidly melting away. Panya was outraged by these exactions. He muttered imprecations against the extortioners, and more than once he vowed that he would burn their village over their head. My equanimity led him to take me seriously to task.

"Sahib, you are a great lord. You can do whatever you please, but you do nothing. The days pass one after another like waves breaking on the shore. They leave no trace, and each day is like the one before. When we were in Anantapur you used to mock at the Brahmins for lying in the sun all day, and eating

Waldemar Bonsels is a great literary figure in modern Germany. As a young man he spent a long period in India, not roving from place to place, but setting for months at a time off the beaten path of travelers in city and country dwellings. From these he worked far into the jungles. Disregarding traditions of race prestige, he made friends among natives of all castes. His adventures were fraught with mystery, danger and beauty.

This is the first of a series of articles in which, with a fresh viewpoint and a vivid sense of drama, he gets close to the heart of India.

It did not take the place of Tony's cheery greeting.

In Which a Home, Started Down the Road to Efficiency, Gathers One of Life's Great Momentums and Just Keeps Rolling Along

THIS is a human document—one of those poignant, pulsating confessions wrung from an anguished heart at a rate of approximately five cents a word. It is the story of how we put our home on a business basis and then took it off again.

During our first year of married life, Phoebe and I passed uneventfully through what is known as "the period of adjustment." At the end of that time each of us knew the opinions of the other on politics, religion, literature, art, laundry, taxicabs, tooth paste and companionate razor blades. There was practically nothing left to argue about, and all our snappy comebacks seemed to have lost their elasticity.

Then one day we began keeping a household expense book. Almost immediately I noticed a change in our attitude toward each other. Our home life became louder, if not funnier. There was something electric in the atmosphere, a sense of impending conflict.

It was a very complete book, and there appeared to be a place in it for everything except our relatives. Whenever our relatives came to visit us the household expense book always suffered an attack of asphasia, accompanied by delusions of grandeur. In a single weekend it would become so completely demoralized that a certified public accountant and seventeen trained seals couldn't have balanced it.

Our budget allowed certain fixed amounts for all the necessities of life, and a comfortable margin for luxuries. But no provision had been made for hospitality, and in order to make the budget come out even we were obliged to disguise our guests as various items of household expenditure and smuggle them into the ledger as best we could. Thus, Uncle Abner became Electricity, Cousin Lucy and the twins were Gas, and Uncle Abner's first wife's niece, who stayed with us while she had her tonsils out, was adequate in the role of General Depreciation. When two of Phoebe's former classmates stopped over for several days on their way home from a sorority convention, they were listed as Bathroom Fixtures, which wasn't so far wrong at that. Phoebe's Aunt Eulalie visited us for six weeks, and we were forced to split her between Fuel and Laundry; but with her figure, she could stand it.

Aunt Eulalie was a self-made invalid with a night-blooming appetite. Breakfast, luncheon and dinner left her as cold as she left them. Phoebe's most elaborate menus failed to tempt her; she refused the choicest delicacies with a wan smile, and contented herself with hot water and a species of imported bread that resembled a rubber bath sponge.

But every night after the rest of us had gone to bed she would slip down to the kitchen and make a raid on the ice box. At first we thought it must be a Brownie, so we put a bowl of milk on the cellar stairs; but when the cold chicken and potato salad continued to disappear, we were driven to the conclusion that it was only Aunt Eulalie, after all. And Aunt Eulalie could not, by any stretch of the imagination, be classified as a Brownie.

"I wish," said Phoebe, as she looked over the grocery bills, "that some of these home economics experts would write an article on 'How to Keep Aunts Out of the Ice Box.'"

"The trouble with you is that you haven't put things on a business basis," I replied. "You ought to run this house the way I run my office."

"All right," said Phoebe with determination, "I will!"

She began by having an electric refrigerator installed. It had a time lock on it, like a safe. From 8 p.m. to 8 a.m., no one—not even Aunt Eulalie—could open it. Faced with the alternative of eating at meal time or starving to death, Aunt Eulalie soon left the shelter of our roof, but not much else.

Although we enjoyed our electric refrigerator, we missed the social contacts which went with the old-fashioned ice box. Somehow its busy mechanical hum didn't take the place of Tony's cheery greeting. The manufacturers of these labor-saving devices might preserve at least a semblance of the human element by equipping them with phonographic attachments which would shout, when the door was opened: 'Allo, 'allo! How you feel deesa morn'? Feefty ponns, yes? Gooda bye!"

Phoebe's next step toward Efficency Plus was to get an electric bread-mixer, a hydraulic meat-slicer, a pneumatic vegetable parer and a steam egg-beater. Our kitchen looked and sounded like Old Home Week at the Baldwin Locomotive Works. So many of the culinary activities were performed by machinery that we let our cook go, but we required the full-time services of an expert mechanic. After a few weeks among the cranks, coils, belts and motors, Phoebe herself could have qualified as a stationary engineer. She used blueprints instead of recipes, and planned her menus with a slide rule. The pots and pans which had hung against the kitchen wall were replaced by wrenches, spanners, acetylene torches and battery testers.

"Phoebe," I said one day at luncheon, as I fished a three-inch bolt out of the corned-beef hash, "don't you know that food should never be bolted? It causes indigestion."

"The matter has been called to our attention and we shall take it under advisement at the earliest opportunity," replied Phoebe, "and please don't call me Phoebe. Call me A. J. It's more businesslike."

"But those aren't your initials," I objected.

"I know it, but I like the sound of them," she explained. "You call me A. J., and I'll call you the Chief . . . Now, Chief, I want to have a conference with you regarding the bread-pudding situation. It's getting serious. Our figures for the twenty-four-hour period ending at 1 p.m. today indicate a production that is 68 per cent in excess of the demand. Of course, bread pudding is a staple commodity—"

"Mr. Schmaltz of the delicatessen is here, ma'am," said the maid, appearing at the door.

"I'm in conference now, Miss Jackson," said Phoebe bruskly.

"But he says it's very important," insisted the maid.

"Very well," Phoebe consulted her engagement book. "Make an appointment with him for 3:45 p.m., Miss Jackson, and tell him to be here promptly, because I have a meeting of the Pressure Cookers' Protective Association at 4 As I was saying, Chief, bread pudding doesn't require a quick turnover—like pancakes, for instance—and we must make allowances for the fact that this is a Presidential year. But with a 68 per cent overproduction, something must be done to stimulate the demand. Now, I've looked into this matter pretty thoroughly, on my own initiative, and I think I can see daylight. I'm only a junior executive, Chief, but I intend to make good."

"Good what?" I asked.

Phoebe ignored me, and spread a large chart on the table. "The red line on this graph indicates the curve of our bread-pudding consumption," she announced. "You will notice that it reaches its peak on Monday, the day the pudding is first served, and then declines abruptly, reaching its lowest level on Thursday. Now, it seems to me—"

"Phoebe," I interrupted, "have you got a cake in the oven? I smell something burning."

"Just a minute, Chief. I'll find out." She pressed a button and the maid appeared at the door. "Miss Jackson, do we have a cake in the oven?"

"Yes, ma'am," replied the maid. "A devil's food cake, prepared according to Recipe G-29, File K."

"Thank you, Miss Jackson," said Phoebe. When the maid had gone, she turned to me and said confidentially, "Miss Jackson is a wonder. Has everything right at her finger tips. I don't know what I'd do without that girl."

"But the cake!" I cried. "I can smell it burning. Hadn't you better take it out of the oven?"

"That's a good suggestion, Chief. I'll make a note of it." She took a pencil from behind her ear and wrote in a looseleaf book: "Memo in re Cake G29-K. Chief suggests possible burning. Must investigate. A. J."

"There," said Phoebe, tossing me a carbon copy of her memorandum, "that's for your records, Chief. I'll look into that oven by tomorrow noon at the latest, and give you a report on it at our next conference."

The dining hall was already blue with smoke, and a heavy odor of scorched sweetness filled the air. Coughing feebly, I staggered away to the relatively homelike atmosphere of my office.

Thereafter I saw less and less of Phoebe, or A. J., as I had learned to call her. Almost every time I came home she was in conference, and I was able to communicate with her only by writing or through the versatile Miss Jackson. Our conversation degenerated into a series of memoranda, and our home life was practically extinct.

Finally in desperation I moved to a hotel, and sent the following telegram to Phoebe:

SITUATION INTOLERABLE STOP AM GOING AWAY. CHIEF.

Her reply was prompt but ambiguous. It read:

STOP STOP YOU CANNOT LEAVE DON'T YOU UNDERSTAND? A. J.

To which I replied, quite naturally:

NO. CHIEF.

A few hours later a messenger boy handed me an envelope containing a blueprint drawing. It proved to be the ground plan of a shirt no longer than a man's hand, and a pair of socks whose size would have delighted a Scotch Santa Claus. With it was a message which read:

AM ENCLOSING HEREWITH PLANS AND SPECIFICATIONS OF MY WORK NOW UNDER CONSTRUCTION. A. J.

By way of reply I dashed out of the hotel and hailed a taxi. When I reached home I found that the household had been restored to its old-time inefficiency. The machinery had been cleared out of the kitchen, the graphs and charts had been removed from the walls, and in the parlor sat Phoebe, sewing a tiny garment.

"Darling," I cried, "you don't mean—"

"Yes," she said, blushing prettily. "Won't you—sit down?"

Since that day we have made no more attempts to put our home on a business basis. We still keep a household expense book, but we use the hit-and-miscellany method, placing everything that can't be accounted for otherwise in the miscellaneous column.

"But the cake," I cried. "I can smell it burning!"

understand! The claim—I heard Mr. Holt urging you to change your stakes and drive them above and below on the river. Why did he want you to change them?"

"Ha, ha, Jael! You need not worry about John Holt! Come day, mayhap, ye'll know the story."

Kinkaid listened in silence. For as the old man talked the heart of the younger man seemed to sink within him. Holt had actually staked a claim! Then all his little theories were blasted. Holt had not been murdered by Martineau! Martineau was innocent! Even the damned enigmatic down to the last detail. "There ax will tell the tale," he muttered as Kinkaid left the cabin. "There be no two axes in the face of the earth. Mayhap 'twas a supposed murderer of his own that he be protected the helve against striking and dont like." Martineau, with infinite pains, removed the ax from the cabin, removed the head, removed the helve, removed the cable, removed the tarot without breaking it, and sealed it for further reference where it would be safe from man and the elements. Even in the face of the evidence, Kinkaid was loath to believe that Holt had staked a claim. Martineau was guilty. Martineau must be guilty. He must be guilty! Why, then, did Holt stake a claim? Why, indeed? Kinkaid was still pondering the question when he reached the shore of the lake. Those gray eyes revealed the man that was it would hold a lot of gold." he muttered. Kinkaid came back into the cabin. Holt was dead. There was a crushing blow, and the ax clattered against the window as John Holt pitched forward against the unposed Martineau, and both crashed to the ground. In a panic of terror the Frenchman wriggled from beneath the body of the larger man and rushed wildly through the fog.

A moment later he halted, recovered his nerve and retraced his steps. Holt lay very still. Blood still gushed from the crushed skull and with a shudder of terror Martineau noticed that his own clothing was soaked in the sticky red fluid. The sight and the feel of the blood upon his own clothing steadied him. Here were things to be done, and the more quickly the better.

The plan that had seemed so simple had gone terribly awry. He had killed a man by violence, and murder by violence shrieks its story to those trained to read the signs? What to do first? How to go about it? The body of the dead man annoyed him. He could not keep his eyes from it. Stooping suddenly, he gathered his strength, and, half-dragging it, toppled it into the shaft. What next? The gold! That was it. That was what he was here for—the reason he had killed Holt. He would get the gold and then he would cover his tracks.

Picking up the shovel, he began throwing out the sand. No need for caution now. What he wanted was speed. A few moments sufficed to uncover the sacks, and, dropping to his knees, he drew them one by one from the hole. Counting as he went, he piled five pounds to the sack that had killed Holt. One would not think that such a tiny sack could hold five pounds—but then Holt had said there were eleven! Nervously, frantically, he pawed at the sand—ah, yes—here it is—eleven—just as Holt had said. Fifty-five pounds of pure gold! But—what would he do with it?

Even as he removed the sacks from the hole, his brain had been busy—he must be at his own cabin when McLeod should pass tomorrow evening or the next morning. No one knew he had been off the Churchill. The half-wit had not watched his departure from McLeod's and did not know whether he went upstream or down. McLeod must see him at his own cabin as he passed. McLeod—yes, McLeod would be the one to answer for the murder of John Holt. He would admit that he had visited Holt—not knowing that Holt was dead, he would have no reason for denying it—and the half-wit would tell of the visit and of his own visit to McLeod's. He must beat McLeod to the Churchill—and he could not do that and carry fifty-five pounds of gold through the scrub at night.

McLeod would be camped at the portage. He was glad he had left his own canoe on the Churchill. He could never have passed McLeod on the portage. But the gold! Cache it! That's it—cache the gold and travel light. McLeod would be spending gold. His story of Holt's giving him the gold would never stand. Kinkaid would back him. Kinkaid would be dead. Martineau would be dead. Martineau would be dead. Martineau

HER DERELICT PARTY

By Alma Whitaker

IT WAS just before Thanksgiving Day that Kathleen returned from Europe, laden with expensive gifts for her expensive friends—for Christmas.

She opened up her charming expensive home and decided it was her social duty to give a stylish Thanksgiving party. For days she and her cook consulted about the highly superior viands that must be served at such an event. It was so important that everything should be de luxe, because Kathleen's friends were de luxey people.

It entailed any amount of labor and concentration, as all good hostesses know. Finally the great evening arrived and the guests in all their sartorial glory began to appear.

"Oh, my dear, don't expect me to eat any dinner," gushed the first to arrive. "I had a perfectly huge meal at two today—the usual family reunion stuff. Then we went over to Naida's for eggnogs, and of course, I had to eat a bite with the children in the nursery before I left. I couldn't eat a particle, really."

And that was a fair sample of the greeting which Kathleen received from her twenty guests. Here she and her cook were ragged wrecks with the preparations, the most expensive stores in town had been scoured for stylish delicacies—for what? Just to provide for a bunch of overfed, surfeited people whose appetites were always gorged to repletion, whose palates were blase.

As Kathleen viewed the remains of the feast afterward, ruefully, with all its wicked waste—so much good food just picked over—she wondered why, why, why her crowd persisted in entertaining in this particular way. In fact, she suffered a revulsion of feeling toward her whole crowd.

But Kathleen is a born hostess. Giving parties is one of her recognised duties in life. She is a retired screen actress—one who retired while the retiring was good, with plenty of her handsome salaries wisely salted down.

So . . . oh, well here was Christmas coming along. It was unthinkable that Kathleen should not give a Christmas party. Besides, she had all those expensive gifts she had brought back from Paris to present to this crowd of hers.

Then she met poor Mrs. S. on the boulevard one day. Heavens, how run-down the creature looked. She was the divorced wife of a famous actor—who had promptly dissipated her "settlement" money. Probably by giving parties to expensive friends. At all events here she was five years after, in shabby clothes, hair and complexion neglected, and growing more bitter as time sped on. Kathleen greeted her and, on a generous impulse, invited her home. Mrs. S. was flustered and embarrassed—it was quite a while since she had been politely dropped by her former "friends."

She found that Mrs. S. had now become a member of that sad little colony of derelicts in Hollywood, most of whom were living in cheap rooms and eking out a living—chiefly on hope. The talkies, it seemed, had thrown dozens of them out of work—actors, actresses, scenario writers, assistant directors, all sorts of people who had been swept off their little pedestals by the revolution in the picture business. Many of them had been successful shining lights in the days when Kathleen was a star. And, unlike Kathleen, but like those members of the profession in "Trelawny of the Wells," alas, they had failed to "put by" for a rainy day. Even in sunny California that sort of a "rainy day" seemed alarmingly prevalent.

Kathleen made a point of meeting this little derelict colony, fast losing hope, all becoming embittered. Then she had her brilliant idea . . .

Sure, she would give a Christmas party this year. But not for her expensive friends. She would invite all the poor derelicts—and lavish her Lucullian feasts on them. To them she would give the expensive gifts she had brought back from Paris.

And that is exactly what she did. It had to be buffet style because there were, alas, so many of them . . . about twenty men and a dozen women—who would not otherwise have been invited to anybody's Christmas party.

In order to take the "derelict" idea out of it Kathleen captured half a dozen still successful charming girls and enthused them with her idea. They were to wear their most glorious best and devote themselves to making this party as stylish an event as was being held anywhere. Complete lists of all the guests would be sent to the newspapers. It was to have all the fashionable tang that could be mustered—these derelicts were to be made to feel that they were back in the swim.

"I have never given such an utterly delightful party in all my life" confided Kathleen afterward. "Men who had not worn their old dress suits for ages, turned out in gallant style. The women had done wonders on renewed hope, and my charming girls were never so charming.

"And one man," Kathleen told me, "had said he could not come to my party because a charming young Serbian, who had staked him for several months while out of work, could not be left alone. This young Serbian had never recovered from the horrors of the four years he served in the war, and from the death of his lady love who had committed suicide. He was a morose, sad man, without hope. So I told the boy to bring this sad friend with him if possible . . ."

Well, the charming but sad young Serbian went to the party too, with his protege. Kathleen laid herself out to be sweet to him, especially because he had befriended the out-of-work young actor. And that proved to be Kathleen's fate. It was love at first sight. Kathleen, who had kept herself heartwhole all these years with slightly cynical wisdom, met her Prince Charming at her own derelict party.

"But that isn't the end of the story," says Kathleen radiantly. "Every one at that party received renewed hope and encouragement. Several of them are already reinstated, others have all sorts of breaks opening up for them. Mrs. S. no longer looks run-down and will almost surely marry again. That old party of mine boosted their self-respect and confidence, gave them a new conceit of themselves. It is easily the most delightful party—and the only unselfish party—I had ever given to that time. I regard it as my one real triumph as a hostess. Even if my guests were furbished up in their old dress suits and laboriously pressed out ties, and with carefully concealed frays on their collars and cuffs. Even if the women had had to use every artifice to make over their old gowns and spruce themselves up. I'm the happiest woman in the world—because I gave a Christmas party to the right people."

unfortunate? The claims—I heard his groans! You in charge your stakes and drive them above and below on the river. Why did he want you to change them?"

"Ha, ha, lass! You'll mind not worry about John Holt! Some day, mayhap, ye'll know the story."

Kinkaid listened in silence. For as the old man talked the heart of the younger man seemed to die within him. Mary McLeod, the daughter of the old Scottish farmer, might some day be Mary Kinkaid. But Mary McLeod, the daughter of the millionaire Angus McLeod—never. Why hadn't he told of the love that was in his heart? He had put it off from day to day, and now it was too late. She would never understand. Always, even though she should accept him, she would know deep down in her heart that he had not spoken of this love until he knew she was rich. But she would never have him now. With her millions she could pick and choose, and her choice would never fall upon a policeman. Life is a hell of a mess. Of course, he would carry on—but what's the use of it all? Suppose some day they should speak of him as they speak of Old Man Downey—it would be but an empty honor—without Mary McLeod. Funny Old Man McLeod had made a strike staking inland from Discovery. But gold's where you find it—and he had the gold.

Kinkaid stepped to his canoe. "I'll be going now," he said. "Good-by."

"But, lad, wait. We'll have tea an' a bit to eat. Surely ye canna be in such a hurry. Wheer ye headin'?"

"For Gaunt's—then up Seal River."

"Gaunt's, eh? Weel, ye may tell David Gaunt that John Holt made his strike, an' so did Angus McLeod. Ye can tell him he'd best fergit his pulp wood an' come on up an' dig gold. But ye'll nae be pullin' out before ye eat."

"It's too early for me. I'm not hungry. I'll be going. I'll tell Gaunt about the gold." He turned to the girl, who stood at the water's edge, teapot in hand. "And you? Will you come back in with your father?"

She shook her head without looking up. "No," she answered. "I shall stay on at the school. There is no reason why I should come back, now."

"No—no reason," he repeated softly. "No reason at all. But there'll be times—always, when you'll remember—this." His eyes swept the river with its bordering timber and the distant blue hills beyond.

The voice of the girl was as low as his own: "There'll be times when I'll remember—the moonlight."

Vibrant life surged through his veins. He could feel the flush of warm blood in his cheeks. She was stooping close beside him, her eyes on the stream of water that flowed smoothly in over the rim of the teapot. An uncontrollable urge to reach down and gather her into his arms—then the words of McLeod ringing in his ears: "We're rich, lass—rich!" Kinkaid stepped into his canoe. "Good-by, Mary," he said. "I'll be remembering the moonlight, too."

CHAPTER XII

DAVID GAUNT greeted Kinkaid at the landing. "Right on the job, son! You're a good two weeks earlier than I expected. How's Old Man Downey?"

As he talked Gaunt led the way to the big log house in the marsh, and a few moments later the two stood before the huge fireplace in the living-room with its mysterious door of oak and iron.

Gaunt poured himself a drink and clapped his hands loudly. A half-breed appeared, and Gaunt spoke to him. "Half a dozen bottles of beer, Marcus." The man vanished and reappeared a few moments later with the beer. The two seated themselves and Gaunt plunged directly into the business in hand. "About that Seal River business. I don't believe it was a murder, at all. I've talked to a half-dozen Injuns this winter who know the facts, and I believe this Injun, Tom Hunter, got just what was comin' to him. The Injun that killed him, Nunukak, I've known for years. He's a good boy. Got married about a year ago, and this Tom Hunter came along and got to foolin' around his wife. Hunter's a mission Injun that's been workin' for years outside somewhere. Probably got in trouble and came back till it blew over. Anyway, that's only conjecture—what you want is facts. Nunukak warned him several times to stay away from his camp, and one day, when Nunukak was out at his nets, Hunter showed up and tried to steal his wife. She cried out, and Nunukak came ashore. Hunter pulled a revolver on him, an' Nunukak shot him with his rifle. This is straight, I got it from Nunukak, his wife, and half a dozen witnesses that'll swear to it. If you want to go up an' investigate for yourself, I'll go with you. But you'll never get a conviction."

"I don't want a conviction!" The vehemence of the reply drew a smile of commendation from David Gaunt.

"In love, lad?" he asked.

"No—that is—"

"That is—yes," corrected Gaunt. "Fine! Good luck to you! Don't do like Old Man Downey an' I did an' wait till you're an old man before you marry. We know what we've missed."

"I never expect to marry, sir." Kinkaid drew the cap from a second bottle of beer. "I think, in the service, we're better off single."

David Gaunt's smile broadened. "So she turned you down an' you're quittin', eh? Well, maybe it's just as well—for her."

"What do you mean—"

Something in the older man's face checked the words. The smile had faded from Gaunt's lips, and the gray eyes were regarding him intently—and the steady gaze of those gray eyes reminded the man that was David Gaunt's friend—and took the sting from his words. "I'm sorry, Gaunt. I didn't have any right to say that. You've been mighty white to me, and I'm disappointed in you. As it is, I believe that Old Man Downey can still pick 'em. Now listen—you're a policeman—you're goin' to stick. Just take my word for it—no man's better off single! If the girl's worth marryin' she's worth workin' for—an' by workin' I don't mean diddlin' around dancin' an' the like. The kind of a woman that Downey wanted—an' got—an' that I wanted—an' got—an' that you want—is the kind of a woman that likes to see a man play the game! There's times when she'll hate him—that's proper. No woman that's worth havin' can love a man she can't hate. But to get back to business—do you want to go up the Seal?"

Kinkaid shook his head. "No. I know Corporal Downey's regard for you, and I happen to know the commissioner's regard for Downey. I think, sir, I am safe in accepting your report. If there should be any call for affidavits, I suppose you will be willing—"

"I never made a statement in my life that I wouldn't back with an affidavit."

"I know—pardon me."

"It's all right, lad. An older man in the service wouldn't have said that to David Gaunt, but there's no harm. I like you, or I wouldn't have had you back—nor would Downey have sent you."

"You've been in touch with Downey?" The surprise on the younger man's face brought a smile to Gaunt's lips. "Moccasin telegraph, lad. D'ye ever hear of it? Now, where do you go from here?"

"I'm going up the Churchill. I met Angus McLeod on the little Churchill, and he told me to tell you that John Holt had made his strike. McLeod seems to have made a strike, too. He said to tell you to come up there and dig gold."

"Forgan told me that Holt had struck gold. I'm glad of it, but I guess I'll stick to my pulp wood."

"Who is Less House?"

"A hooch runner. Fellow by the name of Martineau furnishes the money an' the brains. House peddles the stuff."

"Guess they'll stand a little watching," said Kinkaid, "especially if there's going to be a stampede up the Churchill."

A week after leaving Gaunt's, Kinkaid poled his canoe up the smaller river and beached it before Holt's cabin. The door stood partly open, and as he advanced toward it a porcupine scurried out and lumbered heavily into the scrub.

The officer called loudly and, receiving no answer, pushed open the door and entered. Another porcupine scrambled clumsily from the table to the wood box, and, dropping to the floor, sought refuge in a corner where he humped menacingly, his quills abristle. Kinkaid glanced about him with a premonition of evil. The place had been untenanted save by the porcupines for many days. He noted that the surface of the floor had been chiseled all about the stove by the sharp teeth of the animals to satisfy their craving for salt and grease. Various articles of food lay strewn about the floor, where they had been knocked from the shelves by the prowling climbers. Also, he noted that the blankets had been thrown back as though someone had hastily left the bed. A pair of rubber boots and heavy socks lay at the foot of the bed, but no other clothing was visible.

"Something wrong here," he muttered, and, being careful to disturb nothing, stepped from the room. Before the door he stooped and examined the ground, but his scrutiny revealed only a confusion of porcupine tracks. A few feet away a canoe lay bottom side up upon the bank of the river, a pole and two paddles leaning against it.

Back from the bank, and a short distance below, a windlass showed above a shaft and Kinkaid walked over to inspect it. Near by, the sand had been scooped away, exposing a cavity beneath a flat-topped rock. The sand looked as though it had been hurriedly thrown aside, and, dropping to his knees, Kinkaid subjected the cavity to minute scrutiny. Yes, he decided, something had been cached beneath that rock—something not bulky but evidently of value—else why should it have been cached, and evidently carefully covered with sand?

The size of the cavity was not large—"But it would hold a lot of gold," he muttered, and turned toward the shaft. The next moment he drew back sharply, and for a moment he stood with tight-pressed lips. In the shaft, resting on a head before which he stood, lay the body of a man. It was clad only in heavy underwear, and the feet were bare. Nerving himself, he knelt at the edge of the shaft and peered downward. The body lay on its back, the face staring whiteeyed toward the sky. It was the bearded face of John Holt.

Detaching the rope from the bucket, Kinkaid lowered himself into the hole, and, making the body fast, clambered out and drew it from the shaft. As he laid it carefully upon the ground, he noted that the beard and hair upon the right side of the head were matted with dry blood and sand, and a hasty examination showed that the skull had been mashed above the temple by a terrific blow from some blunt instrument.

Carefully he searched the ground in the immediate vicinity, but, with the exception of rocks of various sizes, nothing was found that could have served as a weapon. Again he peered into the shaft, and once more he lowered himself by the rope. There on the bottom lay the weapon—an ax, of the single-bit type, its head and the lower part of the helve stained with the dark-brown stain of blood. Picking it up by the extreme end of the helve, Kinkaid carried it to the surface and, taking care to allow nothing to touch the helve, studied it minutely. It was an old ax, the back of its head battered and split in the pounding of iron wedges. An ax evidently discarded and relegated to the rough work about an establishment. A few hairs adhered to the roughened iron, and these Kinkaid removed, wrapped in paper, and placed in a small tin box together with other hairs which he snipped from the head of the corpse.

Further examination of the body revealed nothing, and Kinkaid estimated that the man had been dead for two or three weeks. "Looks like I've run onto something here—something real," he muttered. "Holt never bashed in his own head falling into that shaft with his ax. He was knocked off for his gold." His words trailed into silence, and as he stood there his eyes widened in horror as they traveled slowly from the dead man's upturned face to the empty cavity beneath the flat-topped rock. His knees felt weak, and he sat down abruptly upon the coping of the windlass. What was it Mary McLeod had told him?—that Holt had told her father that he had fifteen thousand dollars in gold cached, and millions in the gravel! For moments he sat in dumb horror staring at the cavity beneath that flat-topped rock.

Instantly, Kinkaid was on his feet, the sudden weakness gone from his knees. "I've got a real job on my hands now—and I'll run down the man that did this if it takes me the rest of my life!"

Methodically, he went to work, carefully noting in his book the results of his observations: The position of the body and the ax when found. The condition of the cache. The absence of the shovel with which the cache had been uncovered. It was while examining the claim stakes that he got his second shock. None of the McLeod claims had been worked. And yet McLeod had boasted of the richness of his claims—and he had showed gold. After that came other things—bits of corroborative evidence that set Kinkaid to biting nervously at his nether lip: The unmistakable fact that McLeod's Number 1 stake had been recently reset and that its top had been battered by the very ax that had killed Holt—the imprints of the irregular head of the old ax plainly stamped upon the battered wood; the fact that at the water's edge, where a canoe had been pulled up, was a footprint in the mud, and it was a footprint that could have been made only by a huge man like McLeod. There was a bare chance that a smaller man could have worn the boot of a larger, but there had been no rain for weeks, and the track in the mud was plain. It had evidently been made at the very edge of the water, and the river, receding in the drought, had left the track exposed to the sun, which had baked the mud hard and preserved perfectly the imprint of the sole. It was a patched sole. Kinkaid knew that he would instantly recognize it, but he took no chance with memory. After carefully measuring and noting each minute detail, he brought a shovel from the cabin, removed the track without breaking it, and packed it for further reference when it would be safe from man and the elements. Even in the face of the evidence, Kinkaid refused to believe Holt's slayer was guilty. "The ax will tell the tale," he muttered as he glanced shortingly down the holes. "There are finger prints there—and finger prints don't lie!" Whereupon, with infinite pains he protected the holes against rubbing and wrapped it in many folds of blankets.

The cabin came in for further minute scrutiny, but it revealed nothing of importance, except that the clothing Holt had taken off when he went to bed that fatal night was nowhere to be found. Holt, like McLeod, was a big man. His clothing would fit neither House nor Martineau.

The sun had sunk behind the ridge before Kinkaid finished his examination, even to the finger printing of the dead man. In the long twilight he buried John Holt back of the cabin, ate his supper, and crept between his blankets—but not to sleep. One by one, he checked over his bits of evidence, vainly seeking some slight clew that would point toward either Martineau or House, but try as he would he could find none.

House's claim had evidently been abandoned in the fall, and had not been visited since the snow went off. Martineau had evidently not staked a claim, but a shaft of the fall before showed that he had prospected below Discovery. But this shaft, like House's, had not been visited this spring.

CHAPTER XIII

THE following afternoon Felix Martineau expressed well-feigned surprise when he opened his door to Kinkaid's peremptory knock. As a matter of fact, he had been watching for half an hour through his glass as the other approached down the broad reach of the Churchill.

"Oh-ho, it's you, is it? I remember you said you were coming back. Hunting for House, eh? I believe it was House you said."

"Maybe it's House—maybe not," interrupted Kinkaid shortly. "Can I come in?"

The man stepped aside with a show of mock deference. "But why not? I always welcome visitors here. Especially a man of the so efficient police. But I did not expect to see you arrive from up river."

Kinkaid's eyes were upon the other's face. "I've been up to Holt's," he said abruptly.

"Holt? And how's Holt? I suppose he and Angus McLeod are throwing out gold by the shovelful. They'll probably work Angus's claims under some sort of partnership. I bought Holt's claim. Told him not to tell McLeod until the first of July—that's Mary's birthday, and I want to surprise her. After that she won't put me off any longer."

"You bought Holt's claim! When?"

"In March, I believe it was. Here's the bill of sale—yes, March fifteenth."

Kinkaid took the paper and read it through; then he handed it back. "Where's McLeod?" he asked.

"Wasn't he at Holt's? It was two weeks or more ago I stopped in at McLeod's and the half-wit told me that Angus had gone up to Holt's to dig gold."

"Holt's dead."

"Dead!" If the surprise Martineau registered was not genuine, Kinkaid admitted to himself that the man was a marvelous actor.

"Yes, dead—murdered."

"Murdered! You don't mean murdered!"

"I mean just that. Murdered with an ax and thrown down his own shaft."

"And you didn't see McLeod?"

"McLeod was not there. No one was there. No one had been there, apparently, for several weeks—two, at least."

"Good Lord!" cried Martineau. "This will kill Mary!"

"Where has McLeod been getting his liquor?"

Martineau shrugged. "How should I know? Not from me. I have no liquor here. If you care to, you are at liberty to search."

"I don't need your permission for that, Martineau. But I'm not hunting for liquor now. I suppose you have no objection to furnishing me your finger prints?"

Instantly, Martineau's black eyes narrowed as he glared into the face of the officer. Then the swarthy lips smiled, and with a nonchalant shrug he glanced at his hands. "I suppose you do not need my permission for that either. You could arrest me, as a witness if necessary, till you could get a proper warrant. No, I do not object. Why should I? Surely you do not suspect me of killing John Holt?"

"You have rather small feet, haven't you, Martineau?" asked Kinkaid, apparently irrelevantly, as he prepared a paper for the finger prints. "The only tracks I could find around Holt's were the tracks of a large man. You have no objection to my measuring the sole of your shoe?"

"Oh, none whatever. Nor the rim of my hat. Nor the seat of my trousers, if it will afford you pleasure or amusement. Really, for a very young policeman, you are most thorough. If you like, I can give you the history of my life."

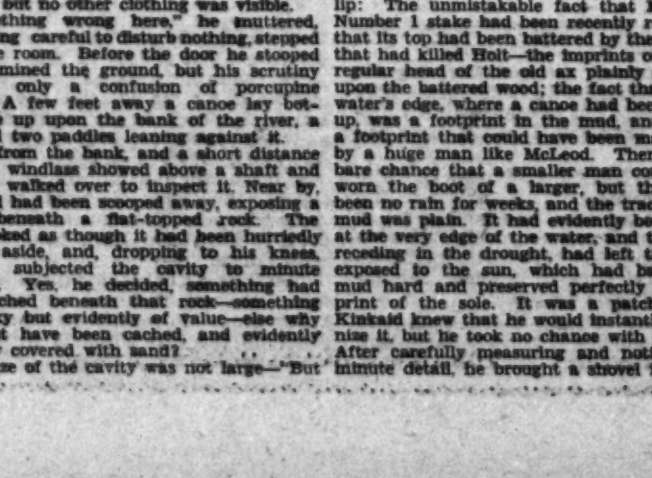
"Never mind that, Martineau. I can dig that out for myself if I want it."

"What do you mean?" The words flashed quickly, involuntarily, from the man's lips, and Kinkaid realized that a random shot had struck home.

"I mean that I don't like to accept favors, even little ones, from a man I might sometime have to gather in for hooch running."

"Hooch running! Ha, ha! That is a good one! Surely, it is refreshing to discover a sense of humor in one so serious. But I suppose you will have scant time for liquor violators until after you have run this murderer to earth."

"That's right," agreed Kinkaid, slipping the paper containing the finger prints into his pocket.



She: Gracious, isn't that man speeding terribly?
He: Yes—he's trying to get that latest model home before it becomes obsolete.

SECOND MARRIAGE

LIFE With Stephen Was Sheer Monotony, but Marriage With Whitney Warner Was a Strange and Baffling Adventure

THE long legal envelope held the damning reason why the man Warner would not be able to make himself attractive to Connie any longer. George Holton, who had been her adoring uncle and guardian for twenty-five years, put it back on his desk with a long sigh of relief. Silly of him to be worried in the first place, of course. But now that Connie had divorced Stephen Page and was so enchantingly happy, George would be—well, he'd be boiled in oil before he would let anything, the merest shadow, cloud her radiance.

Any one but George Holton would not have seen anything to be noticed about this man Warner, among the tennis players and dancing men and yachtsmen and visiting celebrities of the Florida season, and yet with that enormous sensitivity where Connie was concerned he had been uneasy about him from the first.

Warner had been brought to the house by some one who had met him in Havana, some friend of the family who was impressed.

What had sent George off in a flurry of apprehension, wiring to his New York lawyer to look up this man Whitney Warner from the sugar machinery people he mentioned having been connected with in the West Indies, was just a glimpse he had had of Connie dancing with him.

George had come upon them in a shadowy corner of a ballroom unexpectedly. The man's face had a dark, defiant look, as if this moment were all he had left out of hell.

But it was perfectly plain now what that look meant on Warner's face. George got up from his desk slowly and went out to the veranda. He wished a little that it was Stephen Page and not he who had to handle this thing. Stephen was so unmoved, always. It was why George had thought it was a good thing that Connie married him. But, of course, it was also why Connie had divorced him. She said he had begun to take naps after dinner.

For an hour or two, and through dinner, which, by some miracle, he and Connie had by themselves, he thought he could keep that letter locked in his desk and not say anything about it to her. Perhaps he could just drop a word to Warner himself, just a hint. Yet after dinner he found himself blurting out the fact that he had had Whitney Warner investigated.

It was a good thing he had, he insisted. Sherman had written him a very curious thing about Warner which she ought to know.

"Then I think he ought to be told it," Connie said suddenly. "He ought to be here when you tell me. It wouldn't be very sporting not to give him a chance to explain, would it?"

"I suppose not," George said, secretly considerably disturbed.

He was a little dazed at the swiftness with which she arranged things after that. Whitney Warner had been coming to take her to a dance somewhere. Presently they were all three in the little room George called his office, with the dark paneling and the desk light, and he was staring across his desk at Connie, erect in the armchair. Warner sat on the lounge by the wall.

"I'm—sorry that I have to do this, Mr. Warner," George began. "Connie asked me to have you here if I was going to tell her anything. And, of course, that was the only decent thing to do. Perhaps I should explain that owing to the—the frequency of your presence here, I took the liberty of inquiring about you, through our lawyer in New York, from the company you mentioned having been employed by. They said that you were no longer with them.

"I did not press the matter further, thinking that possibly I was mistaken in its importance. But it seems that Sherman, the family lawyer, impressed by something or other, some tone or inflection, from his informant, went on looking the thing up. Awfully thorough sort of chap.

"He wrote to this one and that one in New York and to Havana and around, and one day a man telephoned he was sending a negro up to his office who had quite a story for him. Said this negro had been employed in a sugar mill in some little place in Cuba. Also, that he was absolutely reliable as a witness. He was quite willing, Sherman writes me, to put the thing on oath.

"Well, Sherman had the man up. Put him under oath, even. And had this stenographic report made of the man's story.

"The story is just this," George burst out suddenly. "You—Mr. Warner, had been sent down from Havana to this place about four years ago, this Santiago de something or other, to see about something that had gone wrong with the machinery at the mill, which you had once sold them.

"There was a white man, the superintendent of the mill, with whom you had had a little trouble. Nothing much, some little irritation or difference. From the account, he must have been a high tempered, domineering sort of person who didn't altogether like the idea that you had been sent down to see about something which he should have been able to handle himself.

"This man, the negro, who was telling the story, said they were all certain that you had no words with the man, but that he would have been glad to have had words with you. They all felt you were the one who tried to avoid trouble."

George stopped and shifted in his chair and went on again, with an effort. "A sugar mill such as this one must have been is a huge place, Connie.

"The whole mill is a hollow maze of belting and huge grinding rollers, and the belting climbs between, climbs up or slants down with men crawling up and down about them on high spidery ladders.

"Well, whatever the trouble was in the machinery, it was high up, near the roof. You, Mr. Warner, and this angry man, the superintendent, had to climb up to see about it. You had to climb the spidery ladders that went up beside the long lifting and descending planes of the cane carriers, past the roaring swift rollers that were everywhere drawing the cane into their ridged steel.

"At the top on a sort of narrow iron platform you, Mr. Warner, and this man stopped and began to argue again. At least, he was arguing. The Negro who was telling the story could see you both quite plainly because he was working on a place even higher up. He could look down and see you both. You stood there and you took your hat off and wiped your forehead. And the other man argued with you.

"Evidently he was growing angrier, but you were only irritated. He seized your elbow and you jerked it away from him out of his hand. He lifted his hand as if to strike with an abrupt and passionate gesture. And then, for some reason, with which you plainly had nothing to do, his foot slipped. It was one of those sudden happenings which no one can foresee. The platform was narrow. There was only a loose rope guard about it. And he fell over, sprawling, and down on to a long carrier belt, among the slimy shredded cane that was moving only a few feet further down into the clutching swiftness of two huge rollers.

"The negro, this watching man, said that it happened swiftly, and yet with precision, like a picture unrolling. The man was on his back with his mouth fearfully open and his hands clutching emptily. And you stood, looking down at him, and let him go.

"It was not that there was anything certain that you could have done without risk to yourself. By throwing yourself flat on the platform and reaching down you might have clutched his foot. There was a rope, the guard rope, that if you had worked quickly enough, you might have thrown. At the same time, it is very clear that you might have been pulled down there yourself. He might have jerked you down and neither of you been saved. Whatever you might have done was not without danger of death, or of maiming, to yourself.

"You stood there without making a motion and let the man go down screaming into the rollers. And the rollers took him. They stopped the machinery as soon as they could, but he was dead.

"This man, this negro, says that the only motion he noticed about you was that the side of your mouth jerked and jerked for as long as he looked.

"I—that's the story, I think. The whole thing, as far as we know, was an accident. But an accident in which either through shock or—or fear, you did nothing. You might have saved him. Or you might not. But you did nothing. I—you see, that's how it is, Connie."

Connie put both hands together in a sudden gesture that was like wringing them, like the ghost of a gesture an actress might have made to express distraction, or even terror. But then she moved lightly to her feet, turning to the motionless man against the wall. George, following her eyes and seeing on the white, twisted face all he needed to know of the truth, heard with a shock her light ironic laughter. It was ironic.

"That's interesting past history, isn't it, Whitney? Lots of time and effort spent digging it up, if true."

Warner suddenly stood up with one convulsive motion. His hands were thrust carelessly in the pockets of his dinner coat.

But he was speaking, very slowly, as if he would not allow himself even a slurred syllable. "I must—beg your pardon—from my heart for having allowed myself to—intrude here. I—there is no explanation I have to offer. I understand now—that one does not—make heaven real by ignoring—the other place. Any—any amends I can make to—to your niece, I will—"

Connie drifted over to him and touched his shoulder, a flicked light gesture. Her laughter was curiously light in that stillness. She smiled back at George. "Then perhaps it's as good a time as any for telling them, isn't it, Whitney? You see, George, darling, I thought it would be so exciting. Whitney and I were married the day before yesterday."

George Holton waited three years for the letter which he had always felt must come. He was in New York, at office and department, of Florida, or at the old place in the Vermont hills, where he had always gone for the shooting.

When months lengthened, as they often did, between the letters, George grew restless and bad tempered, finding Vermont or Florida or New York suddenly very tiresome. He was sure to remark to himself, or to some of his oldest cronies at the club, or to his chauffeur even, that of course Constance had that money of her own.

On Christmas and on her birthdays, George always sent her a fat check, with the explanation that it was simpler so, because he did not know what she might happen to want. And three times his letters had come back from some place where no forwarding address was known. Later Constance would write casually that she had forgotten to send back for her mail.

This was the letter he had been waiting for all this time, and it was unlik any other she had ever written.

"George, darling," she began abruptly "you'll have to come down here and ge me. St. Kitts, near the Virgin Island There are several steamer lines. Whit ney is supposed to be the island repre sentative of one of them. I didn't thin I'd ever do this. There is a man who annoying me dreadfully, and Whitney no use. He is using drugs.

So that you happened to be coming down he to see the islands I could go the rest the trip with you and not come bac You'll come right away, won't yo please? This man here frightens m

"Don't tell me anything, child. Let's just forget everything except that you're going with me. Now, do you want me to see your—your husband?"

"I think you should, dear, for just a minute, if I can wake him. You know, I've made up my mind to go. Nothing can stop me now. But it does feel awfully like cowardice."

"You said that before," he burst out. "And yet, these three years, my God, it's too much—it's—"

"Never mind, dear. I suppose in a way they've been awfully educational. You will see now how I've learned to appreciate things; you, for instance, and quietness, and oh—being safe. Oh, just to live in clean houses, and not be hounded, hounded—"

"Connie—Connie—my little girl," George groaned. "For God's sake, don't cry now. It's all over now, honey. I should never have let you go away in the first place."

"What else was there for you to do? It was really more my fault than his that we got married that way. The first marriage was such a bore I was hungry for romance. And it was romantic at first, awfully. And I was proud and angry with you for finding out—that thing. How do you know, you or anybody wouldn't have done as he did? Why do men make such a fuss about courage in men and not in women? I've stood with my flesh crawling at those rollers in a sugar mill since. I wouldn't have risked a finger myself to have saved anyone. So I couldn't possibly not go away with him. Don't you see? Besides, I loved him. He caught my imagination by the throat. I did love him.

"Love is so queer," she went on. "He loved me, too. Only his was a dark, bitter sort of love, because it knows, even while it possesses, that it must also lose. It frightened me sometimes, but it tied us together.

"At first it did seem wildly romantic, the queer hunted life we had was so different from anything I had ever known. It was as if we were outcasts, clinging the more closely to each other. It made what we did have seem heightened and amazing and breathless. After awhile it changed. The romance was blown out. It was only miserable and—and dingy."

"Let's get out of here," he said roughly. She went on speaking as if she had not heard him at all. "He had a good position in New York at first. I thought, if I thought at all, that he would soon be able to make you see how wrong you were. But there was something working in him, like a taint. As if he knew better than anyone how much deeper the thing was with him. As if he knew more about himself than we had even guessed.

"He began to think that everyone knew it about him, that you had written and told people. That was when we went to Buenos Aires. But he lost that place. He thought the manager thought he was yellow. After that it was as if something was tearing at his throat. We went anywhere he could get work.

"I wrote you from some of the places. Rio and Paramaribe and La Guayra and Cristobal and Jamaica. Other places, too. Then the Barbados, and here. He was lucky to get this place here. We'd been—kicked out of a hotel with no money. I begged the Barbados manager to give the place to him. That is how I met—that man. His name is Raymond Silva. He comes here, sometimes, on his trips about the islands. Half-Portuguese and half-English. He makes me sick to look at him.

"He comes here and sits at that table and waits for me to come down those stairs. The backs of his hands are hairy and he's enormous. But his arms are the worst. They're so long. When he sits down they hang almost to the ground. He's been—he wants me to go away with him. I began to be afraid I couldn't keep him from touching me, much longer. I—

"Whitney started taking drugs in Panama. At least, that was the first time I saw him. It seemed to me he had given up the last shred of a struggle with himself. But I thought perhaps it would be better in Barbados. But it wasn't. And I saw then what men meant by hating cowardice. Perhaps I wouldn't have thought of leaving except for that. It showed me even more than this—this other man did that there isn't anything else when a man's given up so completely. How was there anything left for me to—care for—when he's given up himself?"

"Thank God, that's over, then," George said shortly. "Let's get started."

"There, darling," she said. "I didn't mean to get started on all that. I might have known you would hate it. But it's all over now. You won't ever have to hear it again. I'll run up and get my hat and my toothbrush and see if Whitney is still sleeping."

But Connie had not moved more than a step or two higher up the steep stairs. He looked at her, standing there motionless, looking off up the beach that was so much like a wide sandy street.

"What's the matter?" he said.

The lemon-colored mulatto craned his neck.

"De policeman say Mr. Raymond Silva been foun' dead up in de mangrove swamp."

"Dead," said Connie, startled. "Why, how could he be dead? He was here only last night. I talked to him myself."

George got to his feet and marched to the foot of the stairs. "For God's sake, honey, do hurry!"

"I'm going, truly. But do find out more about Silva from some one. Naturally, I'm curious. Ask the policeman. Or, look. There's the Police Commissioner. His name is Jenkins. That white man coming down the beach now. Do ask him. I think it's so queer."

George stared uncertainly at the young man passing, rather soldierly, very British.

"I beg pardon, sir. My name is Holton. I'm an American. I understand you are the Police Commissioner." The other glanced at him and stopped. "Do I understand your people have found a man dead, a man by the name of—ah—Silva?"

"Quite right, sir," the other said. "Found dead in the swamp this morning. Quite dead. By violence. It may be suicide. In fact, it rather looks like suicide."

George hardly noticed that the young man had gone. Why didn't Connie hurry?

Then, as he looked up from his watch again, he saw that the man who had been sleeping with his arms on the table in the shadow within the place, was getting up slowly and coming out into the sunlight. It was Whitney Warner.

He stood presently with his eyes fixed on George's face and looked down at him, ignoring the people passing and the voices beyond, tinged with excitement. His voice leaped out at Geor... like a blow.

"Why didn't you come before? Why have you waited all this time to come and get her? Haven't you—haven't you cared about her any more, to leave her like this—in this sort of life—from one dirty hole to another?"

The words jerked from George Holton's lips, in spite of himself. "By gad, sir!" he burst out. "Of all the colossal gall—if I had only dared to hope—"

"But you're taking her, now? You're not going to leave her, now? You won't let anything she might say stop you?"

"You mean you won't object to your wife's leaving with me, to go home?"

"What objection could I have?" Warner said, after a pause, turning his eyes slowly in George's general direction. "You know what I—am. I haven't been able to make her exactly happy. You ought to be satisfied that everything has come out as you would wish. It's what you expected, isn't it?"

"I can't say I'm surprised," George said.

"And you can't say you're sorry. Well, that's all right. Connie's been mighty plucky."

To George's inexpressible relief Warner turned to go off down the beach, without a glance up those stairs down which any minute now Connie would come.

the wharf and he had climbed up the ladder, he went directly to the neat English bank, to which the ship's captain had directed him. He changed some money and asked the direction from a neat, gray little man, very British, and went out from the cool shadowy interior into the quivering brightness of the street, behind the boy with whom the bank clerk sent him.

They were out on the beach front again under wooden galleries and shop fronts which looked out on the soft calm water rippling along the sand, where boats were drawn up and dogs and a few ragged negro children poked about.

His boy stopped at a shop with no front wall, a sort of cafe, painted a blistered blue and opened widely to the cobbles, where under the wooden gallery of the second floor a few warped tables and chairs were set. Within, behind a counter with bottles, a lemon-colored youth drowsed and flies whined.

Two white men in untidy linen suits threw dice at a table within the shadow, and over a table another sagged and slept. An outside wooden staircase, where on one step a dusky black chicken sat and cheeped, went straight up to the gallery above. Down which a woman who was not Constance moved lightly, and then was Connie with a suddenness that was terrible to him, since he had not braced himself for her or for this haggard woman she had become.

"Darling, darling," she murmured, kissing him, with her hands in their old gesture on his coat collar. "Darling, darling—I knew it would be you, when I saw the ship was in."

It was Connie, haggard. His lovely little girl, looking worn and drawn. His exquisite Connie. And yet it was she.

"Let's sit down here, shall we?" she said. "There's some things perhaps we ought to say before I take you upstairs. Whitney's door has been closed all morning. He may be—like that—for awhile yet."

"Honey girl," George said to her huskily, "why did you wait so long?"

"You darling," she said, brushing the back of his hand with her fingers. "I've been a coward not to come away by myself. But somehow—I had to have you here."

He pulled himself up brusquely. "I've got your passage," he said. "This ship will sail in an hour, and we'll be on it. It'll be going south for awhile. But we can pick up a fast boat north from Barbados. New York in a week. Doesn't that sound good to you?"

"An hour? That's—that's soon, isn't it? But I suppose it won't take me long to pack. There isn't much. But I want to tell you—"

SECOND MARRIAGE

By MARJORY STONEMAN DOUGLAS

"IN THE midst of life..."

Ernest Torrence as Uncle Pio (left), and Gordon Thorpe as the child, Jaime, killed in the collapse of the bridge.

Lily Damita is cast in the vivid and tempestuous role of Camilla. In the picture version she is a dancer and singer instead of an actress.

The brothers—Manuel and Esteban—are portrayed by Don Alvarado (right) and Duncan Renaldo, a newcomer. Emily Fitzroy is the Marquesa.

The girl, Pepita, is played by Raquel Torres (left), and the Abbess by Eugenie Besserer.

"IN THE midst of life we are in death." Perhaps no quotation more aptly fits the theme of "The Bridge of San Luis Rey," most famous of the past year's best sellers. This remarkable novel of Peruvian setting, which essayed a metaphysical inquiry into the opportuneness of five deaths in the catastrophe of a falling bridge, is being brought to the screen by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, as one of the most unusual undertakings of the film year. Will the spirit of Thornton Wilder's book be retained? Doubtless the many who have read it will wonder. There is no question but that a marked interest will center on the choice of interpreters for the characters, which are herewith pictorially presented in their various roles.

Jane Winton is the daughter of the Marquesa, and Paul Ellis is her suitor, and subsequently her husband.

WHAT A CHRISTMAS!

Three parties make a full day, even for Stella the star-gazer.

By GRACE KINGSLEY

HOLLYWOOD parties are always merry, and how they do get merrier at Christmas time without, to put it vulgarly, doing something. I don't know; I suppose, I'm sure we are going to have an awfully good time at Constance Talmadge Tryon's, Fritzi Ridgway's and Ray Cannon's," declared Stella, her blue eyes sparkling. "We were having tea together the day before Christmas, when we were looking forward to the evening festivities.

"We went with Price Dunlavey, the musician, and dined at Fritzi Ridgway's, tinkling glasses harmoniously with herself and her musician husband, Constantine Bakaleinikoff, who conducts the orchestra at the Criterion—and a few of their musician guests, who included Hugo Riesenfeld, Mr. and Mrs. Nat Finston, that lovely Nita Naldi, Lillian Hall, a very beautiful young pianist named Marie Blanchard, who is far on her way to becoming a concert pianist, and Alma Hunter.

"I'm away out of my depth with all those clever musicians," whispered Stella to Price Dunlavey. "Please help me out!"

So Price obligingly started a heavy discussion about Lizst, and even went as far back as Bach, so that everybody got so excited as to the relative greatness of musicians and their methods and compositions that Stella was left in peace to flirt a bit with her eyes when any of the men looked at her, and to consume her excellent dinner.

MISS PERGAIN was languidly lovely, and didn't bother to go into the discussions at all, which made her wonderful piano performance later all the more effective. She was in pictures once on a time, but had a scar on her forehead which halted her success. She had an operation performed, so that now it barely shows. But in the meantime, having studied music all her life, she became very much in earnest about it, and so decided to give up pictures for music.

OUR most delightful Fritzi had heroically arisen from a sick bed to preside at the party, and, except that she was pale, nobody ever would have known she was ill at all.

"Christmas can't sneak up on me and leave me without my greeting it!" she exclaimed like the thoroughbred she is.

EVERYBODY talked music, but nobody performed except Miss Pergain, Nita Martan and Price Dunlavey. The other musicians got so excited over their arguments—which, however, were good-natured—that they forgot to play.

"And actions speak louder than words!" remarked Stella, as we listened to Price playing a lovely composition of Kreisler's.

Nita sang a delightfully funny travesty of a coliente Spanish love song, addressing herself to Riesenfeld, who arose gallantly to the occasion, leaving off his musical arguments long enough to respond amusingly.

"Oh, dear," sighed Stella, "we've got to leave this perfectly adorable place."

"Yes, but remember where we're going! We'll have no end of fun at Glenn Tryon's, too!" I reminded her.

WE SET off for Glenn's house, up in the lovely canyon part of Beverly Drive, where we were greeted by that beautiful Mrs. Tryon and by Glenn himself. Almost the first person we met was our old friend, May Boley, who hailed us between bites of a new sort of hors-d'oeuvres which she had discovered on the tray, and for which she was enthusiastically writing down the recipe.

"Too bad somebody doesn't have an hors-d'oeuvres feast sometime, with nothing else," she said. "You know perfectly well anybody would be content to browse in a field made up of these dainty hunger-cures. I think I'll do it myself."

"When?" we all demanded. But May wouldn't specify, much to our disappointment.

MAY had come with Mr. and Mrs. Richard Carle, and Carle soon became the life of the party.

Or rather, as Glenn put it, "one of the lives of the party. A Hollywood party, like a cat, has at least nine lives."

Georgie Grandee was there, and played the piano and sang some of his amusing songs; Fan Bourke and William Wickersham danced a very funny burlesque tango, and other guests included Mr. and Mrs. Lucien Littlefield, Garrett Graham, Ronald Diltz, a very handsome newcomer in pictures and an adorable dancer, Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Whitlock, Mr. and Mrs. Randolph Bartlett, and others.

There were dancing and supper and other gaieties, and then we took our departure for the home of Raymond Cannon, director.

RAY and his wife, Fanchon Royer, live right on top of a wind-swept hill in San Fernando Valley, and its huge living-room was alight with a big fire in the fireplace and a Christmas tree.

The children had, of course, been put to bed, but after the cordial greeting of our hosts and following introductions, we got to talking about the children, and Fanchon told us how somebody had said to Royer, the elder of the two youngsters: "I suppose you raise many animals on your ranch," to which he had replied with dignity, "We raise one dog!"

WE FOUND that among the guests were a number of distinguished Mexican artists, including the gorgeously beautiful-voiced Alma Real, and her two musical sons, Alonzo and Herman Mendez, Frederick Antillon, and Mario Hernandez, a concert singer from Mexico; Count Berlanga, who is here, recently arrived from Spain for pictures; Jose Crespo, noted Spanish actor, who is interested in promoting a Spanish theatre to be located somewhere near the old Plaza in Los Angeles; Fritz Feld and Paul Ralli; Dell Smith, Helen Shannon, who sings on the radio; Ebba Angelus, of the vaudeville team of Angelus Sisters; Dr. and Mrs. Fred Blackinton; Edith Jennings, pianist, Mr. and Mrs. Wade Boteler, and a dozen others.

"I'm sure," Ebba Angelus whispered, after the handsome Jose Crespo, Paul Ralli and Fritz Feld had been gazing into her eyes and dancing with her for an hour, "that if ever I go to Spain or to Mexico, I shall never return!"

"Ah, but," Fanchon reminded her, "recollect that Paul Ralli is a Greek and Fritz Feld is German."

"Well, then, I think I'd better stay at home altogether!" retorted Ebba.

QUITE plainly, speaking of romance, Mario Hernandez and the sweet-voiced Miss Merritt, radio singer, were devoted to each other.

Miss Merritt sang most charmingly, following Alma Real, and Fritz Feld played the piano wonderfully.

"He plays entirely by ear," Ray Cannon informed us.

It appears, indeed, that the actor, whom everybody remembers, by the way, in "The Miracle," can play anything he hears.

Jose Crespo gave a reading from Rosetti with remarkable feeling, and after that, for a lighter touch, Frederick Antillon and Mario Hernandez danced a Mexican folk dance, which the Count sang some real Gypsy songs—those songs with a thrill in them—a strange, weird chant, almost impossible to memorize. Then there were some funny burlesque Apache and tango dances by Hernandez and Antillon, performed in costume, and Mike Tellegen did a burlesque Spanish dance.

It was all very charming, amusing and impromptu, and none of us remembered ever spending a more delightful three hours.

"If I ever spend a more merry Christmas than this one," remarked Stella, as we hied ourselves homeward, "I'm sure I couldn't bear it!"

Will you keep your vital charm or face bitter years without it?

LIFE, today, is crowded with opportunities for enjoyment. There is freedom in the air—music—the exhilaration of speed! Every moment is worth living.

Only . . . you must be able to stand the pace. If you have to conserve your energy, if your vitality is below par, days soon grow long and dreary—life becomes just endless routine.

Vital charm, the aliveness of glowing health, is the modern girl's most precious possession. You will see for yourself how unerringly the world is drawn to it and pays court to it. . . .

One of the greatest enemies of vitality and health is tooth decay and gum infection. For tooth decay may strike poisonously at your heart, your nerves, at the delicate membranes that cover your joints and whose injury brings crippling rheumatism. Dentists and physicians tell us that thousands age prematurely, or become virtual invalids through tooth decay and gum infection.

Protect yourself. Keep teeth sound and gums healthy by using a dentifrice which will not merely clean, but which will also neutralize the acids at The Danger Line which cause the trouble.

Squibb's Dental Cream contains more than 50 per cent of Squibb's Milk of Magnesia—long recognized as a safe, effective antacid. When you brush your teeth with Squibb's Dental Cream, tiny particles of Milk of Magnesia penetrate into all the places where your tooth-brush cannot reach. They neutralize the acids which are there at the time. And they remain for a considerable time giving protection after use.

Begin the use of Squibb's Dental Cream today and see your dentist twice a year. It will keep your teeth sound and white, your gums pink and healthy. Only 40 cents a large tube.

SQUIBB'S MILK OF MAGNESIA, is a pure, effective product that is free from any unpleasant, earthy taste. Its unsurpassed antacid qualities and mild laxative action make it truly valuable in helping to promote alimentation.

Where the crown of each tooth projects into the mouth, the extremities of the gums meet it in a thin, knife-like edge. That's The Danger Line—where the dangerous tooth decay and gum irritations often start.

The Marines Invade Manchuria

The Marines have landed again! This time with the weird wastes of the Manchurian potash fields, the Siberian Vladivostok and the Chinese Tien-Tsin for a background—and with a more or less tragic note displacing the broad comedy that generally goes hand in hand with productions of the Corps in foreign lands.

William Boyd is starred, Alan Hale and Robert Armstrong acting as his two "playmates" to complete the trio about whom the story is told.

The plot is a complicated affair, a bit reminiscent of "Beau Geste" in that a conclusion is offered first, an explanation following.

The marriage scene adheres closely to the ritual followed in a Russian wedding.

The plot of "The Leatherneck" is centered about the adventures of three buddies in the Marine Corps in the Orient, "Fuzzy," "Ted" and "Buddy," portrayed respectively by Alan Hale, William Boyd and Robert Armstrong.

Fred Kohler injects a villainous note into the character of the Chilean impostor, Heckla.

Diane Ellis appears in her first important screen role as Tanya, the Russian girl involved in the net of political intrigue.

The death of Buddy (Armstrong) in the rude Chinese river craft provides one of the production's most touching moments.

The pictorial value of the production is especially notable in the scenes depicting the potash fields of Manchuria.

Fat Comes at Fort

Fat Need Not Come
Science has found the reason why people grow fat. That reason is found in a defective gland. To some fat comes in early years, but to most after 40.
A certain gland, which largely controls nutrition, becomes weak. Then fat which should go into fuel and energy deposits itself in fat.
No starvation, no overwork, will rectify that condition. Both are bad. The right remedy is to strengthen the under-active gland. Physicians the world over now employ it.
That is the method employed in Marmola prescription tablets. They are based on scientific research on the cause of excess fat. A famous medical laboratory perfected them. People have used them for more than 20 years—millions of boxes of them. You can see the results in every circle—in new youth, new beauty, new health and vitality.
Do what your friends are doing. Correct the cause of excess fat. Don't starve, don't over-work. Take Marmola tablets, daily and watch the delightful results. You must remove the cause.
Do this, because this is the scientific way. Results you get without it don't last. Do it because medicine of this kind is all about you, have proved its merits. Do it now. Every day of delay means that your life is not being lived at its best.
Marmola prescription tablets are sold by all druggists at $1 per box. If your druggist is out, he will get them at once from his jobber.

The Pleasant Way to Reduce

What Chance has Septic Children?

IT may not be his fault that he is stupid in his classes. Septic children are all the more likely to be stupid. Septic children frequently have unpleasant breath as well. Septic children are backward in their studies.
Scoldings will not help. Punishment will not help.
The trouble is deep-seated. Infection makes millions of germs. They poison children as well as grownups. They cause sluggish movements daily—but all the more if accumulated. The matter that remains poisons the system, tainting the perspiration, the breath, sapping the energy and stupefying the mind. It is a pleasant condition! But constipation is signalling her need of a calcium wafer.
If you are a septic, you may not realize it. But you can solve the difficulty. Nor will any other treatment neutralize unpleasant breath, a sluggish body, or the breath for any length of time.
A few tiny calcium wafers work marvelous differences. Eyes brighten. Quickened interest in studies. Energetic, joyous play! And how the appetite improves! Skin healthily soft and clear! A normal, rosy-ened color that nothing will remove. Two days' use of calcium wafers will convince you for any septic.
Perhaps you are a septic and don't know it. This unpleasant condition is very common. Actually! A test of calcium wafers has convinced thousands of men and women that they were perfectly healthy! Try them.

THE BEST ROSES FOR CALIFORNIA GARDENS

By Jessy A. Armstrong

Every few months the writer amuses himself by selecting what he considers to be the twelve finest roses for California gardens. The varieties selected tend to change somewhat each time, due to the observation of new kinds and to continued good behavior or persistent faults of the older kinds. The latest selection is given below.

It is not expected that every rose lover will agree with this selection because, like all-American football teams and all-star theatrical casts, there is such a wide field to choose from, and personal prejudice and opinions have much to do with one person's views. However, here they are, and at least no one can say there is a poor one among them. They are not necessarily in order of preference.

Dame Edith Helen	(Bright Pink)
Rose Marie	(Rose Pink)
Mme. Butterfly	(Light Pink)
Los Angeles	(Flame Pink)
Etoile de Holland	(Deep Crimson)
Hoosier Beauty	(Deep Scarlet)
Miss C. E. Van Rossem	(Deep Scarlet)
Golden Emblem	(Golden Yellow)
Fou Joseph Looymans	(Apricot Yellow)
Lady Margaret Stewart	(Tawny Yellow)
Angele Pernet	(Orange)
Lulu	(Coral)

Six Marvelous New Roses

There are several roses of recent introduction which are so fine that they must be mentioned in any discussion of the best varieties, and any one of them could be placed in the first twelve named above without reducing the quality of the list. Some of them will no doubt be permanently ranked there as soon as they are observed a little longer.

Two of them are pink, fairly light in shade, Irish Charm and Mrs. Lovell Swisher. They both have exquisitely formed buds, which hold their shape well, and they have plenty of petals so that they do not open up too quickly. Irish Charm, an Irish product, has the more pronounced color of the two, while Mrs. Lovell Swisher (originated here in Los Angeles) probably produces the most flowers.

One of the most delicately beautiful roses that ever unfolded its petals is the new French variety, Mme. Albert Barbier. Its coloring consists of a lovely blend of flesh, salmon, orange and yellow, and both in bud and flower it has absolute perfection of form. No weak neck, either, but short, heavy, stocky stems.

Still another French rose, Aspirant Marcel Rouyer, has much the same general coloring, but with less orange and yellow. The buds are longer and it is remarkably fine for cutting. It may have a good French name, but it's a bit cumbersome in English.

Those Brilliant Yellows

With the advent of Claudius Pernet several years ago, we gained a new color in roses—clear bright canary or sunflower yellow. Since then, we have had others in the same shade, including Mabel Morse, Mary Pickford and Ville de Paris. All are good, but Ville de Paris, because it combines the remarkable color with tall, willowy stems, good, shiny foliage and a free-opening flower is perhaps the best.

A Chameleon From Germany

The sixth and last of the most promising group of new varieties is a German, Wilhelm Kordes. When you see him one day, he is coppery red with yellow shadings. The next bud may open brilliant pink, veined with crimson. Still again the flowers will contain a little of everything in the way of color. This faculty of changeable coloring certainly makes Wilhelm a striking and original rose, and one that will be admired in any garden.

Characterful Roses

Before closing this discussion of rose varieties, we cannot refrain from mentioning several other kinds which, by their nature, will never be classed among the first twelve, but which, nevertheless, will long be grown and loved by rose enthusiasts because of certain charming qualities.

One of these is Reims, a lovely flower of peculiar structure which opens out flat with imbricated petals and looks exactly like an exquisite salmon-orange camellia. The coloring is very delicate but rich, and it has a delicate fragrance also.

Then there is Barbara Robinson, producing dainty, well-shaped little flowers exactly the color of rich cream. The outer petals are beautifully waved and fluted, and while the buds must be placed in water before you so that their beauty can be appreciated, still this modest charm makes Barbara Robinson worth while.

We have had many attempts lately by rose hybridizers to produce a flower of yellow with the petals completely edged around with bright red. The latest and most successful result of their efforts is the rose, Norman Lambert. The flowers are rather flat, the petals are few, and the stems sometimes weak, but the bright yellow flowers look as if they had been dipped for a quarter of an inch in rich orange-scarlet paint. It cannot help but be startling.

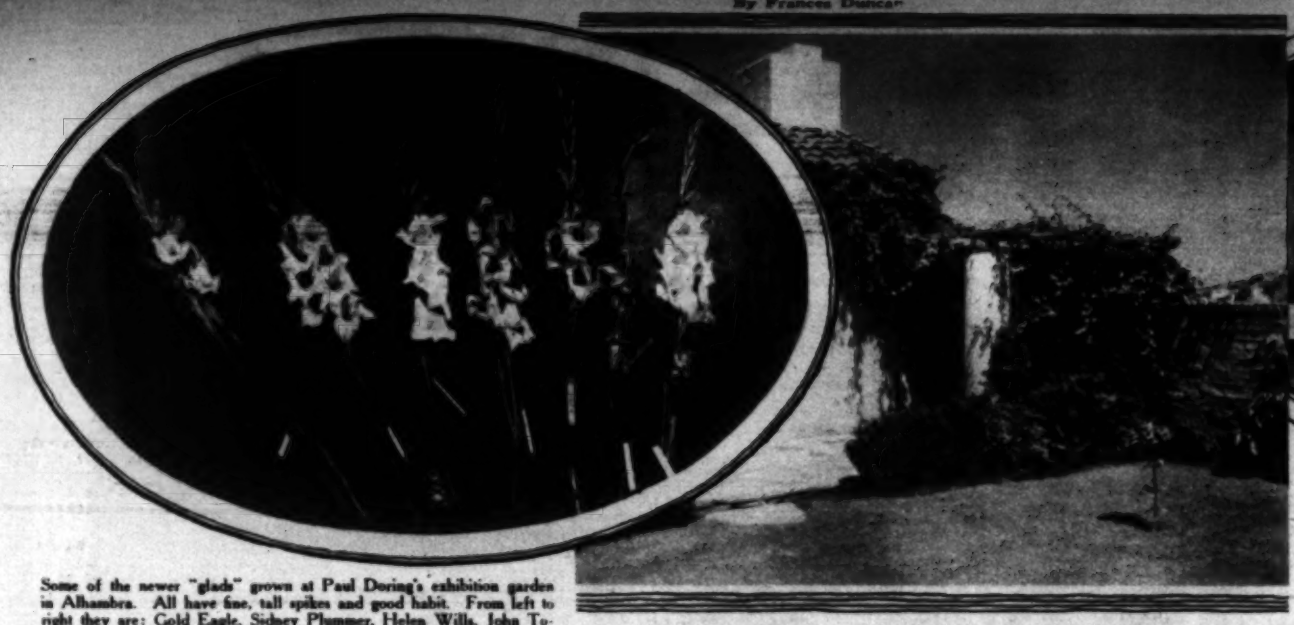
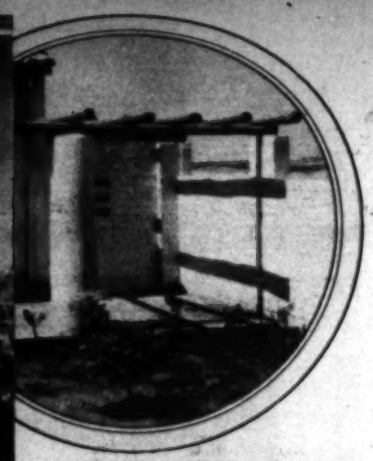
Put Design in Your Garden and It Becomes Effective

By Frances Duncan



Some of the newer "glads" grown at Paul Doring's exhibition garden in Alhambra. All have fine, tall spikes and good habit. From left to right they are: Gold Eagle, Sidney Plummer, Helen Wills, John Toland, Merced, Scarlet Bedder and Nancy Hanks.



When the Cedarholm planting had just been done. With or without a vine makes a deal of difference to a pergola.

But slight planting is needed to bring out the charm of the Cedarholm residence at Palos Verdes.

NOW that garden making is on in earnest, the matter of design claims attention. Design is to a garden as character to a person. A man may pay no attention to the formation of character, pursue his life in the most hit-or-miss fashion, just as he may plant at random in his garden and tend it not at all; none the less, an effect of some sort is achieved—whether of crazy-quilt incoherence or of classic serenity, the pattern's there.

Just as a well-arranged, well-planned, well-proportioned house has a certain charm when there may be very little in it, and that not expensive, while its more grandiose neighbor has rooms which tire one with a sense of their being cluttered and overstuffed, like the portly furniture, so with a garden. A small and simple one may be restful and wholly charming, and an elaborate one be very tiresome. Now is an excellent time to visit one's neighbor's garden and to note its excellencies and also, quite privately, its defects. One of the omissions which oftenest makes the amateur's garden design askew, is that of a suitable division, one from another, of the parts of his place which have wholly different uses. A kitchen in itself may be a delightful place, the stove may be the realization of a housewife's dream. Yet that same stove set in the living-room, even if tactfully concealed by a screen, would not be suitably placed; one would be uncomfortably aware of it. And, by the same token, the separation of the drying yard from the garden, whether by lattice, or trellis, or hedge, instantly gives to the garden a sense of restfulness and serenity. Just as does the wall which divides kitchen from living-room. A gateway leading from one to the other is no drawback, but rather an added attraction.

The same thing is true whether the alien part be grove, or orchard, or poultry yard, or kitchen garden. The barrier may be slight or solid—a concrete wall or a grape-trellis—so long as it makes a definite division, the garden becomes a thing apart, and the gardener's problem is immediately simpler. He doesn't have to include in his design so many dissimilar things. The orchard trees, seen over his latticed wall or his trellis, make a charming frame for his garden; the kitchen garden, seen through a gateway in a hedge, appears as an inviting, though somewhat different, country. The high fence of poultry wire behind which are the thrifty and purposeful White Leghorns, if covered with climbing roses, becomes a most poetic background for the garden's pale-blue larkspurs, yet it's as useful as if it were frankly bare.

When trees form the boundary, little other planting is necessary. A fine tree is so beautiful in itself that it needs no embellishing. Many a gardener distresses himself needlessly about what to plant under a tree, when he might better plant a comfortable garden bench from which he can survey the rest of the garden.

The Garden's Axis

Aside from the boundaries, the garden's axis needs to be considered. The garden's axis, if the garden is close to the house, is usually that of the house; that is, the garden is considered in relation to the house. The main door, from which one habitually enters or leaves the house, is a point to consider; so is the window from which one oftenest looks out. Suppose there is no front path, merely stepping-stones which lead to the side and before one a straight sweep of lawn; even then the appearance from this point should be considered, and a balanced planting will be more satisfying than one which doesn't consider the point from which one most frequently looks at his garden. It's pleasant, when one steps out of the kitchen door, to be charmed by a lovely vista. The drying yard may be moved enough to one side, perhaps, to give space for a row of irises. It's a great delight of a housewife to have something pretty to look at from the windows of the room she oftenest is in.

The thing is not stressed in women's magazines, but a charming outlook from a kitchen window ranks high among the things that make life endurable, while a dull, uninteresting outlook is depressing—terribly depressing. Hollyhocks looking in at the window, roses that one can watch unfold in the intervals of making up the children's school lunches, add quite definitely to the gaiety of life.

Now the Time to Change

If shrubs are where you think they don't belong, now is the time to move them to a better position. California plants seem to move almost with the practised ease of New York apartment dwellers. If slight shade from the sun can be managed and water be given where the heavens are chary of the commodity, it would seem that anything may be moved. Cutting back, of course, helps them to recover.

Pruning Time

Now is the time for the winter pruning. The shrubs that, back East, are cut early in the spring, in California, are cut back during the winter. Weak and straggling growths should be cut out. The symmetry of the plant should be considered, and in cutting in, shortening the branches, the last "eye" left on the remaining branch should be an outward one, that the plant's growth may be out, not in, since growth always starts from the last eye. Dead wood should be cut from the climing roses. If it has not already been done, bush roses should be cut back. The rule is that plants which blossom on the growth made the previous year, should be let alone until after blossoming. After blossoming is the time to prune these. Those shrubs which, like roses, bloom on growth just made, should be pruned early in the winter to stimulate the growth of new, blooming shoots.

Plant Gladioli

Gladiolus fans are already planting their beloved bulbs. And wise folk plant them at intervals until June, thus assuring a succession. The varieties are legion, but among those which are always seen at the shows in fine form are Mrs. Leon Douglas, E. J. Shaylor, Virginia, Herada, Purple Glory, Rose Ash, Baron Jos. Hulot, Prince of Wales, Halley, Golden Measure, Evelyn Kirtland and the splendid Californian, Los Angeles. Gladioli thrive in any good garden soil, preferring it light and rather sandy; also they like open sunshine. Plant them three to five inches deep.

Some of the newer gladioli are especially charming. There is Coronado, which two years ago won the prize for the "best flower of the show." It is a very large flower, cream white, ruffled with a touch of royal purple at the throat. Merced is part primulinus, ruffled, and only partly hooded, the flowers of a brilliant orange color, paling to canary yellow in the throat. Helen Wills is palest yellow and would combine charmingly with violet or with pale rose varieties. The primulinus varieties, being of slender, graceful habit, blend in the garden with Watsonias and lilies better than the more heavily-built glads, and are especially rich in shades of orange and apricot to palest yellow, and in coral tints tinged with yellows.

In a Santa Ana garden. The latticework makes a division between garden and walnut grove, and when it and the pergola are covered with roses it will be charming. In the foreground standard roses surround the grass panel.

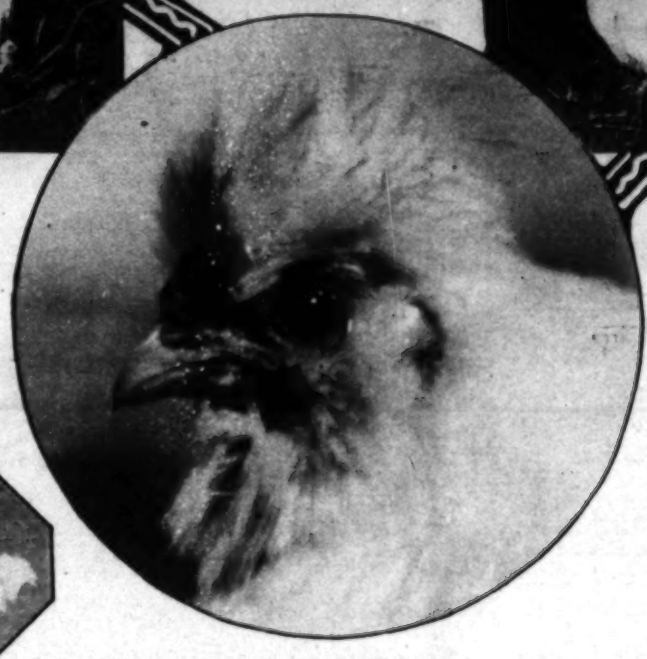
If You Like Hen-Hatched Chicks, How About the Silky?

(Illustrating Article by Claudius B. Custis)

The Silky mother is conscientious in the care of her young, and is widely used as foster-parent to valuable youngsters of the bird world. This one is caring for a mixed brood of Silkies and Barred Rocks.

Keep your distance! When larger hen mothers would turn and flee, the Silky puffs up, spreads her wings, utters a shrill war cry, and attacks. Many a luckless puppy can attest this fact.



Portrait study of a bearded lady. The Scholl flock includes not only the pulpie Silky type, but a variety which boasts besides the characteristic crest, a real beard. Note the preternaturally large eye of the little hen, whose baby stare, if nothing else, entitles her to a "close-up." The somewhat grim lines about the "corners of the mouth" are probably due to mothering fifteen babies.

If you want hen-hatched chicks, consider the Silky as "incubator and brooder." When this little fowl sets, "she stays set," and all the distractions in the world, including impertinent camera snappers, mean nothing much to her until she brings her brood off for its first walk-around.

H. E. Scholl, Midway City, whose Silkies adorn this page, demonstrates the comparative size of Silky and Barred Rock hens. What the little hen lacks in bulk, she makes up in capacity to spread, he says, for she will cover and hatch an unbelievable number of eggs.

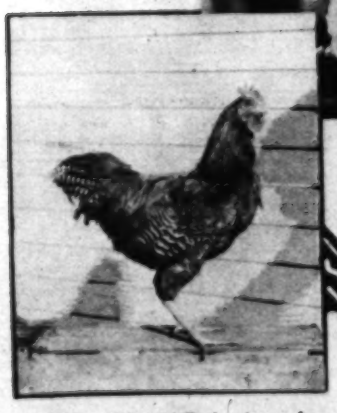
What's that?!! Silky mothers frequently "team up" in caring for their families. One may be scratching industriously for the hungry babies of the two groups, while the other hovers those little ones which have become chilled.

The Scholl flock of Silkies at Midway City. Silkies are infrequently seen in numbers. Mr. Scholl first raised them as a "hatching squad" for his Rocks, then became interested in them for their own sake.



This male Barred Rock, winner of a "blue" at the Arizona State Fair this season, never knew any mother but a devoted little Silky hen, who would have laid down her life, we warrant, to save the downy dark chick which became this fine bird.

Five toes, black flesh and skin, purple comb, "pompadour" crest, webless drooping feathers of silk-like texture, set the Silky apart as a real oddity in the poultry world.

Citrus and Irrigation Grew Up Together

And Now the Groves Are Being Summoned to Conserve Water Both for Their Own Good and Also to Help Out With All the Other Southland Crops

By Harold E. Wahlberg,
Farm Adviser, Orange County

CITRUS production is dependent upon irrigation in practically every section where that crop is grown in California. Without irrigation, the citrus industry would be almost an unknown quantity with us. The growth of the industry in California has been coincident with the development of water and the organization of irrigation districts in the thermal belts. As a matter of fact, the demand for citrus acreage has in many instances been responsible for the extensive and intensive development of irrigation water resources in the arid Southwest.

Desert areas have been converted into blossoming and golden fruit-bearing groves by directing the meager stream flows into life-giving ditches and canals and thence to the thirsty land. Where streams were insufficient to supply the required moisture throughout the growing season, the underground water strata were tapped with wells and power-driven pumps were put into action. In many areas, these sources of water had to be augmented by the conservation of run-off waters during the wet season. Check dams and storage dams were constructed to furnish a more even flow through the season and thus insure an adequate supply for either gravity flow or pumping from the underground reservoirs during the entire season of crop demands.

In many cases the first concern of the developer was to get water on the land. Little attention was given at first to the economic use of water in relation to tree growth, vigor and fruit production. Water was water and the more that could be secured for the land, the better. As the orchards matured and soil-management reactions became evident in the appearance and response of the trees under varying condition, more attention was given the possible relation of soil moisture to citrus production. The experiment station at Riverside is now making an intensive study of the duty of water for mature citrus trees in Orange county under the direction of Prof. S. H. Beckett. During the past decade the State Agricultural Extension Service has made thousands of soil borings in representative groves and on all soil types growing citrus, and it is apparent that in many districts, probably in most citrus districts, irrigation practice has to a greater or less degree exaggerated the actual moisture requirements of the crop. There has been a general tendency to cover the ground with water and plenty of it, with little regard to tree and root activities or requirements—if the orchard or a group of trees therein has taken on a yellow appearance for some unknown reason, more water has been applied, adding insult to injury, as it were.

Some are still clinging to the idea that by heavy application of water a veritable reservoir can be created beneath the orchard from which the root may draw sustenance from the capillary moisture. It is now definitely known that capillary movement of moisture is of such slight significance as to be of little value to agriculture, especially orchard crops.

NO EXACT OPTIMUM

Soil investigations have exploded the old theory of optimum moisture—that is, the idea of keeping the moisture content of the root zone at a constant or even tenure. The best tree growth and productive power are obtained, we find now, by allowing the moisture content of the root zone to fluctuate between irrigations from field capacity to almost the wilting point of the soil. This fluctuating condition, which actually demonstrates the rate of absorption, may be called the optimum moisture condition.

There is no advantage in applying water to wet soils. It is, on the contrary, a decided disadvantage and will eventually upset the normal soil processes, such as bacterial activity, nitrate availability and resultant root activity. More caution could well be taken by citrus growers generally in timing the first irrigation in the spring. Too often the water is rushed on the grove when the soil is still actually wet throughout the root zone from the spring and winter rains. It is the premature irrigation in the spring that oftentimes retards tree growth and holds yields down. One irrigation can often be saved by watching the moisture condition closely in the spring and applying water only when the soil auger or shovel reveals the reasonable exhaustion of moisture. Probably only a shallow application may be required to replenish a dry surface layer. There is much room for improved irrigation practice in all citrus districts.

ORANGE COUNTY SURVEY

The orchard efficiency studies now conducted by the agricultural extension service in Orange county are revealing some pertinent facts and information that should challenge the thought of the industries involved and the community at large. Among the many lessons brought out by an orange production cost study covering seventy-five representative orange groves in the county last season is the fact that the highest-producing groves applied less water than did the lowest-producing orchards The best groves averaged 360 packed boxes and applied 16.4 acre inches of water during the year. The low groves averaged 138 packed boxes per acre and applied 20.2 acre inches during the year.

The survey on citrus orchard practices completed by the citrus experiment station some time ago under the direction of Prof. R. S. Vaile, revealed substantially the same relationship between irrigation practice and yields per acre. The group of highest-yielding orchards used less than the average amount of water per acre. The highest group used 14 to 18 acre-inches, while the next group below, representing the average, used 18 to 22 acre-inches of water.

From both of these surveys it would appear that the use of 16 acre-inches was productive of the best yields and that the use of 20 acre-inches or more had a depressing effect on the field. In other words, the average grower, according to these economic studies, is using better than 4 acre-inches in excess of the amount that appears optimal. In many cases this is accounted for by the extra early application in the spring.

WASTE IS SHOWN

If the average grower, therefore, used an excess of four inches on every acre of mature groves (and there are 46,000 acres of bearing groves in Orange county,) the total excess of irrigation water used last year by the citrus industry alone in this county amounted to 184,000 acre-inches, or an equivalent to the irrigation requirements of 11,500 acres of good yielding citrus, based on a 16 acre-inch usage.

The value of this amount of water at the average cost for water in Orange county last season, $12.73 per acre, would: total $146,393. As 4 acre-inches represent at least an extra irrigation, requiring extra labor for laying up and an extra cultivation, it would seem reasonable to add this expense to the cost of water. The average cost of laying the ground up for one irrigation last year was $2.44 per acre, and a cultivation cost $2.90 per acre. For 46,000 acres, the extra handling of the land cost $245,640. The total cost of the surplus water and its attendant handling by the citrus industry is computed at a little less than $400,000.

FERTILIZER LOSS

From the standpoint of the community, we cannot say that the 184,000 acre-inches was entirely lost, because the percolation of the excess and waste waters into the subterranean water strata returns some of it for repeated use in the lower areas. However, from the standpoint of the individual grower, it is a matter of waste, not only in the extra cost of the water and labor of handling, but also in attendant depletion of fertility by leaching in the open soils or impaired root growth in the heavier soils.

The grower who applies more water than the trees actually use is not only paying in terms of water and labor costs, but to a greater extent in terms of reduced yields per acre.

This is a phase of our water-conservation program in the south which might well receive more serious recognition among the water users. It not only deals with the immediate question of water conservation, but is at once identified with the problem of the maintenance of soil fertility to the end that our agriculture may be made a permanent industry.

A group of wideawake citrus growers were getting first-hand information on overwatered roots when the upper picture was taken. The lower one shows 2-inch sheet-iron spreader pipes stored in the stand pipes to be out of the way but ready to supply the furrows with water any time.

The Up-to-Date Onion Grower Has to "Know his Seed Beds"

By Ross H. Gast

WHILE large scale farming characterizes agriculture in California, our growers have not lost sight of the fact that good tillage is still the determining factor in successful cropping. They have found that with machine farming they can secure that most important requisite, a good seed bed, commonly supposed to be available only through intensive cultural methods.

One of the most striking instances of the development of machine farming can be seen in Coachella Valley, when land is being prepared for Bermuda onions. Growers in this section are making good use of the iron horse and modern tillage implements in preparing for a crop that requires extremely fine soil preparation. They have found that experditure of time and money in initial preparation pays good dividends, a fact that should be more widely appreciated in agriculture today.

This irrigated desert valley situated below sea level in Riverside county has long been known as the locale of the American date industry. Because of the more spectacular nature of date culture, the Bermuda onion, which is the real "cash" crop of the valley, has not been given the credit that it deserves. It is true that in some years, like the past season, market conditions have been such that growers have not made a profit. But over a period of years, the average has been good.

Preparation for planting Bermuda onions starts about August when the lands are leveled up and irrigated by the flooding or furrow method. Following irrigation, the borders or furrows are disked in and the land is plowed as deeply as possible. The plows are followed by a disk and harrow, and then the lands are floated diagonally and left "to set" for about two weeks.

After that time has elapsed, the land is again disked and harrowed, then floated anew, the implements used in these operations being followed by a clod breaker and packer. The land is then ready for planting. Most growers scatter about 350 pounds of fertilizer, generally a 6-8-2 or 6-8-6 mixture, before the land is floated the second time.

In the meantime plant beds have been started. The seedlings are grown on double rows and the growers generally plant two pounds of seed for each acre of field planting that is to be done. Something like 149,000 onion plants are required to the acre under the most common method of planting in Coachella Valley. While most Bermuda onion seed is secured from domestic sources, some growers still buy from the Bermuda Islands.

COMES PLANTING TIME

When planting time approaches the head ditches are laid out, and the lands are furrowed out with a two-row cultivator. This is followed by a roller and marker outfit which forms the double row planting beds and marks to an absolute degree the place in which each plant is to be set. These plant beds are twenty-six inches across from the furrow centers, with the top of the bed about twelve inches across. The plants are set 4 1-2 inches apart in two rows six inches across on top of the ridge.

In some instances onions are planted in single rows which are spaced 16 to 18

Extension Schools

Six extension schools in citrus fruit and walnuts have been announced by Warren R. Schoonover, State college extension specialist. He and Prof. Robert W. Hodgson of the division of subtropical horticulture will conduct the schools, with assistance of farm advisers in the various counties, as follows: Walnuts, San Jose, January 29, 30 and 31; walnuts and citrus, Porterville, February 5 to 8; walnuts, Anaheim, February 12 to 15; walnuts, Riverside, February 20 and 21; walnuts and citrus, Pomona, February 25 to 28; citrus, Redlands, March 12 to 15.

Prices Favorable

As a general thing, growers having early winter vegetables this season have received favorable prices, according to a leading shipper. With few exceptions December prices were sufficient to make for a profitable deal during that period. The outstanding exception was cauliflower, which appears to have sold below cost of production. Peppers, beans, eggplant, and cucumbers were particularly high. This was partially due to the backward season and shortage of supplies in Florida and Southern Texas. The price of celery was good, due to the poor crop in New York State.

Milk Remains Sweet After Thirty Days

SAN DIEGO.—Raw milk produced and bottled so free from bacteria as to keep sweet for thirty days seems an item of note even in these days of sanitary dairying, but Rancho Lechuza, at San Ysidro in San Diego county reports just such an achievement. The milk was kept in a test made to satisfy a fancy of Frank B. Beyer, owner of the ranch and the pure-bred Guernsey herd thereon. Mr. G. Beyer, widely known for his liquor interests on the Mexican side of the international line, aspires to play a part in showing the way to pure milk production on this side and is carrying on a most interesting work at his ranch in the American portion of Tijuana Valley.

Jay Swinehart, experienced dairyman, was commissioned to produce the purest milk possible, and was encouraged to install the best of equipment on the place. He was urged to use every possible care in the way of sanitation, to secure healthy cows and keep them healthy and see what results he could attain. The test of the product came when all the rest had been done.

That the test milk, bottled raw without preservatives or pasteurization, remained sweet for thirty days is attested by several witnesses, including Felix Landis, manager of the San Diego Farm Bureau, who acted as "official taster." Mr. Swinehart is now making a longer test, having set aside more bottles of his product to begin opening at forty days. In the previous test, only one bottle had been kept the limit of thirty days.

The milk, it is stated, was maintained at 40 degrees temperature during the test period. It would not have remained sweet anywhere near thirty days if subjected to warmth, for, as Mr. Swinehart explains, it has not been possible to free milk absolutely from all bacteria that act to sour it. On the other hand, he says, no degree of refrigeration could save raw milk of high bacteria count even if foreign bacteria were excluded.

At Rancho Lechuza, the precaution against foreign bacteria or spoiling agencies entering the product includes vacuum cleaning of the herd before milking. The electrically operated cleaner is much like the household variety used for rugs and curtains. Electric clippers are used on udders and flanks, also, and milking machines are employed.

The handling equipment includes a large cooling vat, where the milk collection is cooled to 40 degrees in two and one-half minutes' time; a bottling machine, through which the product is quickly passed, and a refrigerating room, maintained at 40 degrees. There is also a bottle washer run by electricity and a steam sterilizing apparatus, where the day's supply of bottles in crates is stacked and subjected to steaming at 200 degrees.

Obviously, such milk as is produced could be distributed sweet for long distances, but none is likely to get outside of San Diego county, near-by consumers taking it as fast as it is available.

Silky Hen Favorite As Hatcher of Eggs

By Chandos B. Castle

Some people, not in poultry on a "mass production" basis, prefer hen-hatched chicks, and to these we respectfully offer the Silky as the professional mother of the chicken realm, justly famous for the determined and frequent way in which she sets, the solicitous manner in which she cares for her young, and the all-'round success with which she brings her chicks to maturity.

Because of her admitted virtues along this line, she is frequently used as an "incubator and brooder" by those who have valuable eggs to set, and she has acquitted herself nobly alike with turkey, chicken and pheasant eggs, to list only a few.

As to appearance, the Silky is "different." Usually white of plumage, its skin and flesh are black. The flesh is said to be of excellent quality if eaten with the eyes shut. The comb and wattles are dark purple, the eyes very large and black, the feathers for the most part webless and silky. There are five toes on each foot. The standard weights are nothing much, although the fowl is not properly classed as a bantam, but as a "miscellaneous." From this description one could gather that "miscellaneous" is an apt category.

The Silky hen lays a clutch of eggs, and sets. Once set, she is not to be "broken up," it is averred, but does a real earnest, industrious job of incubating her eggs. With her downy feathers she can cover a surprisingly large number of eggs. She's not one to break eggs, trample just-hatched chicks, or do any of the numerous inept things which stamp some of the larger hens as rank amateurs.

H. E. Scholl of Midway City is a Barred Plymouth Rock fancier who took up the Silky as foster-mothers for his Rock chicks, and then fell in love with the breed for its own sake. He has quite a flock, not only of the ordinary crested kind, but also of the bearded variety, which is even funnier looking, if such a thing be possible, than the nonbearded.

There are 15,576 co-operative societies in Czecho-Slovakia, of which 3617 are agricultural.

If "handsome is as handsome does," then Imperial Isabelle, first Jersey in this State to produce 1000 pounds of butter fat in a 365-day period, is the handsomest Jersey cow in California. Harry Cook of Ontario, her owner, stands at her head, while Roy Williams, her "valet," is posed back at the production end of this great animal.

Ontario Jersey Cow Beats State Record

ONTARIO.—Imperial Isabelle, owned by Harry Cook, Ontario dairyman, is the first Jersey cow in California that has ever produced 1000 pounds of butterfat in a 365-day period, according to figures recently disclosed by dairy associations that have been checking up on the cow's record. The amount of butterfat produced by Imperial Isabelle this year, it is understood, exceeds the highest record ever produced by any other Jersey cow of California, by 105 pounds. The record was formerly held by a University of California Jersey cow.

During the year just closed the Ontario cow produced 16,702 pounds of milk, and 1045.14 pounds of butterfat. The former record was 940 pounds of fat. Imperial Isabelle is due to freshen April 8. She was sired by Noble's Mayfair Hero, a grandson of a bull with national ranking for prepotency, type and production.

Chickens Oversold the Lordly "Turk"

PORTERVILLE.—It is estimated that over 7000 turkeys were shipped through the Porterville Poultry Association and independent buyers for the Christmas markets, New Year and Thanksgiving sales bringing up the total. Most of the shipments went to Los Angeles. Prices for Christmas hung around 25 cents per pound alive and 26 cents at New Year's. An unusual situation prevailed in that chickens ran from 2 to 4 cents higher than turkeys alive, prices for the oven being about the same. The exceptional crop of turkeys this season throughout the State was responsible.

Tulare county turkeys were never in better condition, F. J. White, rancher near Strathmore, received nearly $5000 in cash for his birds. They were purchased by Joe Sockel & Son of Porterville, who have shipped over 3000 birds to Los Angeles since Thanksgiving. R. J. Land, local turkey buyer, shipped 5000 Tulare county turkeys the week before Christmas, the birds averaging $3 apiece to the growers and bringing a total of $15,000 into the community. The local poultry association sold about 2000 turkeys for Christmas, but the New Year shipment ran only about 250.

"Won't Be Long Now"

course, at Westwood, justification for the expansion the Regents rather tentatively have discussed, will very soon be apparent.

That University at Westwood is going to be one of the greatest educational plants in the world and it isn't going to fall down on a phase of service that Southern California is so peculiarly fitted to offer. The university Regents themselves may not grasp the full significance of the work they are helping to make possible, perhaps do not, but there are thoughtful students of developments in this part of the Southwest who predict that the world will one day come to the great university at Los Angeles and the California Botanic Gardens to learn about a branch of the horticultural industry which has here been developed to its highest degree.

It Came to Pass

Redlands.—Orange growers of the Redlands and Highland district are rejoicing over the fine prices brought by the December pool navels. C. M. Brown, a leading independent shipper, predicted that southern navels would top the market in December this year and his prediction has been fulfilled.

Estimates Were High

Redlands.—J. A. Steward, sales manager for the Mutual Orange Distributors, says that early estimates of the 1928-29 orange crop were high. He believes that the total shipments for the State will not be over 65,000 cars. One reason is that the fruit is running to smaller sizes than it did two years ago. Other shippers are inclined to agree with Mr. Steward.

"Won't Be Long Now!"

THE recent announcement by President W. W. Campbell of the University of California that ten acres of the new site of the University of California at Los Angeles had been set aside by the Regents for the use of the division of subtropical horticulture of the college of agriculture has evoked so many inquiries relative to the plan and purpose of this move that Farm and Orchard has asked for and secured what might be called an official statement thereon. This statement, in the form of a letter from a department head of the university follows:

"The work of the division of subtropical horticulture has received critical consideration by the Regents of the University of California at various times during the past two years. By action of the Regents on February 14, 1928, it was decided to transfer the instruction work in subtropical horticulture from the citrus experiment station at Riverside to the campus of the University of California at Los Angeles, effective in the summer of 1929. At the time this action was taken it was believed that the new buildings at the Westwood site would be completed and available for occupancy by the first of January, 1929. It has now been decided, however, that the actual move to the Westwood site will not be made until the beginning of the fall semester in 1929. This, of course, means that the summer sessions course in subtropical horticulture will be given next July in the citrus experiment station, Riverside, as in past years. After this date, however, the work will be offered in the regular summer sessions of the University of California at Los Angeles.

"The decision was reached by the Regents that the work should be initiated as summer session instruction, but that if in the future demand for additional instruction developed, regular courses might be offered in one or both semesters of the regular course. It is, of course, impossible for anyone to state at the present time how many students will wish to take this work in the University of California at Los Angeles. The enrollment in the summer sessions course offered at Riverside has been small, not indicating as yet any great demand for actual instruction in this field.

"In anticipation of the initiation of instruction in subtropical horticulture in the University of California at Los Angeles, the Regents of the University of California on October 9, 1928, definitely set aside ten acres of land for the use of the division, to be developed to cover the actual teaching needs. The plans involve a certain amount of leveling, the establishment of a water supply and the planting of a selected lot of citrus trees and various subtropical species in other groups representing different varieties. It is realized that the division of subtropical horticulture will need other facilities on the ground and provision has been made in the budget for the coming biennium for sufficient funds to construct an adequate headhouse, propagation house and small greenhouse at the Westwood site for the use of the division. These structures will be built on the ground assigned to the division near the south end of the campus.

"During the time that the work will be offered as summer sessions courses use will be made of existing classrooms and laboratories in permanent buildings, presumably space assigned to the department of botany or one of the other biological sciences."

Taken in conjunction with the fact (not set forth by the writer) that there are now already growing at the Westwood site enough trees to plant the division's ten acres next spring, the above statement lends substance to the hope of Southern California that regular term work in subtropical horticulture will soon be a feature of the instruction offered at the University of California at Los Angeles. The very fact that the growing of the planting stock mentioned was quietly authorized many months ago and, without any publicity instituted, makes it seem likely that the university heads have anticipated just such a development. Farm and Orchard has all along believed the removal of the division of subtropical horticulture from Berkeley to the part of the State in which subtropical horticulture actually is carried on to be the obvious and sensible move and has predicted just what seems to be taking place. It believes, too, that once the thing is started, even as a summer sessions

Farm News
of the Great Southwest

UPLAND.—This is not the season for sales of citrus groves, ordinarily, but so remunerative have been the orange and lemon trees that an unusual demand has appeared. Six orchards have figured in deals recently, with a new record of more than $3750 an acre being set. Four of the groves are of ten acres each and the others of five-acre tracts. In three cases, men living in other cities have become the new owners.

Keep Fruit on Trees

Redlands.—There is less citrus fruit on the tracks at this time than last season despite the fact that the crop this year is larger. This is the report made by the shippers in advising the orange growers to pick a certain amount of their crop now and get it in the early pools. The fruit is of excellent quality at this time and the prices are good.

Want More Members

Orange.—The 1929 membership campaign of the Orange County Farm Bureau was launched recently at a meeting and dinner when more than 100 membership committee men and women joined forces to compare notes and set the drive in motion. The campaign this year is headed by John Ragan of Villa Park, vice-president of the farm bureau. A goal of 2000 members has been set for 1929. Last year saw 1248 members enrolled.

Fogs Check Picking

McFarland.—Both the Globe and the Anderson Clayton cotton gins at this place recently shut down temporarily on account of foggy weather, which makes picking impossible. The fogs had been holding on all through the days and the bolls were sodden with moisture. At least 85 per cent of the crop had been picked, but there was a great deal of cotton left well worth saving. Many growers had started the third picking, when the fogs began.

Made a New Record

Lindsay.—In volume of shipments and returns, the season just closed by the central California Citrus Association established a new record. All officers were reelected at a recent meeting. They are P. F. Hostetter, president; J. E. Pogue, vice-president; T. A. Pogue, treasurer, and A. S. Rider, secretary. H. B. McClure was named representative in the California Fruit Growers' Exchange, with Mr. Rider as substitute.

Tests Are Started

Hemet.—Under direction of the Riverside County Farm Bureau and the agricultural extension service of the University of California, test plots have been established in Hemet Valley to determine the possibilities of overcoming mottle leaf on orange trees. The tests have not yet been under way long enough to allow of any conclusion as to their success. Experiments with commercial fertilizers in apricot orchards will be made this winter and spring, and next fall nonleguminous cover crops will be tested out in both deciduous and citrus orchards.

Big Crop in Sight

El Centro.—Present indications are that the cantaloupe crop will cover one of the largest acreages ever planted in Imperial Valley. Unless some change is made in the original plans for plantings of the crop, this season will be one of the most extensive ever made and perhaps there will be a larger acreage than than ever before. At least this is the information contained in preliminary reports of the crop, a large part of which is already planted.

Good Hog Prices

Visalia.—Hog sales at the farm bureau auctions during the third week of December in the San Joaquin Valley brought good prices. A top price of $9.35 at Hanford on the 20th was the best of that week, though only 10 cents more than the price paid at Visalia the day before. Sales from December 14 to 20 brought a bit more than $27,000. The Fresno sale netted $5003.04. The one in Tulare on December 18 totaled $10,749.59; Visalia, December 19, $4656.36; Hanford, December 20, $6275.96.

Good Year Predicted

Tulare.—Despite the fact that 1928 was a "freak" year from practically all angles in the poultry industry in this section, indications point to a good year ahead. The volume of business for 1928 amounted to about $500,000, an increase of nearly $100,000 over 1927. The Tulare Co-operative Poultry Association, one of four local poultry institutions, alone reported a gain of $42,000 for the year. Heavy stocking of baby chicks, a movement to market of older stock in generous volume, and a nearly normal output with favorable prices are predicted for 1929.

Light Walnut Crop

Fullerton.—With the closing of the Fullerton-Placentia Walnut Growers' packing-house here recently, a crop of 380 tons had been handled and shipped. This represents about one-third of the tonnage handled last year, according to Arthur Staley, manager of the house. Last year's especially heavy crop weakened the trees for this year and heavy aphis infestation reduced the crop materially. Groves that were sprayed and dusted this year for aphis and moth control stood out as to quality of nuts, Mr. Staley said.

"Innocent Bystanders"

Lindsay.—A weed-killer and not Jack Frost's breath is responsible for curled leaves on orange trees at various points between Lindsay and Strathmore. Recently, as an experiment in weed control, the shoulders of the county highway between Strathmore and Lindsay were sprayed with a chemical, which, it is asserted will keep down the growth of weeds for several years. A westerly breeze blew a few wisps of the potent chemical onto trees along the east side of the road, curling a few leaves, though doing no real damage.

Good Dairying Year

Tulare.—Local dairymen received nearly $4,000,000 for milk and cream delivered during the year just closed, one of the best in history of the industry. November deliveries totaled $361,304.67. Exceptionally steady prices, slightly above the usual level, and a general increase in production combined to make 1928 one of the best years, with a total of $3,923,292.94. Institutions included in the report were the dairyman's Co-operative Creamery, Los Angeles Creamery, Powdered Milk Company, Tulare Creamery and Alfred Ice Cream Company at Tipton.

Help Combat "Fly"

Upland.—Nearly 6,000,000 individual lemons are being picked in Upland every week and lemon trees that an unusual demand combat the tide of influenza there, since hospitals use lemons in large quantities. The great call for the lemons from all over the country coincides with one of the heaviest picking periods for this time of the year ever experienced here. Two hundred and fifty pickers are taking in an average week about 5,850,000 lemons off the trees in the Upland area, estimates show.

Says Oil in Demand

Lindsay.—A weed-killer and not Jack York is in good shape, according to word brought back here by A. Rothenberg, proprietor of the Lucca Olive Oil plant north of Lindsay, following a trip he made to New York and other eastern points. Mr. Rothenberg says he contracted for the entire output of his plant, including oil and other olive products. He would have been able to dispose of more oil if he had had it in stock, he declares.

Quality Reigns at Poultry Exposition

Not the biggest winter poultry show ever held in Los Angeles, but one in which quality predominated. Such was the verdict of the old-timers who attended the Los Angeles County Midwinter Poultry Show, held at the Armory in Exposition Park, Los Angeles, January 5 to 8.

Contrary to expectations, neither the Australorps nor the Rhode Island Reds predominated in numbers, there being eighty-seven Barred Plymouth Rocks, eighty-four White Plymouth Rocks, eighty-three Australorps, and seventy-seven Reds. While the Reds were shy on numbers, to that breed went the highest honor of the show, the Farm and Orchard Magazine trophy for best bird in the show. A Red cockerel entered by Sly and Lyons of Los Angeles was the winner.

Cornish and White Leghorns were well represented by some fine specimens, the Leghorns in both the exhibition and record of production classes receiving many favorable comments. A White Leghorn cock entered by L. T. McLean was adjudged the best in the show. A White Rock pullet, property of O. R. Frederick, Altadena, was best female, and from a small but excellent showing of Black Minorcas came the best hen, entered by Sam Kingston, Los Angeles.

J. Will Blackman of Los Angeles won trophies for best turkey and best bantam in the show, with a Bronze and a Black Cochin, and White Leghorns won best pen in the show, being entered by W. P. Freeman of Hayward.

In connection with the poultry show there was a big pigeon show, sponsored by the Los Angeles Pigeon Club, the coops for these birds taking a large part of the huge floor space of the Armory, which proved to be a very satisfactory show room.

The rabbit show, held under the auspices of the San Fernando Valley Rabbit Breeders' Association, was declared by the judges to have been of remarkable excellence. A feature of the display was several imported Spotted English, entries of Granville Hall Yards, Los Angeles. The first doe was declared by Judges P. W. Gilbert and A. M. Stodel to be the best English they had ever seen, and probably the best ever shown in California. This same rabbit was a winner at the last London (Eng.) show, its owner reports.

Since the district meeting of the American King Club was held at the show, the While King pigeons were out in force and made a fine display. Other specialty clubs also took occasion to hold their meetings.

An interesting display of beautiful aviary birds completed the exhibition.

As an indication of the general excellence of the Los Angeles shows, O. L. McCord of Peoria, Ill., one of the three judges, and a veteran of the local shows, declared that for quality, the coast is "right up amongst 'em," and always stages expositions worthy of the highest praise. "Such a show as this," Judge McCord said, "needs a lot of preparation. A year ahead is not too far to lay your plans, and start things moving."

E. J. Hammond of Riverside was the manager of the successful Exposition Park event.

Stony Wash Turned Into Poultry Farm

By Frances Duncan

CLAREMONT.—Four years from a stony wash to a trim, attractive house as good looking and up-to-date a poultry plant as one could see in the whole stretch of highway, is the record of Mr. and Mrs. S. C. Berkley of Cucamonga Avenue, in this district.

A New England farmer of the old type would be scandalised at the way Mr. Berkley saves labor and steps for himself and his wife. It would seem that every practical labor-saving device already on the market, and some that are especially devised, make a part of his equipment. There are cement walks to every part of the plant. An overhead carrier is run into every poultry house, taking in feed and removing waste, which is thus quickly and conveniently rolled along to be dumped in the fertilizer pit—and this pit is located with an eye to convenience also. An unloading platform in front of the feed building is in fact two heavy doors which open, like cellar doors, exposing the fertilizer pit. Thus Mr. Berkley's truck may deliver grain, and without moving from its position, when the grain is disposed of, take on a load of fertilizer. And so closely do the doors fit that there is no odor from it whatever—no chance for a fly to reach it.

Fourteen hundred Leghorns the Berkleys now have, and, according to Mr. Berkley, six hours a day is quite labor enough to keep the plant in proper condition.

"I'm not young," he says," and six hours a day is quite work enough for an old fellow of 60."

Like many expert poultry ranchers, the Berkleys "began small" with a little flock of hens in a San Diego backyard. Finding themselves successful, they moved to Baldwin Park. There Mr. Berkley had a larger ranch than the acre-and-a-half that contents him now, and a much larger flock than his present 1800 hens—about 4000.

"It was too big," he said," and we had to hire labor to clean the houses and that sort of thing. This plant Mrs. Berkley and I can take care of easily; we shall have room for 2500 birds and that's all. We grow all our green feed—alfalfa and barley and kale, and that helps the profits."

The Berkleys' new brooder house, which is just being completed, is modern in every particular. The ventilation is excellent, and devices are arranged so that fresh air is there for the chicks—and without draft, even when all the side windows are shut. Air enters from underneath through what looks like a narrow screen-topped box some three feet high. The windows also are in sections, a narrow upper section giving a small high opening for colder weather.

Baby chicks on the Berkley ranch are taught to roost when but ten days old. A swinging heater is placed at roosting time over the small roosts so that they are warm, and the chicks have no objection to trying them and do not huddle together. Mr. Berkley has the theory that this promotes development. Mr. Berkley thinks it important that the little chicks be not only only warm, but that they have dry feet always. Therefore, under the automatic drinking fountains is a cesspool with stone and gravel on top so that any waste or spilled water drains off immediately and no chick on the Berkley ranch need stand for a moment in a puddle. A weight device controls the supply of water. When the trough is full, its weight stops the stream of water.

The home is as well equipped with labor-saving devices as in the plant, which is probably one reason why the feminine partner looks so serene and happy and rosy.

Mrs. E. A. Weaver of Pasadena has reduced her Rhode Island Red flock to only a few birds, having sold most of them to Edward S. Band of Arcadia. Mrs. Weaver has been wintering in Arizona, and is undecided as to whether she will remain in the poultry business.

Poultry Field Notes

By C. B. Castle

The "PCA," or Poultrymen's Co-Operative Milling Association, issued a calendar this year which includes pictures of a good hen and a poor one, helpful hints to housewives, first aid facts, sample family budgets, small calendars of 1929 and 1930, memorandum pad, pencil, culling advice, and what-not, all quite useful to the busy poultryman and his family.

The Dryden Poultry Breeding Farm, Modesto, reports its fifth shipment of birds to Colombia, in South America. The government experimental farms in the southern republic are the purchasers. The trip is quite a long one, the birds being en route for from four to five weeks. This is because they must go "all around Robin Hood's barn," that is, through the Panama Canal, to Baranquilla, Atlantic port of Colombia, thence by river boat to Medellin, the destination.

The Federer Brahma Farm at Owensmouth is installing two more mammoth incubators, and with the added capacity, expects to put through more than 100,000 eggs each month. Mr. Federer, who specializes on Brahmas, says he is also contemplating carrying about 2000 breeding birds at his plant, in addition to the flocks, totalling about 18,000 birds, in which he is at present interested.

W. C. Harrington, chairman of the San Bernardino County Farm Bureau's poultry department, has been named an inspector whose duty it will be to inspect eggs offered for sale in markets of the county. Surprise tests will determine the quality of the product, it is stated.

The report for the third month at the Chaffey trapnest station contest at Ontario shows the A. E. Richards pen ahead, with 616 eggs. This pen also contains high hen to date and for the month, with seventy-nine for the period of the contest and 29 for December. Two pens entered by J. F. Konold are first and second for the month, with 232 and 224 eggs respectively.

Starving Trees Rob the Fruit Grower

In most Southland soils, citrus growers and others find it necessary to regularly apply nitrogenous fertilizers to maintain the vigor of their trees. Nitrogen is the fourth element in importance in the trees' food supply, coming after carbon, hydrogen and oxygen. Without it, trees cannot grow, and the fruit they bear is small and of poor quality.

Nitrogen is the element which gives the dark green color to the leaves of trees, and when the leaves are pale green or yellow, it is a sure sign that the trees are starving for nitrogen. Nitrogen is the element which makes trees grow, and when trees are not growing they are not bearing fruit.

Nitrogen is the element which makes fruit large and juicy, and when fruit is small and dry it is a sure sign that the trees are starving for nitrogen.

Nitrogen is the element which makes fruit sweet, and when fruit is sour it is a sure sign that the trees are starving for nitrogen.

Nitrogen is the element which makes fruit bright and clear, and when fruit is dull and muddy it is a sure sign that the trees are starving for nitrogen.

Nitrogen is the element which makes fruit thick-skinned, and when fruit is thin-skinned it is a sure sign that the trees are starving for nitrogen.

Nitrogen is the element which makes fruit tough, and when fruit is tender it is a sure sign that the trees are starving for nitrogen.

Nitrogen is the element which makes fruit keep, and when fruit rots it is a sure sign that the trees are starving for nitrogen.

Nitrogen is the element which makes fruit ship well, and when fruit bruises it is a sure sign that the trees are starving for nitrogen.

Nitrogen is the element which makes fruit bring high prices, and when fruit brings low prices it is a sure sign that the trees are starving for nitrogen.

Nitrogen is the element which makes fruit bring profits, and when fruit brings losses it is a sure sign that the trees are starving for nitrogen.

Nitrogen is the element which makes fruit bring happiness, and when fruit brings misery it is a sure sign that the trees are starving for nitrogen.

Nitrogen is the element which makes fruit bring success, and when fruit brings failure it is a sure sign that the trees are starving for nitrogen.

Nitrogen is the element which makes fruit bring wealth, and when fruit brings poverty it is a sure sign that the trees are starving for nitrogen.

Nitrogen is the element which makes fruit bring prosperity, and when fruit brings adversity it is a sure sign that the trees are starving for nitrogen.

Nitrogen is the element which makes fruit bring joy, and when fruit brings sorrow it is a sure sign that the trees are starving for nitrogen.

Nitrogen is the element which makes fruit bring peace, and when fruit brings war it is a sure sign that the trees are starving for nitrogen.

Nitrogen is the element which makes fruit bring love, and when fruit brings hate it is a sure sign that the trees are starving for nitrogen.

Nitrogen is the element which makes fruit bring life, and when fruit brings death it is a sure sign that the trees are starving for nitrogen.

Nitrogen is the element which makes fruit bring everything, and when fruit brings nothing it is a sure sign that the trees are starving for nitrogen.

Nitrogen is the element which makes fruit bring all things, and when fruit brings none it is a sure sign that the trees are starving for nitrogen.

Nitrogen is the element which makes fruit bring the world, and when fruit brings the universe it is a sure sign that the trees are starving for nitrogen.

Nitrogen is the element which makes fruit bring the stars, and when fruit brings the moon it is a sure sign that the trees are starving for nitrogen.

Nitrogen is the element which makes fruit bring the sun, and when fruit brings the earth it is a sure sign that the trees are starving for nitrogen.

Find New Beetle to Fight Codling Moth

EL MONTE.—One of the latest biological control problems in the war on codling moth is clearly being solved by Mexican entomologists, according to Dan Daniels, manager of Tanner—Tulare county produces three times as much cotton per acre as the average in the United States and over one-third more than the average in California

The Southland Garden

and Small Farm Home

By Ross H. Cast

Comes a long letter from a Southland gardener, telling of trials and tribulations in an attempt to grow good head lettuce. The "dern stuff grows and grows," he says, but does not tarry long enough to head. But well down toward the end of this tearful appeal for assistance I found the answer. He does not thin! In other words, he sows seed thickly in the row, so that the plants stand about six to the inch, and then expects nice, firm heads. We can perform marvels in the Southland garden, but this is expecting too much.

Lettuce is a cool season crop and should not be planted before September 1 or after April 1 in Southern California, or at least in the Los Angeles basin. It is true that certain summer varieties, such as the real Iceburg, which forms a fairly solid head, and the Black Seeded Simpson, a non-heading sort, are planted during the warmer months, but go in the Southland considerer the Los Angeles Market or New York the only variety for planting during the winter months.

Prepare the soil carefully for lettuce, and assure an ample supply of moisture in the soil by flooding the plot thoroughly before it is spaded, even in the winter. Make up double rows for planting to that the rows on the bed will be about twelve inches apart and cover the seed about an eighth of an inch deep. Do not disturb the surface of the seed row until the seedlings are up, that is, not unless a hard crust forms after a rain. If the soil moisture can not be maintained until the seedlings appear, one may irrigate in the furrows, but never sprinkle.

When the plants are about two inches high they are to be thinned out to at least twelve inches apart in the row. The thinlings may be used as transplants, to fill in where poor germination was experienced. But in transplanting, cut back the leaves about a quarter to a half. Root cutting is not practiced with lettuce plants.

Thinning head lettuce. To insure heading one should thin lettuce out to at least twelve inches apart in the row.

Keep lettuce moving along rapidly, and little trouble will be experienced in getting it to head.

THOSE SEED CATALOGUES

The real harbinger of spring, the seed catalogue, will soon be with us. In fact, one of the best local purveyors of embryonic vegetable life has already sent out a fine catalogue, and I have begun my regular spring reading. One can learn a great deal in studying the catalogues of the seed houses, for the local ones at least are a real gold mine for cultural information.

Each year, many new vegetables are listed in the various catalogues. Most of these have been thoroughly tested by the firms which place them before the public, and in nearly every case they represent something that is worth trying.

But one should not confine his plantings to any of the newer offerings—they should be tried in a limited way first to see if they fit one's particular situation. These new varieties may work out better than the older sorts grown in past years. Yet, to be on the safe side, stick to the old favorites until the new ones have proven themselves.

In making out a list from a seed catalogue for a mail order, always give a brief bit of information about your soil situation and other pertinent facts. It will usually mean better service from the seed company. Some of the seed companies also have little circulars on the growing of the various vegetables that are with the exception of the "Southland Garden," the best sort of reference.

ONION PLANTING TIME

Those who like to produce their blood purifiers in their own garden should make ready for planting late in January or early in February. One can sow the seed at that time without danger of having the plant shoot to seed.

Plant onions on double rows, and in making these up space the furrows only about twenty-seven inches apart, center to center. This will result in narrower beds, and the rows on them can be planted about ten inches apart.

Sow the seed an eighth to a quarter of an inch deep and rather thick in the row, for the plants can be thinned out when they are a few inches high for salads. Some gardeners plant such varieties as Southport White Globe, equally desirable as a green or dry onion, then, when the seedlings are about an inch high, they thin them out to stand an inch apart in the row. Later, when the plants have reached a height of about six or eight inches, three out of every four plants in the row are taken out for green onions, and the remainder left for drying.

Other good onions for the home garden, are the Riverside Sweet Spanish, which must be spaced about six inches apart, and the Italian Red, which is a red, elongated sort grown quite extensively around San Francisco Bay. Neither of these varieties are especially good keepers.

THE WATER SUPPLY

In planting the spring garden one should not overlook the source of water supply. Too often, we select a plot that is not convenient to the hose, and all during the spring and summer, our garden work is hampered. A sufficient length of garden hose will help a great deal, but irrigation can be speeded up if the plot is adjacent to the faucet, for it will not be necessary to handle so much hose.

Riverside—Citrus shipments from the district for the holiday week, December 16 to 22, reached the total of 190 carloads of oranges and five cars of lemons. Shipments at the end of that week had totaled for the season 499 carloads of citrus fruit, as against a total of 181 carloads at the same date last season.

PROSPER in CANADA

The rich farm lands of Canada offer you now a golden opportunity. Millions of acres await settlement. Land is reasonably priced—much of it $15 to $25 an acre, in well-settled communities, close to railways. Free Government homesteads are available further back. Taxes and freight rates are low. Grain yeilds are high and the quality is the world's finest. Opportunities await the settler in all branches of agriculture—grain growing, dairying, mixed farming, fruit growing. Markets are well established. Co-operative as well as competitive marketing assures the farmer the full value of his products.

Now is the Time

Get in on the ground floor, in a big, new country offering countless opportunities for success. The reasonable price of land permits sons of farmers to start out for themselves and quickly increase their assets, frequently in the same locality. Canada welcomes you to share in her farming opportunities. Grasp the opportunity now.

Get the Facts

Write for the free book which tells you all about farm opportunities in Canada. It answers the points in which you will be interested—the amount of capital required, how to get settled quickly, land costs, living conditions, average yields of principal crops, etc.

Starving Trees Rob the Fruit Grower

In most Southland soils, citrus growers and others find it necessary to regularly apply fertilizer in order to maintain fertility for the production of profitable crops. Through experimentation and surveys, it has been found that for mature citrus it is necessary to apply fertilizers providing from two to three pounds of nitrogen per tree per year. The amount varies according to soil and weather conditions.

These statements were recently made by M. H. Rounds, Farm Adviser for Los Angeles county. The amount of nitrogen, suggested, he added, should not all be applied in the form of commercial or chemical fertilizers, it being advisable that about half should be applied as bulky organic manures or straws. Nitrogenous fertilizers, known mostly as concentrates, are usually applied in the late winter or early spring so that they will become available during the spring, as that is the time when fruit trees require more available nitrogen than at any other part of the year. Organic concentrates such as blood, tankage and fishmeal, says Mr. Rounds, can be used providing they are thoroughly turned under so that they will decompose and allow the nitrogen to become available. In using some of the chemical fertilizers such as nitrate of soda, nitrate of lime, sulphate of ammonia and others, they can be applied to the surface, whence the rains will take them into the soil. Growers are advised by Mr. Rounds to make plans immediately for their winter or spring application.

Better Fruit Would Win More Consumers

Editor Farm & Orchard Magazine:

In connection with the surplus grape crop and suggestions as to the creation of a greater demand not only for grapes but other deciduous fruits, may I point out one way in which the local consumption might be increased?

Two doctors, in different departments of The Times, have been urging people to eat more fruit and especially more fresh raw fruit, for their stomachs' sake, for several years. A host of other advisers as to health daily reiterate that advice in advertising and other ways. I am a convert to this dietetic doctrine. I have benefited by eating much more fruit and vegetables than I did in former days. But, it is with difficulty that I now obtain fruit fit to eat raw. I used to grow nearly all that I wanted, but am not able to do so at present. When I buy it, in Santa Monica at any rate—and I think the condition applies also in Los Angeles—I rarely can get even approximately fresh and, most rarely, ripe fruit.

For instance, I like pears. After two separate "quarter's worth" of good-looking, but hard and forbidding pears, I sent a specific order by telephone for a large supply of which I generally get a few specimens as high priced as any in the town. I requested pears if ripe—otherwise, I named a substitute. I got just the same that I had from the other two places—unripe fruit, with the pips perfectly white in two I cut open as the most promising samples. I left the others a few days and they simply rotted. At no time were they fit for food, much less as food for invalids and others on "a diet."

It seems a trade practice to give every purchaser a few bad ones at the bottom, also.

Berries I long ago abandoned buying; they were either unripe or rotten; so were most of the peaches and more than half the plums that I bought last season. One pays very high prices and the retailers evidently grab all the profit and will take no losses that they can avoid—for doubtless it is their fear of not selling promptly really ripe fruit that has made the growers supply it unripe. Grapes were cheap for a few weeks, but half of those I bought were unfit to eat because unripe. Of course, this is the real explanation of the fact that eastern people generally say that California fruit has no flavor. They have never tasted it ripe. If the growers would make some sort of a deal by which they could be in a position to absolutely refuse to pick unripe fruit, supplying double the quantity to allow for shrinkage by loss; and if the retailers were made by rigid and constant inspection to cull out all rotten or decaying fruit and sell nothing but ripe, I feel very certain that the consumption would be a great deal more than doubled as soon as enough people had tasted the real thing and knew the difference between what the city buyer now gets and what the people who grow their own can pick off their trees.

The transplant man "prunes" both tops and roots of the green onions before they are set out in the field.

It would not surprise me to know that many suffering people have suffered more after taking the doctors' advice to eat fruit meals than they did before, when they have eaten the unripe stuff that almost every retailer falsely assures them is ripe—whether they took it in its hard or subsequently soft (rotten) stage. And for one who knows what fruit is a few experiences of this sort of dealing are enough to make him swear off trying any more. In this way undoubtedly thousands of prospective fruitarians are spoiled as prospective customers for California growers.

Years ago, when I was executive secretary of a certain State-wide organization, I tried to bring about a reform in fruit catering, particularly seeking to induce the hotels to serve it plentifully, ripe and at reasonable prices. But the stewards frankly admitted that it was more troublesome to care for than more solid, ice-box food, and they obviously did not want to encourage its consumption. So year after year an enormous opportunity, to entice new customers for really fine and delicious fruit, is lost. Newcomers, finding fruit both high-priced and comparatively tasteless, reject it and scoff at California's claims.—Herbert W. Burdett, Santa Monica.

California cheese manufacturers will make approximately 18,000,000 pounds of cheese this year, and three times that much will be imported from other States.

Find New Beetle to Fight Codling Moth

EL MONTE—One of the latest biological control problems in the war on codling moth is slowly being solved by the El Monte and Mountain View Walnut Growers' Associations, under the direction of Forrest B. McLane, entomologist, who is propagating the cymatedera morosa, a species of the clerid, a predacious beetle. These beetles have been known to be predacious on codling moth larvae for several years, but this is, as far as is known, the first time they have been propagated under artificial conditions.

Mr. McLane carried on this work at the citrus experiment station, Riverside, for a short time; later a laboratory was built on the Fulmer property, El Monte, where the work has made rapid progress. Several thousand beetles have been raised and liberated on walnut trees. Results have been far better than had been expected.

When the beetles were first propagated they were housed in small cages and had a diet of Indian meal moth larvae. Since that time Mr. McLane has found several ways to increase production, and better methods of feeding. Tuber moth larvae are now being used for food, and collecting this food is all done by mechanical contrivances. Food for the adult clerid beetles will be tuber moth eggs, these also to be collected automatically.

"Know his Seed Beds"

inches apart. The plants are set 4 1-2 inches apart under this system. There are growers who use the three-row sytem, but the double row is most popular. The single row is used in hard ground where it is difficult to secure good penetration of water across a wider bed.

The plants are taken from the plant beds and placed in lug boxes after both the tops and roots have been cut back. A good plant is about six inches long and about one-eighth of an inch in diameter at its largest part. The best plants are always selected, for it has been found that they influence yield and quality to a great degree.

Large crews of Mexican laborers are brought into Coachella Valley during the planting time, for Mexican labor is the only kind that can be successfully used in this type of work. The cost of planting onions runs around $25 an acre, with the planter receiving a certain amount per row for his work. Generally fields are divided into 640-foot rows, but with head ditches taken out, these rows net 625 feet. When the rows are placed 26 inches apart, there will be thirty-two to the acre and this year the prevailing price was 70 cents a row.

Immediately after the plants are set, the fields are irrigated thoroughly to establish the planting. Effort is made to secure penetration clear across the bed and when this is accomplished water is held off until the plants take root. Thereafter the plants are irrigated about every three weeks. Drainage at the furrow ends is always carefully looked after, for water must not be allowed to stand in the rows.

After the first three irrigations, cultivation is begun and generally the first application of fertilizer is made at this time if it was not applied while the land was in process of preparation. The second application of fertilizer is made when the plants are about medium size.

The first cultivation is with a cultivator which consists of an eight-foot board set with spikes. Cultivation is made diagonally just after the third irrigation to break up the clods and get the small weeds. This is followed by a hand cultivator with a small shovel which breaks up the crusts between rows. Subsequent cultivation is with a harrow-toothed cultivator, generally a 14-toothed tool—a one-row outfit.

WEEDING IS COSTLY

Weeding is quite an expensive job, but must be done. For this work Mexican laborers are again necessary. These laborers use a small hoe with a triangular-shaped blade two inches across and with an eight-inch handle. Generally it takes three weedings to keep the beds clean. The cost of weeding varies anywhere from $10 to $15, according to the field.

Good growers in Coachella Valley have figured that it generally costs from 75 to 90 cents a crate to produce onions and place them at the car door, on a basis of a yield of 400 to 450 crates to the acre. The average in the valley is around 300 crates and the average cost of production is therefore somewhat higher, around $1 a crate.

In Coachella Valley the Bermuda onion crop has met the same difficulty as other crops in the country in recent years—an increasing competition from imported onions, for with production costs so high, they deal. Naturally, the growers in this section are interested in an increased tariff on onions, for with production costs so high, they cannot compete with the imported product.

This season has seen quite a decrease in acreage of Bermuda onions as compared with the past few seasons in Coachella Valley. In 1928, this district had 2100 acres; in 1927, 3300 acres; in 1926, 3200 acres, and this year the first estimates are for 2400 acres.

Bermudas are grown only in two other States—Texas and Louisiana, Texas leading in production. The Bureau of Agricultural Economics reports a considerable decrease in the planting of Bermudas in all sections of the country. Preliminary estimates place the national total at 20,830, acres, as against 23,260 in 1926.

High Cotton Average

Tulare.—Tulare county produces three times as much cotton per acre as the average in the United States and over one-third more than the average in California, according to Dan Daniels, manager of Tagus ranch cotton gin near here. Mr. Daniels produced figures to bear out his statement. He said the average yield in this county of over 515 pounds per acre in 1926 was probably the highest average for the same area that the world has ever known.

A Big Undertaking

Upland.—Pruning 9000 orange trees all on one ranch has been the steady job of Stacy Haines and C. E. Spies for fifteen months in the grove of A. Towne of Claremont. In September, 1927, the two men faced a great mass of live and dead wood. With every tree trimmed in accordance with the latest methods of citrus culture, the grove bids fair to be outstanding in the citrus belt.

Big Prizes Offered in Valencia Class

SAN BERNARDINO.—That a total of fifty-one classes of premiums with three prizes to the class—in cash or trophy cups—will be awarded to fruit exhibitors during the Nineteenth National Orange Show at San Bernardino, February 14 to 24, is disclosed by the official premium list, just issued.

Oranges embrace twenty-two classes with cash prizes ranging from $300—the grand sweepstakes—down to $5 cash prizes and certificates. The division includes the new class of "6 1-3A," Grand Sweepstakes for Valencias. An innovation at the National Orange Show, where heretofore awards in oranges have been confined to navels, this class will carry a first prize of $300 cash, a second prize of $100, and third award of $100. Awards will be made for the best forty boxes of Valencias.

There are to be nine classes in the lemon division. The grand sweepstakes will carry a top prize of $200 cash, a trophy, and a certificate.

The by-products department this year, housed as last year in the newly finished permanent annex building connecting with the main show structure, will be bigger and more important than ever before, the premium list discloses. There are nine by-product classes. Plate or table displays will include Washington navels, Malta blooda, ruby bloods, Valencias, sweets, tangerines, St. Mikes, Navelencias, Thompson Improved, seedlings, lemons and grapefruit.

The feature exhibits this year, according to General Manager Roy H. Mack, will be more beautiful and elaborate than ever before. Also, from present indications, there will be more of them. At least a score are assured for the gigantic citrus exposition, it is forecast. There will be six classes of three awards each, all awards carrying cash premiums as well as certificates, and the sweepstakes topped by a $500 cash prize, trophy and certificate. The sweepstakes, as usual, will be awarded to the best feature display with mechanical action, the delight of the newsreel cameramen, and originality, artistic beauty, quality of fruit and uniqueness will mark the score card points.

As the time nears for the opening of the 1929 show, the utmost enthusiasm over the prospective success of the exposition obtains among officials of the National Orange Show. They assert that never before has there been so much genuine enthusiasm for the show on the part of growers and distributors. All space in the big industrial section has been disposed of.

Revised plans in the decorative scheme, at first planned as a California garden, have been announced. It will be, rather, a classical Greek garden scene with the beauty of Mediterranean subtropical settings.

Dairy Enlarged

Upland.—Leslie Strawn of this district is enlarging his present dairy plant to four times its former capacity and it will, it is said, be the most modern milk producing and distributing establishment in this part of San Bernardino county when completed. Six years ago Mr. Strawn quit the printing business and bought two cows. He now has twenty-four cows and is adding a refrigerating plant and modern bottling machinery to his plant.

Grain Rates in Canada and the United States

Much has been said about freight rates on grain being lower in Canada than in the United States. Upon this ground it has been contended that grain rates in this country should be reduced.

The Interstate Commerce Commission, on December 5, 1928, made a report to the United States Senate upon this subject. It found that the grain rates charged in Canada would not be compensatory to the railways of this country. "The Canadian grain rates are made under conditions that do not obtain in the United States," said the Interstate Commerce Commission in this report.

The principal differences in conditions mentioned by it are, first, that the railways of Canada are largely aided by subsidies from the government, and, secondly, that the taxes paid by them are only about one-sixth as great per mile as those paid by the railways of the United States.

There are two large railway systems in Canada. The commission points out that the Canadian Pacific system, although privately owned and operated, has received large subsidies from the government for making its present grain rates. The Canadian National system is owned by the government, which incurs large deficits in operating it. "During the period of 1921-25," says the Interstate Commerce Commission, "the average deficit of the Canadian National was $2,596 per mile."

The commission in its report clearly points out the way the widely different railway policies of Canada and the United States affect the rates the railways of the two countries can afford to charge. It says:

"In 1926 the taxes of all railroads in the United States, if reduced from their average of $1,591 per mile to the average Canadian basis of $267 per mile, would have been reduced in the grand total of $330,000,000; and under the Canadian policy of subsidy and taxes Class I railroads in the United States, during the period from 1923 to 1927, could have handled free all grain, flour, meal and livestock and had left $403,332,826 more revenue than they actually rceeived."

It added that if the railways of the western territory of the United States had been treated as to subsidies and taxes as the Canadian roads were they could have handled free all grain, flour, meal and livestock and received $139,825,569 more revenue during this period than they actually did.

The commission pointed out in the same report that livestock rates in Canada are higher than in the United States. It is the Canadian government's policy of aiding its railways through subsidies and low taxes that makes it possible for them to charge grain rates lower than those in the United States.

It is, therefore, plainly unfair to propose adoption in this country of the Canadian government's policy regarding grain rates unless it is proposed also to adopt its policy regarding railway subsidies and taxes.

They've Seen a Lot of Farming Changes

By Elizabeth Boswell

Over the hills from Hollywood through the Cahuengs Pass lies the beautiful and fertile San Fernando Valley, now rapidly taking on an urban aspect. More than fifty years ago H. C. Hubbard and F. M. Wright, his partner in a saw mill business in Santa Cruz, heard rumors of the valley, which was only a few miles from Los Angeles, a thriving town. The soil was fertile, the climate ideal, and through it ran a frostless belt, they were told. Already citrus groves were being planted. A wonderful future if only some way could be thought out to supply it with water! The ground was level as a table. In the spring time the wild barley was waist high. Here was the finest grazing land in the south. The stage coach stopped there on the way to Los Angeles, and hundreds of people were talking of going there to make their home. Yes, land was rather high, some of the choicest pieces available outside of two or three huge holdings selling for as much as forty and fifty dollars an acre in large tracts.

A desire to see this new country was born in the minds of the two men, so they sold their saw mill and hit the trail for the southland. They would buy some land and try dry land farming.

The valley was all that it had been pictured and then some, they agreed. They thought enough of it to invest their savings in a section and a half of land at forty dollars an acre. In addition, they leased 2500 acres and went in for dry land farming on a considerable scale.

There were lean years and fat ones for these two intrepid farmers. Together they planted and harvested thirty-six crops. They owned at one time more than a hundred horses and large herds of cattle and sheep. During the years when there was not sufficient rain to bring up the grass, the stock was driven many miles to be pastured.

In the late 80's there were three dry years in succession which almost ruined the firm of Hubbard and Wright. But they had put their hands to the plow and there was no turning back. It took courage and faith to borrow money for another crop, not knowing if there would be rain. They borrowed, however, and took a chance. Never in the history of California had such rains fallen as fell that spring. The crop that year paid off a $40,000 loss from the three previous years, and netted a tidy sum for the next year.

To farm on such a large scale it was necessary to have a small fortune tied up in farming implements, Hubbard and Wright took good care of their machinery and stock, worked hard and won for themselves the distinction of being the most successful ranchers in the valley.

Then came the aqueduct with its life-giving water. By that time Hubbard and Wright were ready to retire and give place to younger men who understood irrigation methods better than they. Prices of land had advanced so that it was no longer necessary for them to work as they had done.

The two pioneer ranchers are now living in San Fernando. They see each other often and talk of their farming experiences as they peacefully smoke their pipes. Although the old days were happy ones the two are keenly interested in the modern progress of the valley.

It is interesting to note that during their partnership of forty years Mr. Hubbard and Mr. Wright never kept a set of books between them. What belonged to one belonged to the other. Not once was there ever a shadow of distrust between them. Each was willing to become impoverished if necessary, for the sake of the other. The love of the soil bound them closer than ties of blood. No need for farm relief in those days. Wheat dropped one year to 35 cents, but they managed an even break at that.

Unwilling to get away from the soil entirely, Mr. Wright bought a lemon grove when he retired from dry land farming. This is more profitable and far less grievous than growing wheat and barley when compelled to depend on an uncertain rainfall to bring it up, he thinks.

Only Fittest Grape Vines Will Survive

HANFORD.—Field crops are now replacing vineyards to a large extent throughout Kings county. One of the largest acreages of grapes to be pulled out this year is at the huge Lucerne vineyard, north of this city. Here 110 acres are scheduled for removal "root and branch." The vines will be pulled by a machine made expressly for that purpose. It is equipped with powerful cutters running at least twelve inches under the surface, and which cut off the vine roots at a depth below that reached by plowing. The machine is drawn by a tractor.

Cotton and other field crops will be planted in the spaces vacated by the vines which are to be taken out in several different parts of the big vineyard, the policy of the growers being to remove them where production is lowest. As prices are low and markets are hard to find profit is possible only from vines giving a maximum production.

A large acreage of grapes is also being removed in the Delano district where the necessity of pumping for irrigation makes their production too costly.

Old times in the San Fernando Valley are recalled by these photographs taken in the days when the present suburban area was a vast realm of grain fields.

Diversification Is Profitable at Chino

CHINO.—This community is not large in population, but the truckloads of farm products that roll out of here daily bound for the markets indicate a flatteringly large production. Trucks carry away Chino produce by the ton, by the box, by the crate, by the lug, by the sack, by the pound and by the gallon.

The value of the products of the soil grown at Chino last season amounted to $5,883,825, according to the estimate of crop returns made by Calvin C. Delphey, deputy county horticultural inspector for the district, and it was but a normal year in spite of the fact that nearly two inches of rain fell in the middle of May, when the grain was standing in the fields in shocks.

Acreage on potatoes increased from 1248 acres in 1927 to 2100 acres in 1928. Peaches went through delayed foliation again and walnuts were cut down somewhat from the same cause.

The estimated values of Chino's various crops as given by Inspector Delphey are as follows: Walnuts, $374,000; peaches, $131,200; apples, $29,217; pluma, $2408; pears, $5700; persimmons, $1800; citrus, $238,740; figs, $425; berries, $25,000; grapes, $26,820; alfalfa, $800,000; grain hay, $225,000; grain, threshed—$90,000; apricots, $12,240; potatoes, early, $220,500; potatoes, late, $19,750; sweet potatoes, $45,000; sweet corn, $190,125; ensilage corn, $50,400; sugar beets, $30,000; tomatoes, $63,000; pumpkins, squash—$4000; nursery stock, $47,500; vegetables, $90,000; beans, $66,000; dairy products, $3,066,000. Thirty thousand gallons of milk go from Chino dairies to the metropolitan district daily.

Owens Valley Haven for Winter Feeders

By Robert R. Benson

When the first autumnal snows sweep in warning along the east flank of the Sierras, Owens Valley becomes a haven of refuge for scattered herds and flocks ranging southward from Mono Basin. Hovering palls of drifting trail dust, slowly descending across the lower sage-clad slopes, proclaim the seasonal advent into winter quarters. Or, through the bright starry nights of this open highland, red flickering lights far up on the mountain side tell of some sheep-herder's lonely vigil. Night after night, if you should watch, you may trace by his campfire this slow recessional of the flock from lush Sierran meadows within the forest down to the irrigated fields and native grasslands of Inyo.

As a winter feeding ground, Owens Valley is of more than passing importance. Here during the summer crops of alfalfa, ensilage corn, and the strong native hay are grown for storage against the long winters. Exemplifying the situation are the operations of Cain Irrigation Company in the management of its lands and herds. This company has for summer range some 5000 acres in Mono Basin—irrigated meadow under water rights on Rush, Parker, Leevining and Mill creeks; and desert range —the whole known as Cain Ranch. The watered meadow land is reserved for pasturing the company's own cattle, while the desert range returns some income through rental fees for transient flocks of sheep. Supplementing this open range are the irrigated holdings of the Hillside Water Company, Bishop, where the winter feed is grown. Chief of these more developed ranches is the Abelour, into the corrals of which the Mono range stock is driven each fall to be fattened for market.

At the present time there are feeding at Abelour some 1200 head of white-faced steers, mostly three-year-olds shipped in the spring from Arizona ranges, grazed during the summer in Mono Basin, and now being finished on alfalfa, ensilage, and cotton-seed oilcake meal.

Since Owens Valley is itself a wintry region, sheep men generally prefer to move their flocks to the warmer valley of San Joaquin for lambing and shearing. Some flocks, however, are carried over in Inyo and do very well on rations of native hay and on the naturally cured grasses of irrigated meadows.

The valley formerly was favorably known among horse traders for the quality of its draft stock. Today orse herds are but ordinary and do not attract outside interest. As a matter of general fact, Inyo has ceased to be a stock breeding center. The Cain Company has a few Herefords of its own improvement which are promising, but the common practice is to import feeders from desert ranges in neighboring States in an annual turnover. In this scheme, Owens Valley will ever remain a favored winter feeding ground due to its proximity to the summer range, its wealth of winter feed and its accessibility to railroad and markets.

These sheep think they're stealing hay, but the Owens Valley rancher who owns them put it there on purpose.

Frost Releases Pea Pickers for Cotton

CALIPATRIA.—About 1300 bales of cotton had been ginned up to December 1 of last year by the local gin. Last March, W. B. Coberly and the W. J. Hartman Company merged their gin and oil mill interests with the Pacific Cotton Seed Products Company, the new organization being known as the Imperial Mill and Ginning Company. It handles practically all the cotton grown in this district. The main office of the company was moved from Brawley to Calipatria in November.

This organization now operates gins at Holtville, Imperial and Coachella as well as at Calipatria, where it has a cottonseed oil mill. About 1000 tons of cottonseed had been treated up to December 1, six carloads of oil had been shipped to Los Angeles, and around 700 tons of oil cake had been marketed, a good deal of it going to local men for fattening feeder lambs and beef cattle and for dairy cow feed.

There was a shortage of pickers early in the season and the cotton came in slowly but an early frost in November stopped the growth of the bolls on the late-planted cotton and made picking of matured bolls easier. The freeze which damaged the late fall pea crop released many Mexicans from the pea fields to the cotton picking.

One-Way Traffic Is Regular Citrus Law

RIVERSIDE.—How does the juice get into an orange? Most people are interested in how to get it out, but few have studied the way it entered, and that is important because, without its ability to draw in water and keep it there, it wouldn't be much of a fruit.

Examination of an orange reveals the fact that its segments are made up of a number of thin-walled sacs, each attached by a slender hollow stalk to the inner wall of the peel, said Dr. Howard S. Reed of the Riverside Experiment Station, before a gathering of the Botanical Society in New York City. When the sacs are crushed the juices do not flow back up these tubes but squirt forth, usually on the vest or into the eye of the crusher.

A remarkably complex structure exists in the orange, the pectin bundles providing a channel for liquids coming through the skin with its network of capillaries, down through the sac stalks, and with the liquids go sugars, acids and other soluble substances. An orange soaked in water appreciably increases in volume in eight hours, but it takes a long time to dry an orange out, even in dry air. The peel dries, but the orange loses very little juice, for the passages from peel to sacs are made for one-way traffic only. If an orange is peeled carefully, so that the segment walls are not broken, it may be soaked in water without gaining very much juice.

This peculiar structure of citrus probably accounts for the fact that the fruits may hang on the trees upward of two years without much loss of juice or flavor.

Light Checks Laying

The modest codling moth doesn't lay many eggs when bright lights shine, but prefers to deposit her evil brood only when the twilight is dim; according to Prof. W. B. Herms of the University of California college of agriculture. Ae test made in a Sonoma county orchard showed that a block of trees over which six 500-watt electric lights were hung had but about two thirds the infe.ta'ion of dj ining trees unprotected by lighting. Codling moths are not attracted by light, as are most other moths, and the college authorities believe it may be possible to reduce spraying costs sufficient to make orchard lighting pay by offering discouragement to the pest's activities.

More Alfalfa Means More Dairy Plants

VICTORVILLE.—Alfalfa acreage was increased about 700 acres in Victor Valley during 1928, and its total area now is something over 4500 acres. More than 18,000 tons were shipped out during the season, practically all by trucks and going to dairymen and rabbit raisers around Fontana, Ontario, Pomona and Riverside. The alfalfa hay, being cured quickly in the sunshine without fog or dew, was baled without loss of leaves. Being fine of stem, it is in demand by rabbit men and by many dairymen, bringing more than the prevailing market prices at the fields.

Considerable alfalfa was fed in the valley to the dairy herds which are being established here and efforts are being made to build up a local dairy industry which will consume the major part of the hay grown in this section. Estimates indicate that at least 10,000 acres can be readily converted into productive alfalfa fields and that it is possible for the valley to support several thousand dairy cows.

Victorville, Barstow, Hinkley, Helendale, Oro Grande, Apple Valley and Lucerne are now organizing a co-operative creamery association which proposes to handle all of the milk produced in the Mojave River Valley region. . . milk and cream produced now finds a ready sale at a good price, supplying the railway and mining communities in the Mojave desert country and in Nevada and Arizona. Later, any surplus dairy products will be marketed in Los Angeles.

The State veterinarian in making an inspection of herds in this region, found but one-fourth of one per cent reactors to the tuberculin test. It is possible, it is said, to maintain herds in this valley practically free from bovine tuberculosis and contagious abortion.

Two of the largest dairy organizations in Los Angeles county have herds here now, numbering about 600 cows, all told. With a larger number of dairy cows this section hopes eventually to be a considerable factor in furnishing dairy products to the Los Angeles area—possibly in the shape of the best grade of whole milk.

Bigger Production With Lower Prices

Crops got off to a good start early in 1928, according to O. H. Hecke, director of the California Department of Agriculture, with the rainfall about normal and no severe late frosts. As the year advanced conditions in the State improved from a production standpoint, and the harvests generally surpassed the forecasts made in July. Prices in the main, however, were not as high as in 1927, although the increased yield brought up the returns to higher totals.

Director Hecke says that the acreage, production and total valuation of crops in 1928 exceeded those of 1927. Cotton showed the greatest field crop increase in area, with 218,000 acres, as compared to 128,000 acres in 1927. The bearing fruit acreage in the State last year is estimated at 1,724,642 acres, with a production of 4,479,-100 tons. Apples, peaches and pears were record crops last year in California. There were 12,500,000 boxes of apples and 618,000 tons of peaches. Thirty-eight thousand tons more of pears were produced than in 1927.

Raisins, dried, amounted to 255,000 tons, and around 301,000 tons of raisin grapes were shipped fresh. Raisin grapes marketed fresh and wine grapes brought the growers less than half as much money the past season as they did the previous year.

The 1927-28 orange crop was estimated at 23,000,000 boxes, with an average value to the grower of about $4 a box. The preliminary estimate of the 1928-29 crop is 31,-000,000 boxes. The value can be estimated only very roughly at around $102,300,000.

Pig production for 1928 was larger than that of any other year, and the number of sheep, although showing a small increase, was a big slump in walnut production, more than half that of the preceding year. In vegetable productions there was no great change from that of 1927. Final data have not been compiled, but it is believed that the shipments for the past year will run over 100,000 cars with a value of about $75,188,000.

Cattle prices increased in 1928; sheep prices were maintained and wool advanced slightly. Hog prices dropped somewhat from those of the previous year.

Starting Water Conservation in the Citrus Grove

(Illustrating Article by Harold E. Wahlberg)

Here's the cross-block and furrow system of spreading citrus water. It's specially adapted to soils of medium texture and where the grade rushes the water too fast.

The straight furrow system is used in younger plantings and particularly where intercrops are grown. It's the method that gives a minimum exposure of water and, therefore, the least evaporation.

In sandy open soils, subject to leaching, the check-flood system is good. It allows a rapid spread of water with a large head.

This is the way to conduct and distribute water on sandy shallow soils. Note the auxiliary ditch, generally constructed in alternate rows to carry a big head of water to every basin.

Typical canal of Santa Ana Valley irrigation system. It's cement lined to conserve seepage, and the water that's saved soon pays for the cost of the cement.

How much water does a citrus tree use? This is the type of tube and hammer used by the experiment station in taking soil samples. Good for ranch use, too.

Too much water here has brought on gummosis, which disease has completely girdled the tree.

A cover crop in a citrus grove calls for a lot of moisture, but if it's planted in the winter, the rains cut the cost of irrigation.

Owens Valley Haven for Winter Feeders

By Robert R. Benson

When the first autumnal moves sweep in swirling along the east flank of the Sierras, Owens Valley becomes a haven of refuge for scattered herds and flocks trailing southward from the cold and storm of the high mountain ranges and plateaus. Here they find shelter and feed in abundance, and here they remain until the first breath of spring sends them back to the hills and ranges.

Bigger Production With Lower Prices

Crops got off to a good start early in 1924, according to O. R. Hecke, director of the California Department of Agriculture, with the rainfall about normal and no severe late frosts. As the year advanced conditions in the State improved from a standpoint of production, and the yield per acre of most crops was above the average. Prices received by farmers for their products were also higher than in 1923, but the increase in the cost of things they had to buy was greater, so that the purchasing power of the farmer's dollar was less than in 1923.

Cattle prices increased in 1924; sheep prices were maintained and wool advanced 10 cents a pound. Hog prices declined about 25 per cent, and the number of hogs marketed was about 15 per cent less than in 1923. Fruit prices were generally satisfactory, while those for vegetables were unsatisfactory. Production costs were a big slump in peanut production—less than half that of the preceding year.

In vegetable production costs were no great change from that of 1923. Final data have not been compiled, but it is believed that the shipments for the past year will run over 100,000 cars with a value of about $75,188,000.

Six Speeds Forward and Two Reverse

The NEW

INTERNATIONAL "Six-Speed Special"

ORCHARDISTS and growers have always needed a specially husky small truck. Besides Speed on the hard roads they have to have real power for soft or muddy orchards, groves, roads and fields, and for hills and heavy loads. Frame and springs to stand hard treatment. Gear reductions so they could use the engine power down to the last ounce when caught heavy-loaded in hard going.

We didn't have such a truck—nobody else did. But the International Harvester engineers, knowing the fruit grower's problems, began work on such a truck two years ago. Now we are ready with the "Six-Speed Special"—the only heavy-duty speed truck with 6 speeds forward and 2 reverse. It has heavy-duty members throughout, four-wheel brakes for safety, and it is sold at a price that is bound to please you.

The big feature of the "Six-Speed Special" is the 2-speed rear axle—see the detail drawing at the right. Then bear in mind that every part of the new truck measures up to this tremendous power range. The reliable engine is a fuel saver, quick in pick-up, a perfected speed truck engine in every detail. The 6-inch-deep frame and the long rear springs, all the chassis members in fact, are built to give you real truck service for years.

INTERNATIONAL

Don't fail to see and drive the new International "Six-Speed Special." On display by our branches and truck dealers everywhere. Write us for the "Six-Speed Special" folder. Other International models include the ½-ton Special Delivery; 4 and 6-cylinder Speed Trucks, 1½, 1½, and 2-ton, and Heavy-Duty Trucks from 2½ to 5-ton.

(1) The successful citrus or avocado grower who desires additional acreage for his children, or who wants to leave them one of the world's best legacies;

(2) The nurseryman who may be looking for a new location with greater possibilities;

(3) Those who are horticulturally inclined and have the means to buy and develop a few acres of citrus or avocado trees;

(4) Anyone who desires a country home with ideal climatic conditions and an unrivaled environment;

(5) The professional man or woman who may want to retire in a few years' time with an annual income thereafter;

(6) The salaried man who aspires to rise above the level of wages (There are thousands in the $5,000 and more per annum class in the Southwest who now should be making provision for future income);

(7) Anyone desiring a safe and profitable investment in proved income land which is destined to materially increase in value.

Send for free illustrated, descriptive literature which gives detailed information regarding Vista and its exceptional opportunities. No obligation.

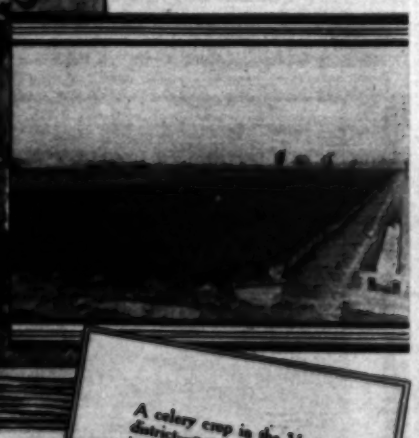
Here's a glimpse of a vineyard near Owensmouth that produced almost twenty tons of Alicante Bouchet to the acre. Both clusters and berries were unusually large for this juicy variety.



The grape deal didn't pan out very well last season, but it wasn't the fault of the grapes—California grapes have the quality. Little Annie Elizabeth Mendenhall is pictured here with two bunches that won prizes at Escondido's Grape Day celebration.

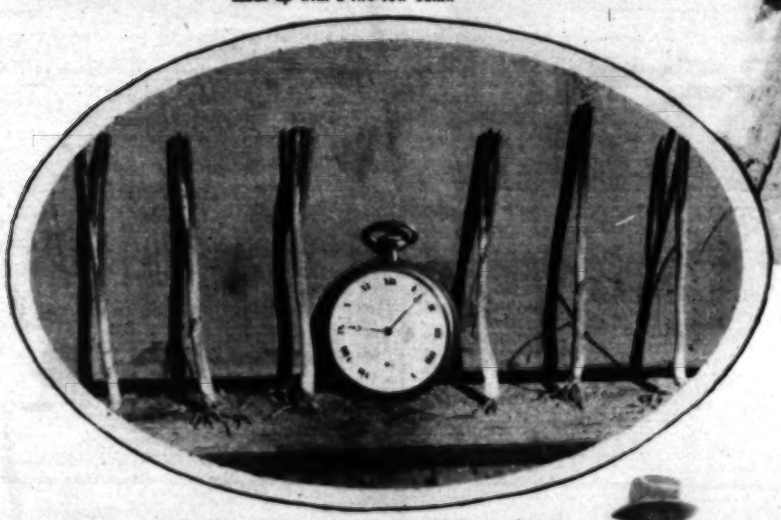
How the Famous Coachella Valley Onion Gets Its Start

(Illustrating Article by Ross H. Gast)

Down in Coachella Valley onion growers have found that it pays to do a good job of soil preparation. Here the planting beds are being made up with a two-row outfit.

After the beds are furrowed out they are leveled and furrowed with this unique implement, which also marks the beds for planting.

Plants are set with one hand and the roots pushed into the well-prepared soil to a depth of about two inches. The rows are well marked to facilitate planting.



Typical onion plants for Coachella Valley conditions.

Immediately after planting the rows are irrigated. The water forms the plants in the soil, and an effort is always made to secure penetration across the entire bed.

Weeding is a tedious and costly job, for generally the fields are gone over three times before harvest. Mexican labor is essential.

"BURIED"

or set shallow —it turns short

THE CASE ORCHARD DISK HARROW is a specialist—built to fit California soil and crop conditions. Designed by a practical California agricultural engineer, it is earning wide acceptance among Pacific Coast fruit growers, ranchers and vineyardists because of the outstanding work it does.

Bury its husky, 20-inch disks to the axle—they'll stand the gaff and cultivate thoroughly. Or set them light for perfect surface working. Disks are easily spaced at 7 or 9 inches apart. Specially heat-treated, they stay sharp.

This disk harrow turns short—left or right—with no binding whatever. It swings around close to the trees without injury to trunk or roots because rear gangs trail perfectly. Goes over ridges—across ditches—always under control. Amazing flexibility!

See the Orchard Disk perform. Ask your Case dealer to demonstrate or write nearest Case branch for information.
